MAYOR TURNS DOWN SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Did Not Send to City Council Any Supplementary Budget for That Department

City Council Has Adjourned For Three Weeks

The first regular meeting of the City Council since July 6, was held Monday evening. There was but little new business and an adjournment was reached a few minutes after 8 o'clock.

SCHOOL FUNDS.

As it was known that the School Committee had sent a communication to the Mayor asking for an additional appropriation of $2,000 for instruction it was thought that the Mayor might call the attention of the Council to the request in a communication. None was forthcoming however, which leads to the opinion that the Mayor will treat this request in the same manner as he treated the request of the City Hospital trustees for $1,000. That is, ignore it entirely.

Anticipating this the School Committee however sent a duplicate communication to the Council which was referred to the Finance committee.

BIGELOW PARK SCHOOL LOT.

The School Committee also sent a communication recommending what is known as the "Swithin lot" in Bigelow Park for a site for a new school building, which the committee stated could be purchased for nine and one-half cents a foot. Referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

WEDDING AT ELECTA HALL

Largely Attended by Jewish Residents of City

Miss Ida Goodheart, a Chicago, Ill., girl who has made her home in this city for half a year, and William Asnes of Cyril street, were married Monday evening in Electa hall in the presence of a majority of the Jewish residents of the city.

Rabbi Julius Sandolovitz of Quincy officiated at the ceremony which was performed under a canopy of deep red.

The bride was given away by her mother, Mrs. Berna Goodhart, and her sister Bertha was bridesmaid. Morris Asnes, a brother of the groom, was best man.

The bride was dressed in white silk, trimmed with pearls and chantilly lace. She wore a veil and carried a large shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Her attendant wore blue silk.

At the conclusion of the ceremony all crowded around the happy couple and gave them a fine reception, after which the bridal party headed the grand march to Protection hall where a feast was served.

Dancing brought the festivities to a close at 2 A. M.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Asnes, after a wedding trip, will make their home on Main street. Both are popular residents of the Quincy Point section.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF 1914 TAX RATE

Will Be Made by Quincy Board of Assessors Tomorrow

Reduction From the 1913 Rate Is Expected

There was some disappointment expressed about City Square this morning because the tax rate was not announced, as was anticipated. The tax rate for 1914 has been held up until after final action by the City Council on the supplementary budgets, and as this was taken at Monday night's meeting it was expected that the rate would be given to the public today.

Monday night, after the Council meeting, Chairman Buckley of the Assessors said that he was in somewhat of a quandary as to what to do. The School Committee he said had asked for more money, and if it was the intention of the Council to heed the request he did not know but what it would be necessary to hold the rate back for some days longer. However when he learned that the Mayor had not sent the School Committees request to the Council he said that he would have to consult with the Mayor.

Mayor Miller did not come up from his camp this morning, and shortly after 10.30 Chairman Buckley started for Hingham in an automobile to have a conference with the Mayor on the matter. Before he left however he said that the rate probably would not be announced until Wednesday, unless he should get immediate word from the Mayor to let it out.

Chairman Buckley had not returned from Hingham at 1 o'clock, and as a result the taxpayers will have to curb their suspense for another day at least. Perhaps after it is announced they will not be so imatient to hear it.

FUNERAL OF J. J. DEADY.

The funeral of John J. Deady, whose death followed a short illness, was held from his home on Cranch street this morning. A high mass of requiem was sung at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan. The musical portion was rendered by the regular choir, with Miss Eva Rice soloist, under the direction of John Mahon, organist.

The bearers, all members of Div. 5, A. O. H. of which the deceased was one of the four charter members, were John Donahue, Daniel Falvey, John McCarthy, Dennis McGee, Edward Powers and John Murphy. There was a profusion of floral remembrances from societies, relatives and friends. Burial was in St. Marys cemetery.

THE THING TO DO.

Many Quincy people endorse the sentiment of the Boston Monitor that "the thing is to get the shipyards all working to their top-notch capacity. Not on the construction of battleships, but the building of merchant steamships for the coastwise and ocean trade. They are sure to be needed even if the European war should come to an end this month.

The officials of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation have often said that they would rather be busy on merchant ships than warships. Warships give steady employment, but generally the profit is small. Let us have some more ships like the Atlantic and the Pacific, the Everett and the Melrose, the Creole and other steamships that have been built in Quincy. Then business will improve all over the country.

THE HARVESTS.

The magnificent promises of the early part of the season have not quite been redeemed. But they never are. Always there is some enemy in the form of pest or weather that destroys the fruition that seems mathematically certain. Wheat beats all records. But corn got another hard blow in July, and recovered only a fraction of its standing since August came in.

It appears likely that the crops, in bushels, will show as big a total as was ever harvested and probably larger. But in view of the enormous improvements being made in scientific methods, this result is not wholly satisfactory. It would seem as if there should be a very large increase.

Probably the country is still paying the penalty of its spendthrift policy. It is but a few years ago that the soil in many localities was regarded as a mine, from which you could take out exhaustless wealth, and never put anything back. River flow and possibly rains have been made irregular by forest cutting. The extinction of valuable species of birds has permitted noxious insects to grow. Our people have gained enormously in knowledge of farm methods, but this has done little more than offset our errors.

FIGHTING FOR FATHERLAND.

Many scenes of enthusiasm are being witnessed at railroad stations and steamship docks in this country, when reservists leave their homes here to fight for the old country. Not being under compulsion this step is one they should reflect upon carefully. These aliens are commonly boys, in mind if not in age, and they may well ask advice of their wisest leaders.

When Greece declared war against Turkey, every other bootblack stand and fruit store in the large cities was stripped of its workers. Most of these young patriots had fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters at home. A winning fight against cruel Turkey meant better conditions of living for the old folks at home. Many of these Greeks had obtained a substantial foothold here, with little established businesses. These they generously gave up, in most cases never to take them up again. It was a noble illustration of patriotic devotion.

Now the [illegible] goes back not to fight [illegible] to bring better conditions [illegible] to his friends. This [illegible] of the kings, and the capitals [illegible] the diplomatists. The princes and [illegible]entialities and powers have fallen [illegible] among themselves and are bidding [illegible] common people fight for them.

The Poles have [illegible] an interest in this war [illegible] of our alien elements. It is [illegible] few of them are going back [illegible] that come from Austria [illegible] win. Those that live in Russia and Germany and Austria to [illegible] Government to them is not a friendly force, but a power that dominates and crushes. They have their little homes and jobs here, and live in peace and quiet far from the spies and prohibitions and exile of Europe. If they keep beer out of their christenings, they are secure from the harassings of the police. Never again for them!

Employers of labor and others, to whom these children of the shadow look for light and guidance, may well caution them against hasty return.

PAU CHECKS GERMAN RUSH UPON PARIS

Victory of Aged Warrior Turns the Tide of Battle

SIGNALLY DEFEATS FORCE OF 50,000

Hope For Allies Held Out by Report From Antwerp Which Is Not Yet Confirmed at Paris, but Seems to Be Confirmed In Dispatches From Dieppe—Bomb Drops In Paris, but Fails to Explode—France May Move Capital From Paris to Bordeaux—All Is Doubt and Suspense In North of France, Where Fighting Is On

London, Sept. 1.—If unofficial dispatches can be relied upon, the seemingly impossible has happened and the German rush against Paris has been checked at Peronne. To General Pau, the one-armed veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, the victory that has turned the tide of battle is ascribed.

Thought too old for a command, he has already once refuted the critics of his 70 years by recapturing Mulhausen in the early days of the war after the Germans had driven out of the Alsatian city the French conquerers.

When the unfortunate offensive movement on Alsace and Lorraine was withdrawn owing to the German menace against Paris, Pau and his victorious troops were recalled hastily and it has been reported that they were being hurried to the northeast of France, where the Germans were meeting with the least resistance.

Defeats Force of 50,000

Now a dispatch from Antwerp announces that an even more brilliant victory has been gained by Pau at Peronne, where he signally defeated a force of 50,000 Germans.

Peronne is about eighty miles north of Paris and a few miles west of of St. Quentin, where the British were defeated so disastrously by the army of the Meuse.

Were it not for the hope held out by this message which, it must be remembered, is not confirmed by any dispatch from Paris, the situation of the allies could be regarded as only slightly less hopeless than on Sunday.

Some confirmation of the victory was, however, seen in an earlier dispatch from Dieppe which, while wholly vague about locations, announced that Pau's troops had wiped out an entire army corps. In the detailed statement sent out by the French war office no mention of a triumph at Peronne was made, although the fighting was said to extend to that town.

Situation Menacing

The official statement admitted that the situation north of Paris was menacing and carried the significant information that the pick of the German army was being massed in this movement.

In the Vosges and the region opposite Lorraine, the French, after a severe check, have been able to reorganize and continue their battling to get across the German frontier.

On the exposed line between Rethel and the Meuse, the French seem to be retreating slowly preparatory to a stand behind the Rheims line of forts.

Another unwelcome German aeronaut sped high over Paris Monday afternoon and dropped a bomb which failed to explode. The French capital, despite the ardent preparations for defense everywhere visible, remains calmer than might be expected.

May Transfer Capital

Rumors are rife that the capital may be transferred to Burdeaux, not far from the west coast of France. This, however, has been discussed ever since the German movement seemed destined finally to beat its way to the Paris forts. It is not without precedent, for Bordeaux was made the French capital in 1870 when Paris was besieged.

Arrangements are being made to transport from Paris all residents and visitors who can possibly be sheltered elsewhere and whose presence in a besieged city would prove burdensome to the defenders. Troops have been pouring in for many hours and have taken their places in the forts about the city. The allied armies now in the field, if they are driven back to Paris, will not form part of the garrisons but will be kept in the field, held in readiness to strike swiftly and savagely wherever the German lines appear weakest.

Populace In Flight

The northeast section of France is almost as deserted by the populace as the east Prussia and Belgium. They began to flee westward as soon as the allied lines on the Belgian frontier first showed signs of wavering. Normandy and Brittany, on the north and western coasts of France, are sheltering thousands of these refugees.

The extended statement of the French war office did much to allay alarm in London as well as in Paris. It was practically a review of the campaign from the first day when the great battle lines clashed and was frank in its admissions of reverses.

Stories of victories, too, were in the dispatch, and it now seems apparent, especially if Pau has won a great victory at Peronne, that the allies are no longer in danger of being separated and surrounded before they can fight their way back to Rheims.

Offensive Is Resumed

Along the Mortagne, which runs southward from Luneville, the defeat that had previously been reported has been turned into a temporary triumph. The French, driven back into Nancy and into the broken country of the Vosges mountains, were not pursued so closely as have been the allies of the north. Consequently they were able to reform their shattered lines, and they resumed the offensive, which has not yet been abandoned, although the Germans hold such strongly fortified positions that it is not believed that the French have yet been able to cross the frontier into Lorraine.

In front of the two great lines of French forts—from Verdun to Toul and from Epinal to Belfort—the German attack has almost completely ceased, the invaders contenting themselves with just enough activity to keep the forts well garrisoned.

Escape German Trap

From Rethel to Mezieres, where the army of the Moselle, led by the German crown prince, and the armies that advanced through Luxemburg and down the valley of the Meuse in Belgium are massed in tremendous strength, the French are giving way slowly. It is believed they have escaped the trap the Germans had placed for them and that they are perhaps already behind the Rheims-Laon-La Fere forts.

In the north, all is doubt and suspense, awaiting some confirmation of the fight at Peronne. It is thought that Amiens, somewhat west of Peronne, has probably been occupied by the Germans, as it is unfortified and undefended. It contains the finest cathedral in France.

NOW READY FOR PEACE

Von Bernstorff Declares That Germans Have Won the War

Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador to the United States, after surveying the European situation as revealed in the day's news and in dispatches from Berlin by way of Sayville, L. I., gave an interview at New York which shows that he believes the crisis for Germany is past.

The aims of the German general staff are attained. France is defeated and the battleground in western Europe is in such a condition that Germany can now recall great numbers of troops to meet the Russian invasion, according to von Bernstorff's belief.

So sanguine is the ambassador of his country's success that he telegraphed to Secretary of State Bryan, saying that in the event of the Germans invading Paris he would communicate [illegible] government and use every endeavor to secure the safe departure of the Americans from Paris through the German lines.

ISSUE OF VERACITY

Asquith Threatens to Suppress Hysterical London Newspapers

[illegible] direct [illegible] certain of the London newspapers which have been publishing hysterical accounts of the reverses to the allies on the continent may be suppressed was made in the house of commons by Premier Asquith.

The censor on the continent has passed a number of stories, chief of them one to the London Times, which declared that only bits of the British regiments were left after the sustained fighting of last week, which carried the British in a retreat of more than fifty miles.

This story of losses was directly contradicted by War Secretary Kitchener, who places the losses at 6000 men and described the retreat as orderly and well conducted. The issue of veracity thus raised has embarrassed the government.

The London newspapers have been chafing under the extreme censorship and doing their best to evade it. Asquith's announcement means that the government intends not only to maintain it, but to act in a drastic manner against papers opposing it.

TRAVELS DE LUXE

Kaiser Journeys to the Front In Most Sumptuous Style

The "war train" which took Kaiser Wilhelm to the front is the last word in luxury, Englishmen who fled from Germany and returned to London declare. Arrangements had been made to keep the railway lines open for this train, which was preceded and followed by armored specials.

The special train, it is declared, was constructed about two years ago. It is fitted with a dining saloon, council saloon and sleeping quarters. Attached are cars for the kaiser's horses and motor car. A small tent is carried which the kaiser may use if he wishes to join his soldiers on the field, but the train is always kept handy.

FIVE OBSERVERS NAMED

Three Americans to Accompany Austrian and Two the British Army

Three American army officers to go to Austria-Hungary as military observers and two officers to go with the British army were designated by the United States war department.

Major Ford, one of the medical corps now in London, Captain McIntyre of the field artillery, who went with the relief cruiser Tennessee, and Captain Enochs of the infantry, at present in Germany, will go to Austria. Captain Castle of the infantry and Captain Miller of the Eleventh cavalry, both at present in Paris, have been designated to accompany the British troops.

Germany, Russia and France, so far, have withheld their consent to have American observers accompany their armies.

TWO MEN ELECTROCUTED

Executions Mark End of Long Service by State Electrician

Auburn, N. Y., Sept. 1.—Joseph di Gola of Erie county and George Coyer of Herkimer county were electrocuted in Auburn prison. Di Gola killed a successful rival and Coyer slew his wife afer she had left him because of cruelty.

The electrocutions marked the end of twenty-three years of service as state electrician of E. F. Davis. A statement was issued at the prison that Davis did no officiate because of ill health, but it is added that he will not officiate in the future. His assistant, E. B. Currier, was not on hand, and an unknown had charge of the executions.

It is known there has been friction, the prison officials cutting down the old fee of $250 per execution to $150.

communication relative to the Coddington playground. This playground the communication stated was being used free of charge. That the owner Henry M. Faxon had informed the committee it could no longer be used as such. However if the city would fence in part of the property and pay the owner each year for its use, the sum which it was taxed, it could be used, otherwise the owner planned to develop the property. Referred to Committee on Public Buildings.

BOARD OF SURVEY.

The Mayor forwarded a communication calling attention to the act passed by the last Legislature establishing a Board of Survey for the City of Quincy, one provision of which was that the act must be accepted by the City Council before January 1, 1915. Referred to the Committee on Streets.

ELECTION OFFICERS.

Under the head of unfinished business the appointment of election officers was confirmed.

PETITIONS.

A petition was received from the Telephone Co. for attachments on Belmont street. Granted.

A number of applications for minor licenses were received and referred to the Committee on Licenses.

EXTRA APPROPRIATION.

The Finance Committee reported ought to pass on the order for a supplementary budget of $2,100 which included the following items:

By the Assessors:
Extra Clerical	$100
Miscellaneous	200
By the Fire Department:
Horse shoeing and keeping	1,000
Repairs and fixtures	500
Fuel and lighting	200
Miscellaneous	100
Total	$2,100

The order took its second reading and the rules were suspended.

Councilman Craig wanted to know what this "miscellaneous" was for and he asked the question of the City Auditor.

City Auditor Fairbanks replied that he did not know; that the chairman of the board was the party to answer the question.

Chairman Buckley of the Assessors said that he had given the Mayor an itemized account of what he needed the money for, and could not tell off hand. Being pressed however he said that it was for the transfer of deeds, books and supplies, etc.

Councilman Ross asked if any of the amount for extra clerical was to be used to increase salaries for clerks, to which Chairman Buckley replied no. That no salaries had been increased since he had been in office.

Councilman Ross continuing, said that he had been given to understand that some of the departments had been using their miscellaneous account to increase the salaries of their clerks, and he would ask the City Solicitor if this was legal.

City Solicitor Pinkham replied that a department could expend its miscellaneous account for anything it saw fit in that department.

When Councilman Ross further asked if he considered it good business, the City Solicitor replied that was not for him to answer.

In reply to further questions Chairman Buckley said that a number of extra clerks were necessary to make out tax bills, and that the salary of none of his clerks had been increased. Some however had been paid for extra time for working after office hours.

Councilman Ross stated that he desired to give notice that at the next meeting he should offer an order requesting the Mayor to inform the Council what salaries had been increased this year.

Councilman Craig said it [illegible] were [illegible] who were getting [illegible] any [illegible] cent when they worked [illegible] hours, to which Chairman Buckley replied no.

Councilman Craig objected to the use of the miscellaneous account for anything the departments saw fit.

The order was put on its final passage and passed unanimously.

RECESS OF THREE WEEKS.

On motion of Councilman Celotte rule 1 was suspended, and it was voted when the Council adjourn it be until Monday, Sept. 21.

FOREIGN BORN BY CENSUS

More from Germany Than Any Other Country

There were 13,515,886 persons of foreign birth in the United States in April, 1910, according to the report on population issued by Director William J. Harris, of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce.

These 13,515,886 foreigners constituted 14.7 per cent of the total population of the United States in 1910; 13,345,545 of them were whites, the remainder, which was only 170,341, representing chiefly Japanese, and Chinese. The foreign born in the United States in 1900 numbered 10,341,276 and constituted 13.6 per cent of the total population.

The country of birth of the 13,345,545 white foreigners in 1910 was as follows:

England	876,455
Scotland	261,034
Wales	82,479
Ireland	1,352,155
Germany	2,501,181
Norway	403,858
Sweden	665,183
Denmark	181,621
Netherlands	120,053
Belgium	49,397
Luxemburg	3,068
France	117,36[illegible]
Switzerland	124,83[illegible]
Portugal	57,623
Spain	21,977
Italy	1,343,97[illegible]
Russia	1,602,752
Austria	1,174,924
Hungary	495,600
Roumania	65,920
Bulgaria, Servia and Montenegro	21,451
Greece	101,264
Turkey in Europe	32,221
Turkey in Asia	59,702
Canada—French	285,083
Canada—Other and Newfoundland	816,063
Mexico	219,802
Cuba, and other West Indies (except Porto Rico)	23,169
All other countries	56,791

The numbers of foreign-born white males over 21 years of age in the United States in 1910 was 6,646,817. Of these 3,034,117 were naturalized; 570,772 had "first papers"; 2,266,535 were aliens; and there were 775,393 for whom the citizenship was not reported.

The figures on the foreign-born born population of the United States make no distinction as to the length of residence in this country; they include those who have been here 50 years or more, as well as immigrants who arrived during the first three months of 1910, just before the census was taken. The increase in the number of foreign born from year to year does not represent necessarily the number of imigrants who come to the United States. The foreign born are constantly being drawn upon by return migration and by death, and immigration must make up for these losses before there can be any increase in the total number.

☞ Nathaniel C. Fowler Jr., the well-known writer on business topics, has chartered the road to success for young men and women in a series of inspirational essays entitled "Getting a Start or First Aids of Success." Such subjects as "Being on Time," "Courtesy," and "Getting a Position" are discussed in Mr. Fowler's crisp, entertaining style. They embody the wisdom gained in a business experience of nearly forty years. The things that make for success in employment are pointed out and the things that lead to failure are clearly defined. Published first by the McClure Syndicate, they have now been gathered into booklet form by Burdett Business College, of Boston. Any young man or woman who aspires to achieve success in business may obtain a copy by addressing the secretary, Irvin L. Lindabury, Burdett College, Cor. Washington and Boylston streets, Boston.

NEW LAW ON PERMITS

Fire Hazard Law Makes Several Changes

The Daily Ledger published some weeks ago a brief abstract of the new law relative to explosives, known as the Fire Hazard law. Under this law all the powers heretofore held by Mayors, Selectment and City councils or other bodies in the Metropolitan district, relative to issuing licenses to keep, store or sell gasoline or other similar flammable fluid, or gunpowder are now vested in the Fire Hazard Commissioner.

Gov. Walsh however has not named this commissioner up to the present time, although he had temporarly appointed Chief Whitney of the District Police as acting commissioner.

Chief Whitney in turn has appointed Chief Billings of the Fire Department as deputy commissioner for Quincy.

This means that now all permits for the keeping or sale of explosives such as gasoline, naphtha and gunpowder and the like must be issued by Chief Billings.

Under the old law it was necessary for the City Council to give a public hearing on all applications, but now the City Council has no power in regard to the matter in any way.

Several applications for licenses to keep gasoline which had been forwarded to the City Council have been turned over to Chief Billings.

The first prize for the best decorated motor boat was awarded to John Perry of Somerville, and the second prize went to John McClary of Dorchester.

Charles Harpin of Hyde Park had the best decorated boat and Frank Garrod of Somerville the second best

SEPTEMBER MAY BE HOT

Thunder and Lightning Are Also Predicted

According to one prophet, September is to furnish a genuine New England variety of weather. He says that as a rule the weather is to be very hot. The hottest of the season. That there is to be some severe thunder and lightning storms, that will tear things up in good shape. How near this prophet will hit remains to be seen.

If the weather today however can be taken as any guide it will be hot enough. Today, the first day of September, saw a noon temperature of 86 degrees, which with a rather high humidity made it a little uncomfortable. However there is one redeeming feature, and that is there is a fine breeze which serves to temper the humidity.

Building Business

Recently, a large store of very honored name became insolvent and passed into the hands of a new owner—an energetic young man.

Little was left to the business but the good name. There were strong stores all around it.

The first thing this merchant did was to emphasize in his advertising that he kept well-known, popular, ad vertised articles—mentioning those advertised in the local newspapers by the manufacturers.

He did not advertise them at a cut price. He merely let it be known that he carried them and would give good service.

That was a few months ago. . .Already the business has started to revive to an extent that competitors are sitting up and taking notice.

This man makes it a rule to mention every day in his advertising the name of some well-known, branded article that he carries—a name that stands for character in the mind of the public.

DAILY LEDGER SPORTS

All of Local Interest

No news received in this city for months brought more actual joy to the base ball fans than the announcement that the City of Taunton was to give George Barry, catcher of its Colonial league team, and son of Michael Barry of the fire department, a day of his own. Flickerings of opinion heard here and there tends to prove the assertions of many of the older men that young Barry is just as popular here.

South Quincy boys who were his classmates are organizing a party to see the big game which will be played at Taunton on Labor Day afternoon instead of the morning because of a rearranged schedule. They plan to make the trip by auto truck and George Magee is making the bookings. Special sections will be reserved for th Quincy fans.

The occasion will be brightened by the presentation of a handsome diamond ring to Catcher Barry, who has earned the respect and support of the fans through hard work.

YOU need the Ledger EVERY DAY.

AUSTRIANS ARE DRIVEN BACK

Said to Have Suffered Enormous Losses In Galicia

IN RETREAT BEFORE INFANTRY

Abandon Artillery to Russians In Their Precipitate Flight, According to St. Petersburg Report—In Full Retreat With Cossacks In Pursuit—Germans Losing In East Prussia

St. Petersburg, Sept. 1.—Russian troops have smashed through the Austrian left army near Samosce, in northern Galicia, and have routed it with enormous losses. Thousands of prisoners have been taken, together with many cannon, machine guns and munitions, according to an official statement issued by the war office.

The Russian Cossack division is now declared to be in full pursuit of the retreating army and to have succeeded in decimating the rear guard. The defeated Austrians are declared in the official reports to be "panic-stricken" and fresh Russian columns are being sent against them to prevent a junction with the Austrian forces now near Lemberg.

It is stated that the Russian infantry, covered by an artillery bombardment, charged the advancing Austrians and in a hand-to-hand conflict turned the right of the line at the point of the bayonet. The Austrians were driven back so rapidly that it was impossible for them to take their artillery with them and they abandoned it to the oncoming Russian army.

The second Russian offense is now engaged, having re-enforced the first line, which has driven back the German and Austrian columns that are co-operating for the defense of Galicia and eastern Prussia. The Russian war office says the Russian advance is being steadly pushed forward and is "overcoming an unusually stubborn resistance."

The Austrian raid into southeast Russian Poland is said to have failed, and the Austrians, defeated with heavy loss, are now said to be in full retreat. The Russian line in Galicia was stated to be extended through Brzukivitze, Przemyslany and Kaminonka, while the heavy fighting almost directly in front of Lemberg is still in progress.

Austrian re-enforcements are being rushed along the Vistula in order to aid in the defense of Lemberg, which is now hard pressed. The war office declares thousands of prisoners, many guns and large quantities of munitions have been captured.

The Germans have been driven still farther back in east Prussia. Various reports that Koenigsberg has fallen are circulated, but they are believed to refer to the town proper, the suburbs of which were occupied early on Saturday. The citadel is believed still to be held by the Germans in force. It is not thought to be part of the Russian plans of offense to take it by storm, but merely to keep the garrison "bottled up" within it.

That the Russians would prefer isolating Koenigsberg instead of trying to take the citadel by storm is indicated by the strength of the fortifications. The city proper is fortified by an enciente and twelve detached forts, six on the right and six on the left of the Pregel river. Between them and within the city's ramparts are two great forts, Friedrichsburg and Kaserne Kronprinz.

OVERRUN BY RUSSIANS

Refugees Say East Prussia Is Stripped of Its Inhabitants

Berlin continues to claim great victories over the Russians, in one dispatch stating that 30,000 prisoners have been captured, but this optimism of the German capital is not borne out by tales of German refugees who continue to pour into Berlin and Frankfort.

They describe East Prussia as a desolated land, stripped of inhabitants and overrun by the Russian horde. Even in West Prussia the terror is spreading. Cossacks have been seen in the neighborhood of Danzig, trains crowded with refugees are speeding toward the west, and the roads are choked with the frightened populace, in wagons, on horseback and on foot, pressing onward with little rest and almost without food, hardly daring to gaze backward lest they catch sight behind them of the wild riding Cossacks who are sweeping ahead of the Russian infantry.

The Austrian invasion into Russian Poland, which seemed a day or two ago to be threatening the Russian advances into Germany and Austria, appears to be no longer a menace.

A dispatch from Sofia, Bulgaria, where sympathy for the enemies of Servia is strong, reports that the Austrians have been irreparably beaten at Zamosc. The repulse, if the report is true, is even worse than that suffered by the Austrians at the hands of the Servians a fortnight ago.

The news brought by refugees from Danzig that the Cossacks are in the neighborhood of that picturesque and quaint city, the Nuremberg of the north, is given credence in London. No one supposes the Russians would linger long about Koenigsberg or that they would send troops there except to mask it and prevent a sortie.

CLAIM IT GIVES AID TO GERMANY

England and France Object to Our Purchase of Ships

DANGER OF COMPLICATIONS

No Formal Protest Lodged, but Washington Is Told That Buying of Liners of Belligerent Nation Is Contrary to Rules of Neutrality—Tantamount to Financial Assistance

Washington, Sept. 1.—Great Britain has joined with France in objecting to the purchase by the United States of any German liners in connection with the plan to build up an American merchant marine.

The protest has been received by the state department along with a similar protest made by the French government through Ambassador Jusserand, several days ago.

The British government declares in its protest that the purchase of the ships would be contrary to the rules of neutrality, in that it would be giving aid indirectly to Germany by taking useless ships off her hands and giving money in exchange.

At first England hesitated to protest, believing her action might be interpreted as placing obstacles in the way of a resumption of commerce to England. After France had communicated her viewpoint to London, however, the British foreign office decided to urge the American government not to buy neutral vessels, to avoid complications.

No formal protest has been lodged by either France or Great Britain, but the situation has been outlined to the Washington government as of momentous importance to both countries.

France takes the view that the purchase of German liners now tied up in port would be tantamount to giving Germany important financial assistance. England's position is that there is no precedent in international law for the purchase of a large number of ships during a war from a belligerent nation. Sir Cecil Spring-Rice conferred with the state department officials, it is understood, in that connection.

The institution was put in operation for the public without any formal ceremonies because of the recent death of the pope and the absence of Cardinal O'Connell.

The hospital is located on a hill in the Brighton district and commands a fine view of Boston and its suburbs. The hospital is three stories high and fire proof, being built of cement and having a terra cotta roof. It has 200 beds. Forty nurses will assist the physicians.

BLUEJACKET IS REAL INDIAN.

Twirler For the Brooklyn Federals Is Full Blood Shawnee.

Bluejacket, the Indian ball player, now grabbed by the Brooklyn Feds and claimed by the New York Giants because of a previous contract, is a real Indian, unlike Thorpe and some others, who have a large percentage of white blood in their veins.

Bluejacket was born in Oklahoma twenty-four years ago, and his parents were Shawnee Indians, living on the Shawnee national reservation, near the Cherokee reservation.

Bluejacket lived on the reservation until he was big enough to be sent away to school, when he went to the National Cherokee Male seminary, where he studied four years. Then he went back to the reservation and began farming. But he was a natural athlete, made a reputation in several different branches of sport and drifted into baseball.

Two years ago Bluejacket joined the Keokuk (Ia.) team, then pitched for Pekin, then Bloomington, Ill. This year American and National league teams went after him. The Giants claim that they have his signature on a contract, but this is denied by the management of the Tip Tops, who signed him up at just double the salary offered by the Giants. The Federals say that Bloomington sold Bluejacket to the Giants, but that Bluejacket had nothing to do with it and was wise enough to sign no papers until he fell in with the generous Tip Tops.

Bluejacket is a big Indian. He is six feet three inches tall and weighs 212 pounds.

M'GRAW REGARDS KLEM AS THE BEST UMPIRE.

New York Manager Finds Fault With Work of Arbiters.

John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, has recently expressed his opinion concerning the umpires of the National league. He declares the umpiring this year has been the worst in a quarter of a century. McGraw calls William Klem the best umpire in the league, and this praise is praise indeed, for McGraw rarely says anything friendly of an umpire. He has had too many fights with the arbiters to regard them with much favor.

"Klem's work this year has been high class and fair," says McGraw, "and there have been few kicks about it. He knows the rules, and he has the nerve to enforce them and to decide plays as he sees them. Too many umpires are influenced by the attitude of the fans and are prone to give an advantage in close decisions to the home team."

McGraw believes that better results would be obtained if old ball players were used as umpires. They have the advantage of knowing the rules, and they also know by instinct where and when plays are to be made and how they are to be attempted. This enables them to take the best positions from which to see plays and make decisions.

Versatile Jack Miller.

Jack Miller of the Cardinals started in his baseball career as a pitcher, but soon gave up that vocation to become a second baseman. Since then he has been a first baseman and is now a shortstop. Although a jack of all trades, he seems to be a master of all as well.

Franchise May Be Moved.

Because of the disastrous season there is some talk of switching the St. Paul American association franchise to Toledo next season. Some time ago it was stated that the Feds meant to put a club in that town also.

Nap Is Patriotic.

Nap Lajoie has grown so pugnacious since the war began that he almost fought with a waiter who brought him German fried potatoes instead of French fried.

Luderus a Poor Base Runner.

Fred Luderus, first baseman of the Phillies, is easily the worst base running regular in the National league. He has stolen just one base since the season began.

Rewards For Red Pitchers.

Each of the Cincinnati pitchers who defeated the Giants in the last series received a twenty dollar bill from Charlie Herzog.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

The Lighthouse Keeper's Wife

She Was Easily Won, but She Turned Out Well

By F. A. MITCHEL

George Tuttle was a lighthouse keeper on the Atlantic coast. The tower was built on a tongue of land, and a few hundred yards back from it a railroad crossed the little peninsula, with a bridge on either side. George could see from the top of the tower in either direction trains coming and going.

At first the young man—he was twenty-five years old—was much pleased with his position. He was fond of reading and had plenty of time for the purpose. The lighthouse library consisted of a thousand volumes, so that he was not at a loss for books. But gradually loneliness came down upon him, and after awhile he discovered that he could stand his isolation no longer. He must give up his position or have a companion.

One day when the wind was off shore and the surface of the ocean was like a lake a girl in a boat pulled around the point so near that George, who was sitting on the rocks, spoke to her.

"You're a very pretty girl," he said.

She stopped rowing to hear some more of the same kind of talk.

"I hope you're not offended," George continued. "I'm the lighthouse keeper. You're the first person I've spoken to in a week or more. It's awful lonesome keeping a lighthouse."

"It must be," said the girl, dipping

"WHAT'S YOUR NAME?"

the oars in the water preparatory to moving on.

"I wish I had a girl like you to come and live with me as my wife. I don't think I should be lonely any more."

She had begun to pull away, but at this let the oars rest idly on the water.

"Where do you belong?" pursued George.

"I'm the daughter of the chief of the life saving station."

"Oh! Do you think your father would give you to me?"

"I don't know. You might ask him."

"I can't leave the lighthouse."

"Not in the daytime?"

"Suppose some official should come when I was absent?"

The girl thought awhile, then said that she wouldn't mind staying there while he went to see her father. She didn't think he would object to her marrying, since he had a large family to feed. Then George said he thought he might as well go now as any time. The girl pulled in to the rocks. George helped her out, got into the boat and pulled away. He found her father quite willing to give her away, and after an absence of a couple of hours George came back with the news.

"An inspector has been here," said the girl.

"An inspector! What did you say to him?"

"I said I was going to marry the lighthouse keeper, and he had gone to see my father about it."

"Oh, you did! What did he say to that?"

"He said it was all right."

Then the two sat down on the rocks to get acquainted.

"You see," said George, "when a feller is cooped up in a lighthouse he has to get a wife the best way he can. What's your name?"

"Madge. What's yours?"

"George. You'll be Mrs. Tuttle."

"Did father ask you for references?"

"No. He said I must be all right or I wouldn't be given the care of a lighthouse."

"Reckon that's so."

"When will you marry me?"

"Most any time."

"Can't you bring the parson and the folks up here for the ceremony?"

"Maybe."

"Tomorrow?"

"Oh, that's too soon."

"Well, let me know when you're coming. Never mind that either. I'll be here. I can't go away."

A few days later when the wind was again off shore George saw a boat coming full of old and young persons. It was pulled up at the foot of the lighthouse, and they all got out, then lifted out a trunk. Madge was among them, dressed in her best. She and George stood on the rocks and a parson made her Mrs. Tuttle. Then a hamper was taken from the boat containing a bridal feast, and the party refreshed themselves.

* * * * * * * *

"What's that?"

The lighthouse keeper and his wife were eating supper. It had been raining for three days, and there was a howling wind.

"A landslide."

The pair listened, but could hear nothing further except the gusts of wind and the waves beating against the tower.

"If that's a landslide it's probably over the railroad at the cut beyond the inlet. I've often wondered that it did not give way even in dry weather."

"The train," said Madge, "that comes down about 9 o'clock will strike it. If it's this side the cut the engineer won't see it."

"That would wreck a trainload of people."

George dare not leave the lighthouse, and Madge concluded that she must go to the scene of the trouble and do what might be necessary in the case. She put on her wraps while George lighted a lantern and handed it to her as she went out, picking up a box of matches at the same time and thrusting them into her hand.

Madge made her way to the railroad track, then, turning eastward, soon struck the bridge across the inlet. It was really nothing better than trestlework, though very short, being not more than 100 feet in length. To cross it on a dark night in a howling wind required bravery. Lest the wind should blow her off the bridge she got down on her hands and knees and crawled over to the other end.

George from the tower could see the dim light of the lantern moving slowly and knew by its quicker motion when it had passed the bridge. Then suddenly the light went out. At the same time he saw the stronger light of a locomotive some eight miles away.

Madge had fallen into a cattle guard, and her lantern had gone out with the jar. She was only slightly bruised and climbed out. She was near the hither end of the cut and pushed on until she stood on earth and stones that covered the track. The obstacle was not wide, but quite enough to wreck a train. She ran on a little farther till she could see through the cut. Then she set about to relight her lantern.

Opening the box George had given her, she found within it only three matches. She lighted one, but before she could put it to the wick of the lamp the wind blew it out. She lighted another with the same result. Then she was horror stricken on feeling in the box to find that but one match was left.

A trainload of people dependent on one match! At the same moment Madge heard the whistle of the coming train.

It did not take her long to realize that the lives of these persons depended not on the match, but on her coolness and ingenuity in transmitting its flame to her lantern. Kneeling on a tie, she tore cotton strips from her finest underclothing. Then she covered the lantern with the skirt of her dress, putting the end of the strips to the wick. Then, risking the flame communicating with her dress, she lighted the match and touched it to one of the strips. The strip caught the flame, but the wind, which could not be entirely excluded, blew out the match. Other strips caught, and the lantern was lighted.

George Tuttle, watching the place where his wife should be, saw the flashes of the first two matches that had been lighted. Then suddenly he saw a broader light. The front of his wife's dress had caught fire. Madge grabbed it in her two hands, and it appeared to be quenched. George heaved a sigh of relief, when he saw a light swinging to and fro. Then there was the sound of putting on brakes and the coming headlight stopped a few rods from the lantern.

It required an hour to remove the obstruction on the track, at the end of which time Madge was carried on the train to the point where the track passed near her home. There she was put off and in a few minutes was caught in the arms of her husband. As soon as she was released she handed him a handkerchief which she held by the four corners, full of money collected from the passengers whose lives she had saved.

The next day an officer of the railroad called at the lighthouse to see the woman who had saved many lives and many thousands of dollars for the company. He had a check with him for $10,000 into which he inserted her name. Nor was this all. The railroad company took her husband into its service and promoted him as fast as he learned his duties.

George Tuttle when he hears of long courtships and elaborate preparations for marriage sneers at them. "Do you suppose," he says, "I could have got a better wife by all that fuss? And, as for the divorces, there are more of them in proportion among the rich, who make most ado about their marriages, than any other class."

Mrs. Tuttle doesn't talk about such matters. She thinks any way is a good way if the parties concerned are worthy persons.

BELGIANS HELPED BURN OWN HOMES

Sacrifice Made Bravely to Assist Liege Defenders.

HINDERED FIRE FROM FORTS

One Hundred and Thirty Houses Standing Between Guns and the Enemy Laid Waste, Peasants Themselves Assisting Soldiers—All Set Ablaze In the Night—Pitiful Scenes.

A graphic story of the burning of the village of Boncelles by Belgian soldiers because it would interfere with the fire from the Liege forts, and how even the inhabitants aided in burning their own homes, is told in a letter received in Wales by the brother of a Belgian soldier.

"I shall never forget the sight of it," the Belgian soldier wrote. "One hundred and thirty houses and the church of Boncelles formed one big blaze in the middle of the night, and the poor inhabitants helped the soldiers to destroy their own little homes and all their contents.

"It was 10 o'clock when the peaceful inhabitants of Boncelles were abruptly reminded of the horrible significance of the word 'war.' An engineer officer, surrounded by an army of sappers, knocked at every door and delivered the message that the houses had to be burned to allow the fort to operate its guns without obstruction. While the officers were speaking sappers were already bringing in wood, cotton and petrol.

Pitiful Scenes.

"The inhabitants about the forts were informed that in time of war the necessity might arise for the authorities to destroy their houses, but in this case they had not been warned during the afternoon, and most of them had gone to rest when the knock on their doors came to tell them of their fate. I could not describe all of the scenes I witnessed that night.

"All I remember is women in tears and children praying. Some of them implored the soldiers to let them at least take their furniture away and threw themselves at the officers' feet. But they were gently raised by the arm and led outside in the dark.

"The soldiers rushed in and threw bundles of wood under the staircases, poured petrol over them and lit them. In an instant the house was ablaze. A woman tried to push in to save some souvenir—a photograph, a cradle, anything—but was ordered back by the soldiers.

Helped Burn Own Home.

"A man who had just been led out of a house and who had been watching with a stupid look the progress of the fire, rushed away from his wife and children as if mad. He grasped a mass of saturated cotton and helped the soldiers with their work. The example had been given and in a moment the other peasants followed.

"The fire had to be set to the church where only two hours ago peasants whispered their prayers in solitude. Wood and cotton were heaped up as far as the altar and in the tower as high as possible. A little later all that remained was the square tower, a high burning torch, which soon listed over and came down in a cloud of smoke and flames. One hundred and thirty houses were destroyed in this way and then all trees in the neighborhood were cut."

ENGLAND'S MARCHING SONG.

"It's a Long Way to Tipperary" Favorite Tune of the Army.

"It's a Long Way to Tipperary" has become the marching song of the British army, according to London dispatches. It is not widely known in this country. The words are:

Up to mighty London came an Irishman one day,
As the streets are pav'd with gold, sure every one was gay,
Singing songs of Piccadilly, Strand and Leicester square
Till Paddy got excited; then he shouted to them there:

CHORUS.

It's a long way to Tipperary; it's a long way to go;
It's a long way to Tipperary, to the sweetest girl I know.
Goodby, Piccadilly! Farewell, Leicester square!
It's a long, long way to Tipperary, but my heart's right there.

Paddy wrote a letter to his Irish Molly O,
Saying: "Should you not receive it write and let me know.
If I make mistakes in spelling, Molly dear," said he,
"Remember it's the pen that's bad. Don't lay the blame on me."

Molly wrote a neat reply to Irish Paddy O,
Saying, "Mike Maloney wants to marry me, and so
Leave the Strand and Piccadilly, or you'll be to blame,
For love has fairly drove me silly, hoping you're the same."

Small Force Held Thousands Back.

A refugee from Merbes-le-Chateau, a town thirteen miles from Mons, said on his arrival at Paris that 300 Belgian riflemen posted in his town kept several thousand Germans at bay for three days until a German spy, disguised in a Belgian uniform, showed them a path which enabled the Germans to take the riflemen in their rear. All were killed except twelve villagers.

SURPRISE PARTY AT THE DOWNS

Presentation to Miss Houlihan of Ellerton Road

Miss Dorothy Houlihan of Ellerton road was pleasantly surprised by a number of her young friends on Monday evening, who took advantage of her absence during the early part of the evening and entered.

On her return in behalf of those present Miss Marion Spear stepped forward and in a few well chosen words presented her a ring.

Miss Houlihan was overcome for a few minutes but responded and in a few brief words thanked them all. Recovering from her surprise Miss Houlihan very hospitably entertained her guests with selections on the piano. Vocal solos were given by Marion Spear and Lillian Hodge Various kinds of games and fancy dancing were indulged in during the evening. Refreshments of ice cream, cake and candy were served and the company dispersed at a late hour.

Among those present were the Misses Caroline McKenzie, Marion Spear, Lillian Hodge, Elsie Melhuish, Ruth Johnson, Marion Barry, Dorothy Houlihan, Albert Rendle, Edwin Johnson Joseph Allicon, Stanley Neusen, Ernest Melhuish and William Houlihan.

ELM STREET AS SPEEDWAY

But Abutters Do Not Relish It at Night

Residents of that part of Elm street near the junction of South and Walnut streets and Miller Stile road have complained to the police at the speed and noise made by automobiles using Elm street, especially in the early morning and evening.

Elm street has recently been rebuilt so that it is in exceptionally fine condition today, a fact that is realized by automobilists who are using the street for a speedway. Not only is it dangerous for pedestrians, but the speed made tears up the street so that it will soon be as bad as before.

Then again there is another nuisance of which the residents complain and that is that auto drivers when speeding over the street place their finger on the cut out button, and this racket with the constant noise by the horns and Jericho's make sleep impossible.

Chief Burrell to whom complaint was made will post signs today warning auto drivers not to use their cut out, and an effort will be made to stop the speeding.

GOVERNOR WILL INSPECT

Invited to Visit the Battleship Rivadavia

Walsh thanked the officers for their invitation and stated that he would avail himself of the invitation at the earliest opportunity.

AFRICAN DODGER THERE.

Among the principal attractions at the T-R-Y-C Marine Carnival is the real live African dodger, presided over by the world famed barkers, Messrs Foss, Peterson and Arnold. It is a liberal education to hear them. There will also be great doings in the China shop, when the base balls connect with the crockery. Don't forget to buy your tickets early for the Wednesday night supper.

☞ Have you secured your ticket for the supper of the Town River carnival? They do say the Midway will be something great.

ITALY ON VERGE OF WAR

So Says a Correspondent of Quincy Man

That Italy is on the verge of war is confirmed in a letter received this morning by Placido Calabro, interpreter at the District Court, from his mother-in-law whose home is in Lombardy.

Five armies have been mobilized and are stationed a short distance from the Austrian frontier, and the war office is preparing to issue a call for volunteers to make up a quota sufficient to protect the country against an expected invasion.

Italy, it has been generally believed will side with the allied nations in a defensive war, and although the letter was dated Aug. 11 its contents bear out many of the statements made in the early stages of the European conflict.

Preparation, according to the letter, continue in the face of famine which threatens the province of Lombardy. Able bodied men have taken the field, and left bumper crops unharvested. Credit has been suspended and the small supplies can only be purchased for cash. The poorer people are hungry, and the sick are undergoing ordeals of a most trying nature.

An earnest appeal for prayers for the safeguarding of the peace of the Italian nation brings the letter to a close.

Mr. Calabro is a resident of Hingham, and mail usually arrives in about nine days from Lenato, Bressica, where his mother-in-law makes her home. The 21 days required for the delivery of this letter indicates a grave situation.

QUINCY TO BE ADVERTISED

All New England Invited Here on Labor Day

Some of the enterprising business men of Quincy have formed a pool among themselves, whose object is to set before the world some of the many advantages which the City of Quincy offers, not only as a location for business and manufacturing industries, but particularly as an unsurpassed surburban residential section. As Labor Day is a day upon which many people are looking for homes it is the intention of the gentlemen interested to place before the people of New England their claims, and extend an invitation to people from all over New England to come to Quincy and look us over.

From what has been learned of their plans, it is proposed to place a large advertisement in the Quincy and Boston dailies some day this week in which the word "Quincy" will stand out in big black letters so that it will be the first thing that strikes the eye when the paper is opened.

RITCHIE PLANS TO REGAIN TITLE

Former Lightweight Champion Wants Second Fight.

THINKS WELSH IS AFRAID.

American Declares English Fighter Puts Conditions on Return Bout That Make It Impossible For Him to Accept—He Would Like to Fight Where Aggressiveness Counts.

"When Freddie Welsh put that little joker in his set of conditions insisting that I should make 133 pounds ringside if I wanted a return match he gave the real tip off on his ideas of getting into the ring with me again."

Such was the declaration of Willie Ritchie, former lightweight champion, when the question of another match was put up to him shortly after his return from Europe. Ritchie would ask nothing better than a match with Welsh in America, he declared, adding that a repetition of his work against the Englishman at Olympia would gain him the decision from any referee or set of newspaper men in America. He said there was no truth in the report that he had arranged for a return bout before the other one was fought.

"Over here," said Ritchie, "a boxer who makes the fight get some credit for his aggressiveness, and the man who runs away has to do a lot of damage to offset his lack of aggressiveness. Over there to make the other fellow miss seems to count as much as clean hitting, even if a boxer has to backstep all the time to make his opponent miss. I did all the forcing and Freddie back pedaled. Naturally he was fast enough to make me miss continually, but as they figure fights that way perhaps he had the right idea.

"But there is no question as to how the same tactics would be greeted by an American crowd. I say American crowd not because I would expect any advantage here, but simply because I know what they expect of a boxer. If I ran away from Welsh over here as he did at Olympia they would probably hoot me out of the ring."

When asked his views on Eugene Corri, the noted English referee, Ritchie declared that he would in no way raise any question as to Corri's honesty, but he considered the official as swayed by the crowd.

"When the bout ended," said Ritchie, "I shook Welsh's hand and walked to my corner. Naturally I waited for Corri to raise my hand, for I was satisfied that my work entitled me to the verdict. He came neither to me nor to Welsh. While he hesitated the ring filled with Welshmen, who had come from Cardiff and Pontypridd, all shouting for Welsh and singing the national anthem, which they had been singing since early in the evening. Finally I moved over to where Corri was standing and asked him who won. He nodded toward Welsh.

"As for Welsh insisting on me making 133 pounds and asking for a side bet of $25,000, both are ridiculous. Just wait and see how many bouts he arranges on those terms. It is years since he made 133 pounds, and he took one of those deep sighs when he was weighing in for the bout with me. I made 135 pounds easier than he made it. I will meet any reasonable conditions for a return match, and one condition is that the bout be staged in America. I guess Freddie himself would not object to boxing here, as lightweights do not make much of a card over there. Bombardier Wells and Colin Bell drew $28,000 the week before our bout, and the Smith-Carpentier bout drew a $60,000 crowd."

The bout was a big failure financially. Only $21,000 was taken in at the gate, and Ritchie got about $26,000 for his boxing, picture privileges and expenses. There was an expense of about $12,000 in promoting the match. Welsh worked on the percentage basis with the management and got nothing for his end as far as the bout was concerned. He will have to figure on his theatrical engagements to make up.

Ritchie was offered $3,500 for three weeks' work at a London music hall.

Vol. 29 No. 205 QUINCY, MASS. WEDNESDAY EVENING SEPTEMBER 9 1914 PRICE TWO CENTS

Unprecedented Increase in Quincy's Valuation

Assessors Put Grand Total Over $40,000,000

REDUCTION OF $1.50 IN TAX RATE

Made Possible by an Increase of Over Four Million in Assessed Valuation

No Intimation From Assessors As to How They Did It

Quincy now has an assessed valuation of $40,987,940.00.

This is an increase of $4,271,680.00 over 1913.

The increase on real estate was $3,670,000.00, against an increase of $1,591,500.00 reported last year.

The increase on personal estate, including bank stock, was $601,680.00, against a decrease of $251,955.00 reported last year.

The tax rate for 1914 is $22.20, a decrease from $23.70 in 1913, being the largest rate with this exception of any year since Quincy became a city.

In six years only, however, has the city had a tax rate of $20.00 or over.

The tax levy of 1914 is $928,512.711, the largest in the history of the city, being an increase of $35,579.35 over 1913, when it was $892,933.36.

The largest increase in any item was that for municipal current expenses, which is $51,382.97, against an increase of $9,526.50 in 1913. A normal increase in this item would have resulted in a reduction of the total levy.

The increase in State tax was $5,850.00, which was nearly offset by $4,350.21 less for Metropolitan water.

There were no other large increases but the following are larger: for interest on temporary loans, for city

GAY WHITE WAY AT CARNIVAL

Town River Yacht Club Has a Big Crowd

The annual marine carnival of the Town River Yacht Club had an auspicious opening Tuesday evening and will continue tonight and Thursday. The attendance was large and a good sum was realized from the sale of various articles.

The grounds were arranged so that outdoor attractions lined the pathway to the club house. On the right were the dolls, Teddy Bears and babies, cane racks, African dodger; and on the left the shooting gallery, crockery smash and candy table. In the club house there was dancing, music being furnished by Joyce's orchestra.

A band was just outside the entrance and the colored lights surrounding their platform together with the glow of colored and Japanese lanterns lighted the place until it resembled a miniature "Gay White Way."

The affair was under the direction of a committee headed by Commodore J. R. Mellen, chairman, including members of the club and its auxiliary. The various attractions were in charge of the following persons:

Dancing— George Jacques, Allen McGeachie and Richard Mason.

WEST QUINCY MAN KILLED BY ELECTRIC

Waited for One Car to Pass and Then Stepped in Front of Another

James E. Fallon the Victim Was Well Known

James E. Fallon, a 54 year old West Quincy resident, met a tragic death Tuesday evening when he suddenly stepped in the path of a trolley car on Copeland street, and was instantly killed. The accident occured almost opposite the home of his sister, Mrs. Thomas Cahill and the West Quincy fire house.

The car which struck Fallon was an open one, called the "shop extra," and was filled with girls employed at the Tubular Rivet & Stud Co., at Wollaston. They were seized with panic, several of the girls on the front seat almost fainting and their hysterical cries drowned out the noise accompanying the tightening of the brakes which were being manipulated at lightning speed by Motorman Charles E. Watts.

It was Fallon's custom to cross Copeland street about 5.30 each evening on his way to his home on Miller street. He had waited for the regular car to pass, but the noise of a passing stone team probably deadened the sound of the second.

Fallon was partially blind, having lost the greater part of the sight of both eyes in a powder explosion many years ago. This probably prevented his seeing the second car and he stepped directly in its path.

As the car struck the man the girls aboard became hysterical and by the time the car had been brought to a stop, others who had seen the accident had sent in emergency calls for doctors. Had any been needed none would have responded since it was impossible to reach one at his office.

The car had to be jacked up to get the body out. Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy of St. Mary's church reached the scene soon after the accident to administer the rites of the Catholic church, but Mr. Fallon was dead when taken from under the car.

Patrolman Hinchon, on instruction from headquarters, placed Motorman Watts under arrest on a charge of manslaughter. He was bailed out later by Thomas L. Gammons, superintendent of the Quincy division of the Bay State Street Railway Company.

The deceased was a brother of Miss Nellie Fallon and former representative Peter T. Fallon. Another sister married Thomas Cahill, a foreman in the employ of the city.

He was formerly a member of the granite quarrying firm of John Fallon & Sons, but when they withdrew from the stone business to do contracting and teaming. "Jim" Fallon as he was familiarly known in all parts of the city took charge of the barn part of the business.

Mr. Watts, has been a motorman in Quincy for 15 years and is considered an efficient employee. Before coming to this city he worked for the West End railway, Boston, for about 15 years. Yesterday's accident was the first in his 30 years of railroad work.

In a discussion of fenders at police headquarters just before he was bailed, Mr. Watts said no devise ever perfected could have been operated quickly enough to have prevented the car hitting Mr. Fallon.

GOVERNMENT WASTES.

Congressman Barnhart of Indiana says the government wastes a million dollars annually in its printing bills, including franking abuses, padding of Congressional Record by fake speeches, distribution of public documents that go to the junk shops, etc. But unfortunately for Mr. Barnhart's sensible propositions, the congressmen can't see themselves as the voters see them.

Similarly Congress has always peddled out free seeds, on the theory that the constituent feels pleased at this mark of attention. It is supposed that there are many votes in these beans and peas and cabbages.

It is doubtful if the farmers use these seeds very much. They come in too small quantities to be valuable in a business way. The back yard suburban gardener may make some use of them. But it is no more the business of the government to distribute seeds than to give away shoes or tooth brushes. It is all a tax which the people must pay. The intelligent man, receiving one of these packages, is not flattered as his congressman thinks. Instead he is again reminded of the inefficiency of Congress, and he feels a desire to smash things politically.

Similarly in regard to the Congressional Record. A well edited report of real debate, confined to things actually said, would attract a great deal of interest. Few people read the Congressional Record, because of the interminable length of speeches issued on "leave to print."

If Congress won't listen to these speeches, with all the added interest that comes from the personality of a statesman engaged in public debate, the public are not going to stop to read them.

Thus the Congressional Record, to those who receive it, is a daily reminder of unbusiness-like methods. The Congress that shall have the force to cut out such absurdities will make more friends than it is now able to realize.

MEXICAN DIGNITY.

Travellers say that an impoverished descendant of a former wealthy Mexican family is always glad to earn a meager pittance as a clerk in a dry goods store. His shabby frock coat and silk hat enable him to keep up an air of decadent grandeur, and he need not soil his cuffs: He can still maintain an acquaintance with the senoritas of the upper classes to whom he sells silks.

Never could he do anything so unconventional as to go out in the rough clothes of the farmer, winning a comfortable living from the rich soil.

Dignity is the key-note of upper class life. It has much to do with the break with our people. The high class Mexican is a modern Don Quixote. He revels in high sounding phrases, abstruse conversation, and grandiloquent figures of speech. Business dealings are carried on with many antecedent flourishes and preliminary formalities.

The sharp demand of the American admiral that the United States flag be saluted at a certain day and hour shocked all this elaborate stage play. Very likely they would have been willing to give a salute, could they have had several months to lay out a scenario of forms and ceremonies.

To the Mexican, the "gringos" are rough and coarse boors from the North land. The proceedings at Tampico and Vera Cruz shatter all their fabric of conventionality.

Every other well dressed, educated man you meet on a street in Mexico City is a doctor of science, philosophy, or letters. The alternate ones are largely generals.

All this seems like farce-comedy to the business-like, simple-mannered, rather abrupt American. He has little use for mere time-killing motions. He prefers action to ceremony. In any reconstruction of the Mexican life that the United States may attempt, it must deal tactfully with these national tendencies. They can not be eradicated.

Vicious Fighting Results In French Being Driven Back

GERMANS STRIVE FOR ANOTHER SEDAN DAY

But Allies Will Not Surrender as Did French Troops Under Napoleon III. —Hammering From North Threatens Paris Most Acutely—French Expected to Fall Back Upon Great Lines of Fortified Towns—Armored Aeroplanes to Give Battle to German Aeronauts—American Ambassador Inquires Into Dropping of Bombs—Germans Set Sept. 2 as Day of Entry Into Paris

London, Sept. 2.—On the anniversary of the battle of Sedan, the French have been defeated again by the all-conquering Germans.

Once more the iron ring of the German army has closed more tightly about the steel ring of the forts of Paris.

From the north, where the pick of the invading hosts have been massed, the German hammer has crashed again upon the British and French who are holding this line to an undefended section.

The official statement of the French war office, issued after hours of silence that caused despair and hope to thrill alternately the hearts of Londoners, indicates that again the defense has been unable to hold the attack.

Fierce as have been the days of fighting for the last few days, the batting Tuesday is reported to have been even more vicious.

Sought Sedan Day Victory

The Germans apparently were willing to stake their all to gain a decisive victory upon Sedan day, the holiday that they have celebrated so joyously for over a generation.

It was not, however, another Sedan. The allies, although driven back, and perhaps more swiftly than on any previous day since the Germans swept south of Lille, have not been surrounded. They will not surrender as did the French troops under Napoleon III. at Sedan on Sept. 2, 1870.

No names of places are given in the official message which describes the falling back upon the left. It is not even admitted as a repulse, but opinion in London is that the fighting has been like that of previous days upon this vital section of the defense, an overwhelming attack that has forced a retreat to several miles nearer Paris.

The statement that the allies fell back to avoid fighting where conditions were more favorable for the enemy is thought to have been made so that the French nation would not hear of a repulse on Sedan day. The demoralizing effect of such news might have made doubly hard the tasks of those who are arranging the defense of Paris against the siege that looms nearer every day.

Paris In Great Danger

The danger to Paris continues to threaten most acutely from this seemingly irresistible hammering from the north. No confirmation of General Pau's reported victory of Monday was received in London and it is felt that the check, if a fact, must have been merely a temporary one.

On the centre and right, the French continue to hold their ground against the bitter attacks of the invaders. A vicious assault about Rethel was delivered by the Germans, but it failed to penetrate the defenses of the allies.

Here, however, it is not thought that the defense will be prolonged many days more but that the French will fall back upon their great lines of fortified towns, La Fere, Laon and Rheims, where undoubtedly fresh troops are waiting for the onrush of the Germans.

Neither advances nor retreats were reported from the right, where, the official statement says, the situation remains unchanged.

More Bombs at Paris

Another German aeronaut, this time in a monoplane, whirred over Paris late Tuesday afternoon. He dropped several small bombs which exploded in and about the Place de Bourse, but they did no damage.

These continued raids through the air have now become so frequent that a squadron of armored and armed aeroplanes has been organized to give chase and battle in the air to the next venturous aeronaut who tries to bombard Paris with bombs and proclamations, neither of which have yet proved anything more than a slight spectacle for the crowds in the streets.

Reports were received in London of vicious fighting about Croisilles. This was received with some surprise, as Croisilles is several miles north of Amiens, near which the Germans had been reported in force. It gave some credence to the story that General Pau had shattered a German corps, but no official authorization of the scene of the fighting could be obtained.

It is thought that the British and French, who had been reported to be holding a line that extended southward as far as Ham, may have fallen back to Noyon, on the Oise river, where they would be about sixty miles from Paris.

But despite the unceasing retreat which so often has demoralized fine fighting forces, there is no evidence that the British and French on this line are not fighting as stubbornly now as they have for the past week. Despite the fierceness and the persistency of the German assault there is nothing to indicate that the Germans have succeeded in turning the lines of the allies.

United States Interested

It is being rumored that the United States may protest the dropping of bombs upon Paris. The French capital is of course a fortified city, but the forts are so many miles from the crowded sections where the bombs landed that it cannot be affirmed by the Germans (unless they are willing to admit that they are extremely poor in their aim) that the bombs were directed against the fortifications.

The story of the United States' interest in the bomb throwing arose from the fact that the American ambassador headed a committee of American residents who asked for official proof of the claims made that German aeronauts had dropped bombs upon the capital.

Documentary evidences were submitted which were closely scanned by the members of the committee. It is not thought that the ambassador would have interested himself so actively had he not obtained some authority from Washington for his action.

Desperate Battle Expected

It is predicted in London that today will witness an almost desperate attempt of the Germans to break through the lines of the defenders of Paris. The fighting Tuesday was vicious and the previous slight slackening, due to exhaustion, was not apparent. It was evident that the gaps in the lines had been filled by re-enforcements.

Today, although not Sedan day, is a day the invaders would like to see crowned with a triumph. It is the anniversary of the surrender of Napoleon III. at Sedan after his terrible defeat on the previous day, and it is the date officially set some time ago for the triumphal entry of the invaders into Paris itself.

Although the German advance from the north should be in front of the Paris forts before the week is out if they can continue their hammering, it is possible that the bombardment of the capital may be postponed. When the German advance reaches Noyon, the invaders will be behind the French who are entrenched at La Fere. If they cannot hold off the allies in front of them with a small force, they may be able to take the French fortifications in the rear, already assailed from the front by the German troops.

BELGIUM IS SAVED

Four Wealthy Patriots Guarantee German War Indemnity

A dispatch to the London Express from The Hague says that the four richest men in Belgium have guaranteed the payment to Germany of the war tax which the Germans levied against Belgium.

These men are Ernest Solvay, the alkali king; Baron Lambert, the Belgian representative of the Rothschilds; Raoul Warocque, the mine owner, and Baron Empain, the railway magnate.

"Had not this guarantee been given," says the correspondent, "Brussels would probably have been treated as Louvain was. Big guns were mounted in front of the palace ready for bombardment."

KAISER OFF FOR RUSSIAN FRONT

To Personally Direct Troops Fighting In East Prussia

BERLIN IS PANIC STRICKEN

Fear Russians Will Apply Torch If They Enter German Capital—Invasion Still Progressing, but Germans Are Putting Up Hard Fight—Millions Are Now Battling

London, Sept. 2.—The panic in Berlin over the rapid advance through East Prussia that is being made by the Russians has been increased through the announcement that Emperor William has gone into East Prussia to personally direct the operations of his troops there, according to the correspondent of The Express at The Hague.

The terror of the Berlin residents has been added to by a report that Russians have declared if they ever enter Berlin they will do what the Germans did to beautiful Louvain—sack it and appply the torch.

The correspondent of The Express at The Hague wires: "There is the greatest alarm in Berlin over the advance of the Russian troops. The news that the kaiser has left the western headquarters and moved to the Russian front has shown the residents of the capital where the immediate peril to their safety lies. As many of the populace as can get away are going to Norway, Denmark and Switzerland."

A St. Petersburg dispatch says the Russian general staff admitted that the German troops opposing the Russian advance into East Prussia were putting up a hard fight and inflicting severe losses on the czar's troops, but asserted that though the progress of the invasion was slower than last week, it was still progressing favorably.

"The German defense has stiffened," said the official statement issued at the war office, "and we have suffered heavily, but the foe has had more serious losses. Arrival of fresh troops has strengthened the German line, but it will be unable to withstand our attack.

"Our successes in Galicia continue. The Austrians that invaded Russia have recrossed the Vistula, but not without heavy losses. The Russian cavalry surrounded an entire regiment and forced it to surrender. In the fighting between Aug. 26 and Aug. 30 we have taken 17,000 prisoners and 122 guns from the Germans and Austrians."

Official reports received by the Russian war office say that Austria has more than 1,000,000 men in the field against Russia. The vastness of the Russian military establishment may be judged from the remark made by Minister of War Sukhominoff, when he was asked how the Russian troops compared numerically with those of Austria. He said:

"We can smother 1,000,000 Austrians. The Germans are the only ones that bother us."

Though no official figures have been given out it is reported that the Russian cavalry forces alone number 500,000 men.

The backbone of the cavalry is the Cossack daredevils, who have swept the Germans before them in East Prussia, clearing the way for the infantry and artillery.

TWO CORPS CRUSHED

Germans Report Capture of Seventy Thousand Russian Prisoners

A German victory at Allenstein in which three Russian army corps were defeated and 70,000 prisoners, including two Russian commanding generals, were taken, was reported to the German embassy at Washington from Berlin by wireless via Sayville, L. I. The dispatch says:

"Official report of the victory at Allenstein shows that it was even greater than known before. Three Russian army corps were annihilated.

"Seventy thousand prisoners were taken, including two commanding generals, 300 officers, and the complete artillery of the Russian army."

WRECK WAS ACCIDENTAL

Coroner's Finding on Collision In Which Four Lives Were Lost

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 2.—The collision of a trolley freight car with a heavily laden passenger car at Westport, on July 22, when four persons were killed and a score hurt, was purely an accident, according to the finding of Coroner Phelan.

The coroner finds that the signaling system on the railway in Westport is defective, but such defectiveness was not responsible for the collision. He recommends changes in signal systems, equipment and in rules governing the employes.

Heat Delays Oyster Season

Washington, Sept. 2.—Contrary to tradition, the "R" in September will not signal the return of the oyster season, sea food dealers declare. It's too hot yet, they say.

MISS ROBERTS RETURNS HOME

Tells of Experience in Great Britain

Miss Bessie Roberts, of South Quincy, a teacher at the Adams school, was among those who arrived on the Franconia which docked in Boston Sunday.

Miss Roberts was in North Wales, preparing to go to Paris when war was declared. When the order came to mobilize, every available train and public service line was utilized, completely demoralizing travel. The reservists according to Miss Roberts joined their companies without delay, and since then in many places shops are closed with notices posted on the outside that the proprietors are enrolled in the British army, while in others juveniles have taken the places of adults. The excitement was intense and bordered on panic.

The gravity of the situation made itself evident to Miss Roberts when within two minutes after her money order had been cashed notice of the suspension of gold payment was received at the office. She happened to be the last one favored with the exchange service.

Miss Roberts said she immediately commenced negotiations to return, and reached Liverpool only to find the sailing of the steamship on which she had reservations had been cancelled. The piers there swarmed with Americans and only through sheer persistency she says she secured a second cabin on the Franconia. Others not so fortunate made the passage in the steerage, while others were left behind.

Miss Robert's homeward trip was a rough one, for aside from the excitement of running with covered port holes and only starboard and port lights showing, heavy weather was encountered. The passengers in some parts of the ship were in an extremely nervous condition and all was rejoicing when the ship docked.

Cards mailed shortly after her arrival in Wales were delivered Tuesday. Her folks learned of her return Sunday night when she phoned from the custom house and there was no delay in getting to Quincy.

This morning Miss Roberts has practically recovered from her trying ordeal, and although she does not regret her experiences, she says they would never be hers by choice. She will report for duty when the Adams school opens on Tuesday.

Although Mrs. Lydia C. Hultman of Hancock street feels that her daughter, Mrs. Louis Eckert, who is located in Fiume, Austria-Hungary, is perfectly safe and all right, she is getting a little anxious at not receiving any word from her. Usually she receives a letter from her daughter every week, but it has now been over a month since a letter was received. Papers sent to her daughter by Mrs. Hultman have been returned from Vienna, evidently for the reason that the official censor did not want to give the time to go over the newspapers and eliminate anything with reference to the war. Assistant Court Officer Arthur B. Hultman, a brother of Mrs. Eckert, said Tuesday night that he felt his sister was perfectly safe but that he intended to communicate with the State department to see if they could get in touch with her.

The administration was favored by a smaller maturing city debt, this item being $16,981.46 less, and the item for interest on city debt was $4,141.41 less.

There were also reductions in the items for interest on street improvement debt, interest on park debt, assessment for South Metropolitan sewer, State highway tax, State statistics and interest on refunding debt.

The Assessors report 11,616 polls an increase of 737, which if collected will pay $1,474.00 toward the tax levy.

The increase in valuation is by far the largest in any one year as will be seen by the Ledger figures in another column on this page.

The Assessors figures are in another column.

BUILD THE DRY DOCK.

The Herald says editorially: "Today the question of carrying out the contract for the erection of the new drydock comes before the Governor and council, on the recommendation of the newly established port directorate.

"We believe the war has greatly strengthened the argument for proceeding with this construction. Thousands of men are liable to be out of work, through the disarrangement of industry incident to the closing of European markets and cutting off necessary foreign supplies. Public operations should offset this wherever possible. Everything to keep the wheels of industry moving normally, should be encouraged.

"Here is a large undertaking that will employ hundreds of men, in something that will be a good investment for the community as soon as peace is restored. The contract has been wisely negotiated. No good reason for its abandonment has ever been presented. The work should proceed pace. This the council should decree without further delay.

EUROPE

Where now, O Europe, is thy boast?
Where thine asserted hold and claim
On that which wears the noble name
Of human progress? Now the host
That throngs thy strongholds, coast to coast,
Yields to the call of savagery.
Again do thy dominions see
That picture which war lovest best—
Strife, famine, horror, wasted lands,
The blood of youth and manhood spilled.
So hast thou turned thy mighty hands—
The hands but lately promise filled—
From noble labor and once more caress
The bygone weapons of thine old distress!

MYRIAD FORTS CONFRONT CZAR IN MARCH ON BERLIN.

Advance Through East Prussia a Gigantic Military Undertaking.

It is said that the Russian troops have been divided into four armies of 2,000,000 men each. These armies will practically be hurled one after the other through East Prussia and Galicia toward Berlin, the goal, the succeeding armies filling the gaps of the ones ahead after each general engagement. Thus Russia expects to confront German re-enforcements with fresh troops.

The Russian war office declares that there will be no necessity for "feeding off the country," as the commissariat is in excellent condition.

Small German fortresses will be stormed. This plan of campaign has been carried out in the clashes with German and Austrian troops with great success. But the main fortifications, such as Koenigsberg, Posen and Danzig, will be isolated, the main strength of the army marching on to Berlin.

The seizure of Insterburg, thirty miles within the German frontier, gives Russia a grip of the railroad lines which lead to the two most important seaports of east Prussia—Koenigsberg, at the mouth of the Pregel river, where it empties into the Frische Haff, which connects with the Baltic sea, and Danzig, at the mouth of the Vistula, emptying into the gulf of Danzig and also connecting with the North sea.

Insterburg is an industrial town of 31,000 population. Besides being the center of the web of railroads over East Prussia, it is on the main line between Berlin and St. Petersburg. It is 553 miles from St. Petersburg.

Koenigsberg is seventy-two miles from Insterburg. Koenigsberg, the capital of East Prussia, with 246,000 inhabitants, is a seaport of great importance. It is defended against sea and land attack. A wall surrounds the city and connects with a system of outlying works, the principal features of which are twelve detached forts, six on the right and six on the left of the river Pregel. It is the principal fortified town of East Prussia.

Danzig, which is about 100 miles from Koenigsberg and 253 miles from Berlin, has a population of 170,000 and is surrounded by strong fortifications, there being a massive wall about the city and a cordon of modern forts.

The Russian advance is into regions in which are many places famous from the days of the Napoleonic wars.

General Rennenkamp, who is leading the great Russian army into East Prussia, was a cavalry general during the Russo-Japanese war. He took a conspicuous part in the battle of Mukden and in other great conflicts.

CHARGE WITHOUT OFFICERS.

Latter Lost One After Another, but Soldiers Kept on Fighting.

The London Mail has a dispatch from one of its correspondents telling of his visit to the French wounded in the Vosges. He writes:

"Three men who fought side by side said: 'It is probably our own fault that we are here. Our major fell at the first volley, and then all the other officers at succeeding volleys. When we found ourselves without officers we, not bothering about what was going on at the front, rear or flank, fixed bayonets at 1,200 yards and went at them, singing all the way. We were just fifty yards from the enemy when we were downed.'

"A wounded artilleryman contributed the following experience: 'I witnessed one horrible scene. The Germans were shooting from the deep trenches among which our artillery was doing terrible work. But as fast as a German dropped a fresh man took his place, until bodies of the Germans were on a level with the surface of the earthworks. At this moment a German battery was ordered to advance. The heavy wheels sank in the trench, but the drivers furiously lashed their horses and finally dragged the guns across the human bridge.'"

ZEPPELINS HAVE BOMB CAGE.

Steel Box Lowered 2,000 Feet or More. Man Hurls Explosive.

The method used by Zeppelin airships in dropping bombs has been described by an English refugee who has arrived in London from Belgium. The dirigible hovers overs its objective at a sufficient altitude to keep it out of range of the enemy's guns. At the same time, to get a better aim, it lowers a steel cage attached to a steel wire rope 2,000 or 3,000 feet long.

This cage is divided into compartments, and it carries one man, whose duty it is to throw down the bombs. The cage is sufficiently strong to make rifle fire against it ineffective, and because of its small size and the fact that it is kept constantly in motion it is very difficult for heavy guns to hit it.

SPIES SWARM UNITED STATES

Particularly Numerous In Six Large Cities.

WASHINGTON HARBORS MANY

Come From Germany, Japan, Russia, France, England and Austria—Keep Watch to See We Observe Neutrality Laws—Seek Destination of Exports and Public Sentiment In America.

"Some of the cleverest spies in all the world are now in the United States. They come here from Russia, Germany, France, Japan, England and Austria. They are particularly numerous in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, New Orleans and San Francisco."

This statetment was made to the Philadelphia Press by a man high in the United States navy, whose international knowledge has been recognized by the navy department.

"I have upon my ship," the speaker said, "two spies who are known to me. One is a Japanese; the other is a Frenchman. I know they are spies, but they don't know that I know it. Apparently they are allowed the freedom of the ship, but their every movement on board and ashore is watched.

"Washington is overrun with spies. Much of the agitation for and against the proposed $40,000,000 investment in foreign ships is being pushed along by these secret agents. Representatives of Germany and Austria are working to create sentiment for the purchase of the ships, and the French, English and Russian spies are working against it.

Many of Them Are Women.

"So numerous are these spies that you may meet one or more in any walk you may take up and down Chestnut street, Philadelphia. A considerable number of women, most of them young and attractive, are among these secret agents.

"These spies are everywhere, and their work is manifold. Their duty is to learn the destination of every shipment that goes outside of the United States. They are scanning especially closely the shipments into Mexico and Canada. More closely they are watching the shipments of sugar, which substance is being used in the manufacture of the new high explosives.

"Secret reports are being made by these men and women to the bureaus in Berlin, London, Tokyo, St. Petersburg, Vienna and Paris concerning the attitude of American public men, newspapers and the plain citizens upon various phases of the war.

Early Bidders For Food Supplies.

"Many of these spies succeeded in making many advantageous arrangements for their governments the day before and on the day war was declared. I know of a number of instances where men who sell foodstuffs were called out of bed late at night and asked if they could supply large quantities of provisions.

"One man told me he had been asked by the representative of one of the governments whether he could furnish a large supply of bacon. He replied in the affirmative and was told to have 30,000 pounds ready in six hours. This was done, and the bacon was shipped in two special cars to Canada, whence I was told it had been reshipped to a country now in the war zone."

The officer also said a large number of the spies were here to watch the United States and to see that the neutrality laws were not violated. He said it was surprising how many of these men were to be found at points where shipments would naturally be made from his country to a European power and added that there was no doubt that the first false step made by this country or any of its citizens would be reported abroad at once.

WAS FIRST LINER DE LUXE.

Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse Suits Cost $1,000—Later Prices Reached $5,000.

The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, which at the outbreak of war was converted into an armed cruiser and which was sunk off the west coast of Africa by the British cruiser High Flyer, was built in 1897 at a cost of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. She was 626 feet long, 66 feet beam and 14,350 gross tonnage. She had an average speed of twenty-three knots and, according to the Naval Annual, she was fitted to carry an armament of eight 5.9 guns, four 4.7 guns and fourteen machine guns.

The liner was the first vessel to have suits de luxe, consisting of parlor, bedroom and bath, costing $1,000 for the passage. The innovation proved a great success, and the succeeding liners ran the price up to $2,000 and continued after that until the limit was reached with the $5,000 imperial suits on the Vaterland and the Imperator.

Watchful Waiting.

Refugees arriving from Ostend by way of Folkestone told of one of their number, a corpulent Frenchman, who, as soon as the boat left the wharf at Ostend, took off his coat, vest and boots and, putting on a life preserver, sat down on the edge of the deck, continuing the whole trip in this costume. Asked what he meant by such behavior, he replied in just one eloquent word, "Mines!"

FLOUNCES FOR FALL.

Fashion Now Favors Them For Semidress Costumes.

PRETTY AFTERNOON GOWN.

The vogue of flounces is prettily illustrated in the gown pictured here which is a charming creation of voile with the skirt covered by three deep flounces, rose embroidered and bordered by bands of black velvet. It is a suitable gown for mademoiselle and may be duplicated in any one of a half dozen materials.

THE LONG WAISTED BODICE.

All Fashion Leaders Seem to Have Accepted It.

The most startling fashion innovation is the quick and emphatic lengthening of the line from the neck to the hips. Very few designers hold to the short line now, and even those who would not relinquish it under the onslaught made by the Russian and Persian fashions are giving in to this new arrangement.

The threatened close fitting of the figure has not materialized. These long waisted bodices drop in a straight line from the neck to the tunic or sash and make the figure look exceedingly young by this adjustment. It evidently was the only way to get around the large waist measurements of the woman of the hour.

The sash placed as it is today, at the end of this straight basque or pinafore, contributes to this youthful appearance, but woe to the woman who adopts it when her figure cannot afford it. She should be guided into the safer method—of a binding material or a silk cord.

It is probable this dominating style will alter the waist line of all garments. Some arrangement will be made on evening gowns to lengthen the line without taking up the pinafore, which is hardly a suitable style for a dinner party. If a woman owns an evening gown that she wishes to rearrange in the new fashion the simplest method by which to obtain the desired result is to add a deep girdle of silk or satin.

As brocade is again coming into fashion, she could employ this. It must be carelessly placed, not with precision, and more material put below than above the waist. No trimming is necessary—just the plain silk artistically wrapped about the figure.

FALL GLOVE FANCIES.

White and Black Will Be the Chief Colors Exploited.

It is stated that the dress fabrics for fall and winter wear will be very largely of the darker tones, and these dark shades will not encourage the matching of the glove with the color of the suit or dress, says the Dry Goods Economist. Therefore a large business will be done in white and in black, especially in the former.

A very large business is confidently expected in suede-lisle gloves, chiefly in white, although the natural chamois color, black and a few staple colors will not be overlooked. A good proportion of this class of handwear will have the three row embroidered backs.

THE POPULAR GIRL.

The popular girl is not aggressive and does not wish to contradict and argue. She does not cause pain by a foolish or unguarded use of her tongue.

If you invite her anywhere she always pays you the compliment of looking her best and being at her best.

She makes the world a pleasant place for other people to dwell in by being pleasant herself.

She does not want to take the front of the stage. Though if she has to do so she manages to take it prettily and without giving offense.

She has equally nice manners for all and a touch of deference for age and experience.

She is never bored; not because she does not meet with gray days, but because she has sunshine in her heart.

SLIGHT FIRE AT HOUGHS NECK

Cottage Owned by George Lord Near Fire Station

Albert Clancy of Houghs Neck assumed the dual role of rescuer and fireman at a fire in a small cottage house on Sea street, near the Hose house, on Tuesday afternoon. The fire followed the explosion of the contents of an oil stove and threatened the lives of two children who were in the kitchen.

Mrs. John Allen, mother of the children, was in the yard when the explosion occurred and Clancy was just entering the fire station. He heard the explosion and saw Mrs. Allen rush toward the house as flames burst through the open door. Grabbing a hand chemical he ran to the spot and although the kitchen was in flames he entered, followed by the mother, and both carcried the children to safety.

Clancy then turned his chemical stream on the fire, and Edward Reinhalter, who had charge of the fire house, came to his assistance with another chemical. A member of the Boston fire department who was in the vicinity also assisted.

For a time it looked as though the cottage would be destroyed and Fireman Reinhalter returned to the hose house and hitched up the hose wagon intending to lay a chemical stream. When he returned the fire had practically been extinguished through the efforts of Clancy.

The house was owned by George Lord and was damaged about $25. The children suffered no ill effects.

COMPLAINANT PAID FINE

Woman Has Man in Court for Being Idle Person

There was rather an amusing case in court this morning which almost made the presiding justice drop his usual dignity and smile. The case was that of David Frew, on complaint of Mrs. Malcolm of 118 Upland road, for being an idle person. Mrs. Malcolm went to the police station and made a complaint against Frew and Capt. McKay accompanied her to court where a warrant was secured.

She told the court this morning that Frew had lived at her home for about seven years. That he helped her about the house but did not pay any board. The only money he had given her in two years was about $40, which had been during the past four weeks. She did not want him about her home any longer.

Frew promised to keep away from the house and the court imposed a fine of $5. When asked if he had any money Frew pointing to Mrs. Malcolm said "She has got my money." Mrs. Malcolm said that all the money she had was what he had paid her for board, but she suposed she could pay his fine if no one else did. This she did and a few minutes later the two left the court room together.

When the woman said that she would pay the fine of the man she had complained of everybody smiled. The trouble seems to be that Frew who is an old man, gets too much liquor down at times and becomes disagreeable.

CUP NIGHT OF THE Q. Y. C.

To Be Observed With Banquet at Clubhouse

The annual cup night celebration of the Quincy yacht club will be held at the club house, Houghs Neck, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 9. The program includes a banquet to be served by C. C. Whittemore at 6.45 sharp, and will be followed by the presentation of the cups and other trophies captured by club yachts during the racing season which has just closed.

As each captain is supposed to have something to say on receiving his trophy, there will be plenty of speaking. Ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore of the yacht Dartwell which has captured many first prizes during the past season's races is expected to have a number of speeches on tap, and will be called upon to explain how he did it.

TENNIS FINALS TODAY.

A match in the semi-finals of the tennis tournament for women, which commenced Monday, was played on the courts of the Quincy Tennis club Tuesday between Miss Ruth Bass and Miss Priscilla Ring and the former won. The finals in the tournament will probably be played this afternoon between Miss Ruth Bass and Miss Helen Baxter.

WHAT BECAME OF DIAMOND STARS?

Once Famous Players Are Scattered Among the Minors.

VETERANS ARE RELEASED.

Jack Powell, Long a Pitching Crack, Is Unconditionally Turned Loose, and Cy Morgan Is Also a Free Agent. Many Former Big Leaguers Are Making Good With Minor Leagues.

In all the discussions of big baseball salaries very little attention is paid to the short life of the star player and the wanderings which he must endure once he has passed from the big leagues. Conditions are somewhat more equitable now since the practical abolition by court decision of the ten day clause, which enabled a manager to cast a man adrift at any time.

Jack Powell, once one of the best right handed pitchers in the game, seemed to be a man who defied old age. Although not noted for strict training methods, he hung on for years after his end had been predicted. He was one of the bulwarks of the Yankee team in its early days and, after being sold to the St. Louis Browns, suddenly acquired a new lease of life and pitched some excellent ball before he drifted out of fast company. But he could not go on forever, and the last word comes from the Venice team on the Pacific coast that Powell has received his release and can go where he pleases.

Another pitcher who was famed for a time has apparently come to the end of the road much more rapidly than Powell. Nick Maddox, once a Pirate, who began this season as manager of the Wichita team, has been released. Although an extremely successful pitcher in the National league, the best he could do for Wichita was to win three games and lose twelve. He was succeeded as manager by another National leaguer, Peaches Graham, who made a great reputation with the Bostons as a catcher, but fell away to nothing when sent to the Cubs.

Ed Killian, the iron armed left hander, who held sway so long with Detroit, is trying to make a "come back" with the Ottawa team in Canada. He has had nothing but semi-professional work this year.

The American association, which the players know as "the workhouse league," because its season is so long, fairly bristles with men once famous in the big leagues, and some of them are playing such good baseball that it seems certain they were cast adrift too soon. Old John Titus, long a slugging star for the Phillies, who played his last big league engagement with the Braves, is now in the Kansas City outfield and clouting away at a furious pace.

Cy Morgan, the minstrel man, once a crack pitcher of the Athletics, was a teammate of Titus, but has drawn his release. Other one time big leaguers of the club are Rath, Mattick, Brief, Downey and Baskette.

St. Paul has Harry Niles, the speedy outfielder, who played with the Browns and the Yankees and the Red Sox before it came time for him to go. Perhaps his best known feat was catching a ball for the second out in the ninth inning of a game and then running all the way to the clubhouse under the impression that it was the final play of the game.

The Cleveland American association team, or the Bearcats, as they like to be called, has an infield made up entirely of ex-Yankees. Lellvelt is on first, Earl Gardner at second, Knight at shortstop and Stump at third. Jimmy Sheckard, well known to National league fans for his work when a Cub, is manager of the team.

The manager of the Minneapolis team is said to have a prejudice against ball players under forty. Certainly he has veterans enough. Claude Rossman, who hung up one of the highest batting averages ever made in a world's series, is in the outfield.

Rossman was with the Tigers when he made his brilliant record for the series. Lee Tannehill, considered one of the best shortstops or third basemen the game ever saw, is playing at the latter position. Lee was always a great fielder, but his weak hitting carried him out of the big leagues as soon as he began to slow up at all.

Daredevil Dave Altizer is another player tried and true who helps out with the chores about the infield. At first base is Hunter, who once promised to be a phenom with the Pirates. Jimmy Williams, the best second baseman the Yankees ever had, is still hitting the ball hard as a Minneapolis man. Burns, the big left hander of the White Sox and the Senators, bears part of the pitching burden.

The International league once had only a few veterans, but now it numbers many former big leaguers. Freddy Parent, who played for the Red Sox in the first world's series and easily outshone Hans Wagner, is with Baltimore. So is Neal Ball, an ex-Yankee, who made a triple play unassisted while with Cleveland. Tim Jordan, who reigned for a very brief time as the best slugger in the National league, is still with Toronto. Dave Shean, Boston's butcher boy, is a member of the Providence Grays, and Al Mattern, once one of the most sought after left handers in the game, is with Newark. Buffalo has Beebe.

ENGLAND SEEKS AN ASSURANCE

American-Bought Ships Should Not Be Resold to Germany

THEY ARE LIABLE TO CAPTURE

Vessels Carrying Contraband Supplies Intended For Enemies Would Offend Great Britain—Her Stand Outlined In Discussion With Washington—Basis of Legal Argument

London, Sept. 2.—Discussion between London and Washington concerning proposed American acquisition of German merchantmen is progressing and nearing an end with the definite prospect of England finally taking this stand:

That under international law, transfer of ships from German to the American flag does not under the circumstances relieve them from capture by British warships, as such transfer would be illegal, but owing to friendly feeling between the two countries and England's keen desire to have nothing interfere with that friendship the British government would declare that ships would not be considered subject to capture under certain conditions, most important of which will be that they shall not be used in caarrying food or other contraband or semi-contraband materials or supplies to points where they could be shipped to England's enemies.

England also desires some sort of assurance that ships purchased would not after the war be returned to German owners. That in a nutshell is the British attitude.

Granting her contentions are admitted by the state department there would be no obstacle to American acquisition of ships for use in Latin-American and other trade.

Discussion between the two governments is most amicable. England's legal argument is based largely on article 56 of the declaration of London of 1909, which both governments have approved, which says:

"The transfer of an enemy's vessel to a neutral flag effected after the outbreak of hostilities is void unless it is proved such a transfer is not made in order to evade the consequences to which an enemy's vessel as such is exposed."

It is held that the sale of German ships is obviously an avoidance of one of the consequences to which Germany is exposed by outbreak of hostilities. One of the legitimate acts of war is to destroy an enemy's commerce either by capture on sea or driving ships into harbors.

Should such ships be sold, the money derived therefrom returns to the enemy and thus benefits him, as well as constituting an avoidance of the consequences to which the vessel is exposed.

FARES AT TOP NOTCH

Americans Pay High Prices to Come Home on Italian Liner

New York, Sept. 2.—The Italian steamer Principessa Mafada, chartered by John E. Jones, American consul at Genoa, at a cost of $184,000, reached New York from Italy with 388 wealthy Americans aboard and unoccupied cabins with space for 200 more.

Some of the passengers paid $7000 for a cabin, none paid less than $100 and the average cost to all aboard was approximately $500.

The presence of empty cabins was explained by the declaration that, although there were many Americans in Italy who wanted to return home, they were unwilling to pay the fares demanded for the voyage.

Reaching port at almost the same hour as the Principessa Mafada was the Holland-American liner Ryndam with 1285 passengers, of whom 1072 were Americans. Scores of the Ryndam's passengers were virtually without funds and twenty-seven were absolutely destitute.

SHOE PLANT DESTROYED

Women Jump From Windows to Safety at Brockton Fire

Brockton, Mass., Sept. 2.—A spectacular $150,000 fire swept the three-story frame structure of the shoe-binding plant of the Wade Manufacturing company, gaining headway so rapidly that 100 employes of the plant were barely able to escape.

Several persons were slightly burned. A dozen women were forced to jump from the third floor of the structure to the roof of a one-story building adjoining. The plant was completely gutted.

The fire is said to have been caused by a hot shafting box on the top floor sending sparks through a chute into a dirt box in the basement.

GRANITE STATE PRIMARIES

Nominees For Governor and Congress Are Named

Manchester, N. H., Sept. 2.—Returns from the primaries indicate the nomination for governor by the Republicans of Rolland H. Spaulding and the Democratic choice of Albert W. Noone.

Congressman Stevens won in the Democratic fight for the United States senatorial Democratic nomination.

In the First congressional district Cyrus A. Sulloway has apparently snowed under his opponents for the Republican nomination. He will oppose Eugene E. Reed, Democrat, the incumbent, whose nomination was uncontested.

Edward H. Wason won the Republican nomination for congress from the Second district. On the Democratic side, Charles J. French appears to be leading.

WERE IN GREAT PERIL

Passengers Escape From Burning Steamer Just as She Sinks

Chicago, Sept. 2.—With about 200 passengers on board, the excursion steamer City of Chicago, from Benton Harbor, Mich., caught fire several miles off Chicago.

Putting on full speed the steamer made for the government breakwater, just off the harbor, and all the passengers were landed safely a moment before the boat sank. The passengers huddled on the breakwater until taken ashore on tugs and other excursion boats.

When the fire, which is believed to have started in the galley, was discovered, the ship rushed for the shore. She was driven with such force into the government pier that much of the piling was torn away and many of the passengers were thrown into the water.

WILSON WILL RUN AGAIN

Wants People's Verdict on Work of His Administration

New York, Sept. 2.—President Wilson will be a candidate for a second presidential term, declares The Sun, which goes on:

Definite information that Mr. Wilson has expressed himself as believing it the duty of a chief executive to submit his administration to the people of the country so that they may express their approval or disapproval of it has come from an authoritative source.

Those who are in the president's confidence are convinced that if by the time of the nominating primaries and conventions of 1916 Mr. Wilson is in anything like normal health he will go before the people and ask them to pass verdict on his administration.

DOINGS OF CARRANZA

Closes Port of Vera Cruz and Seizes Mexican Railway Lines

Washington, Sept. 2.—Provisional President Carranza has ordered the port of Vera Cruz closed, according to official advices to the American government.

General Funston transmitted a long report on the complications which might result, but state department officials were not inclined to regard it as an unfriendly action.

The Carranza government advised Washington and others interested that the new Mexican government has confiscated all railway properties in Mexico.

Washington, Sept. 2.—Adjournment of congress by Oct. 1 was foreshadowed in the house when Democratic Leader Underwood arranged for a house holiday from Saturday to Tuesday to observe Labor day.

"I will say frankly," said Underwood, amid applause, "that I expect that before then the Clayton anti-trust bill will be in conference, and with other emergency legislation cleared up I see no reason why this session of congress should not be concluded by Oct. 1, if not before."

Following His Defeat of Tommy Burns, He Has Consistently Picked Lemons. No Oil King Has Lavished Money on His Needs and Desires Like Big Black

Dame Fortune is not only a fickle and flirtatious old girl, but she isn't at all particular on whom she smiles. Witness the case of her outrageous smirking at Jack Johnson, a vain, ignorant negro, who was twelve years ago a levee roustabout at Galveston.

For all that he has done for the world since Johnson might as well have remained one, yet fortune picked him out, and here he is today on the highway to a second accumulation of wealth, wrote J. E. Wray.

It's small wonder that men seek fortune in the prize ring today despite all the drawbacks connected with the game. One glance at the case of John Arthur Johnson and they sidestep the cotton bales and the harvest fields and run for the training camp.

Johnson's case is particularly alluring. In 1908, up to the month of December, Jack was just a "busted" fourth rate black fighter, with a strong inclination to whisky and a large disinclination to train. He had a tremendous constitution and a gigantic frame; also he had a hunch that he was master of all such "cheese" champions as Tommy Burns, who put one over on old Marvin Hart and grabbed the championship.

Johnson did whip Burns, as many another heavyweight then or now could have done. He won but $5,000 on that fight and a little money in side bets. He also picked up the title, and that was the wedge that enabled him to break into a game that had been closed to him by race barriers—the money making game.

Johnson has not fought much since winning the title, contenting himself with theatrical engagements and "sure thing" fights. But he has made a world of money. In six years Johnson has taken in over $300,000, and his recent victory over Moran promises to net him $100,000 more.

Here is a rough estimate of Johnson's receipts from fights, beginning with his title victory:

Tommy Burns	$5,000
Victor McLaghlen	5,000
Jack O'Brien	5,000
Tony Ross	5,000
Al Kaufman	5,000
Stanley Ketchel	12,000
James J. Jeffries	120,000
Jim Flynn	30,000
Jim Johnson	5,000
Stage contracts, five years	100,000
Frank Moran	35,000
Total	$327,000

All this within a space of five years. From a hand to mouth existence Johnson has been shunted into a six cylinder living gait, and no oil king has lavished money on his needs and desires like Johnson. He spent much of the fortune that was left him by predatory legal talent, but is again on the highway to wealth.

In addition there is every likelihood that he will still be champion after his bout with Sam Langford, despite the fact that his brother in color is some scrapper and a dangerous one. Should he win or draw with Langford Johnson will still have to confront Gunboat Smith and Georges Carpentier, both white men and each worth a $30,000 purse.

Some smile that Dame Fortune is throwing to the big Ethiopian. It makes one think almost anybody has a look in with the lady, if he can once flag her attention.

In company with other followers of the fight world we have nursed the opinion that Sam Langford is about the only boxer at present fit to give Johnson a real run for his money. We still have that opinion and add to it the belief that Sam might actually win the title from Johnson.

But the chance is still an outside one, for if Johnson has slipped back he is still good enough to put up twenty rounds of defensive milling.

SWEET SIXTEEN

Were They "Different?"

By AURANIA ELLERBECK

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

In the alcove leading from their bedroom sat the judge and Mrs. Parker.

"There comes Dean Cutler," indifferently remarked Mrs. Parker after a desultory glance at the walk below where she espied a boy of twenty striding up the steps.

"You don't think there's anything serious in his attentions?" asked the judge.

"Thomas!" exclaimed his wife in eloquent denial. "The idea! Virgie and Dean are still boy and girl together. He's barely twenty and she's just sixteen. Mere children! If she's been moping lately it's because he hasn't asked her to the dance tomorrow night. But as for anything serious between them—what put such nonsense into your head?"

"Oh, nothing!" he hesitated, dissuaded; then thoughtfully, "Only weren't we just about their age when"—

"Oh, but you and I were different!" with placid assurance. "Don't you suppose I know my girl?"

Downstairs in the flickering fire broken twilight of the parlor Dean and Virginia sat in lover-like attitude.

Dean was in a low chair before the fireplace; Virginia was on his knees, one fresh, round arm thrown around his ruddy, sunburned neck, the other clasped in both his hands.

He dropped a kiss in the hollow of her elbow near his shoulder, then questioningly looked up at her.

"Are you going to the dance with me tomorrow night?"

"Ye—es. Why didn't you ask me before?" she wistfully demanded, drawing back with a helpless sigh.

It was bewildering how the anger she had felt at his remissness fled at a look—at a kiss! Would she never cease to be as putty in his hands?

"I knew you wouldn't go with any one else," he said with egotistical assurance, reluctantly letting her go as, at a sound from the stairs, she jumped up and made for the electric switch.

When she came back and posted herself on the arm of his chair the full streaming light discovered to her two cuts on Dean's face, one at his temple, unsuccessfully concealed by a lock of hair; the other on his cheek, red and angry.

"Why, how did you do this—and this?" she cried in alarm, her brown eyes wide with question as she held back the curls from his forehead.

Rising, Dean stepped to the mantel and examined his curls. "Oh, that's nothing!" he vaguely replied, turning his back to the fire and pocketing his hands.

"How did you do it?" she repeated with insistent curiosity.

He perceptibly hesitated. Then, "I took a tumble last night—bowling—at the new alley," he mendaciously supplied, jingling coins in his pocket.

"Bowling—last night!—what time?" she took him up, narrowing her eyes as she became cognizant of his uneasy manner.

"Why—I don't know!" he parried, kicking a strayed cinder back on the hearth. "Some time between 9 and 11"—

"And then what did you do?" she probed, rising slowly and approaching him.

A vague presentiment was tugging at her heart. Having been to the new alley herself last night, she knew that he had lied. But why? Was there some ugly truth to conceal?

"Oh, just ran around town with Tom Baker and the bunch," he reluctantly admitted, pressed to the point of irritation.

"What do boys do when they just run around town?" she went on earnestly, putting her hands on his shoulders and turning him toward her. In her love was something of a mother's yearning.

Then like a flash came two and two together. Her face blanched, and her hands fell like dead weights at her sides. She remembered now!

After she and Cousin Wes had left the bowling alley they had stopped in to see the last act at the Empire. When they came out it was nearing midnight. As they passed a certain alley-way that sneaked off Center street a noisy group of boys turned in.

She had distinctly seen the loose belted figure of Tom Baker and another—curly headed, hatless! But she had immediately argued herself out of believing her eyes. Now she felt convinced.

"I saw you downtown last night," came from Virginia's lips in a frozen tone, unlike herself.

"Where?" demanded Dean, flushing darkly.

"Center street, between First and Second West, in an alley."

"Virginia, you didn't! I wasn't there. Some one's been talking. Just let me catch"—

"I saw you myself. Don't lie to me again!"

It was an undreamed of Virginia who confronted him!

"I—I only went in with the boys—to look on," he defensively offered instead. Her sternness put him at a disadvantage, but anything to hold her!

"You said you were at the bowling alley last night and you weren't."

Stampeded, confused, Dean hurried with the truth.

"Well, then—I'll tell you. Only you mustn't be too hard on me. A fellow hit me here with a billiard cue in a place on Columbine alley. And then there was a fight."

"Oh, Dean!" Shuddering under the destruction of hope and faith—a shattered ideal—Virginia hid her face in her hands and sank into a chair.

"Look at me," he pleaded, falling on his knees beside her and attempting to raise her chin.

But her head only sank lower, and she pushed away his hand. "I can't look at you any more—you lied to me. It wouldn't—be—the—same."

Dean stood up. He looked around the big, familiar room, suddenly grown strange and hostile, and then at the dark head bent because of him.

She was like a flower still, but lifeless, bitten by the frost. A sob clutched his throat, and he tried the hardest thing of all.

"Virginia, I'm not fit to touch your hand—but—can't you forgive me, Virgie—please?" he implored, bending over her with trembling lips and heart smitten with remorse.

But her one vulnerable spot had been pierced. Pain had quenched the flame of her love, and the ashes lay like stones in her breast.

"I don't know. It isn't that. Whether I forgave you or not, it could never be the same," she repeated dully.

Sixteen and twenty, but the lightning had struck.

Dean straightened his shoulders. "Do you want me to go?"

"Yes," with a suggestion of eagerness. "And you had better take this with you."

Rising, Virginia handed him his signet ring.

The tragedy was complete. This last concrete instance of their parting was as the closing of the casket in a funeral service.

The front door closed, and a man of twenty stumbled down the steps.

"Virginia, didn't you hear the dinner bell?" peremptorily called her father from the dining room.

"No—I—I don't want any dinner," replied Virginia from the hall where she stood, outwardly calm as a statue, inwardly nauseated with the pressure of unshed tears.

"Nonsense! Hurry in here! We've got noodle soup. Where on earth is Dean?" demanded her father, looking up from a steaming tureen, ladle poised in the air, as Virginia crept alone into the dining room.

"He—didn't stay," she quietly remarked, slipping into her place at the table.

"What's the matter? Didn't he ask you to the dance?" interrogated her mother, righteously indignant.

"Yes—but—I'm going with father if I go," was the astounding reply.

"Certainly you may go with your father," largely consoled the judge, with a comprehending wink at his wife.

"Of course! That's the very nicest way to go! And what are you thinking of wearing?" pursued Mrs. Parker with tactful enthusiasm.

"I think—I'll wear—I'd like to wear my old white"— began Virginia, but at the thought of that dress and its intimate history she could no longer keep back the tears. Choking with sobs, she buried her face in her napkin and groped her way from the room.

"No, mother," advised the judge as Mrs. Parker made a movement to follow. "Let her have her cry out alone. That young scoundrel—he didn't ask her to that dance at all! Confound him!"

"I suppose not. And those things mean so much when one is just sixteen. You don't imagine it was anything else?" she suggested.

"Of course not—just a spat! He'll call up again tomorrow," and the judge began on his soup with a relish.

"And yet—we were about their age when we had our quarrel," renewed Mrs. Parker and heard herself with alarm. Thirty years ago, and this was the first mention of it since that day! Mrs. Parker had been able to forget when she decided to forgive—

"I know, mother," said the judge, reaching over to pat her hand across the table. "But, as you say, they're children! We were—different!"

Woman's World

Mme. Bertha von Halbach, the Woman Behind the Guns.

MME. BERTHA KRUPP VON BOHLEN UND HALBACH.

A woman is, after all, dictator to the armed powers of Europe. She is Mme. Bertha Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach, heiress of the great gunmaker, Freidrich Krupp, who left the bulk of his fortune and his great armament manufacturing plant at Essen, Germany, to his eldest daughter, Bertha. She owns the steel and gun works, with the shipyards at Kiel and the famous gun and armor works at Madgeburg.

In 1906, when she was nineteen years old, she married Gustav von Bohlen und Halbach, who was sixteen years her senior and had a successful career as a diplomat. They have two sons and a daughter. There is American blood in the veins of Von Bohlen und Halbach, although he is a subject of the kaiser. His father fought on the northern side in the civil war.

Mme. von Bohlen und Halbach holds the fate of nations in her hand, for if the Krupp works refused to supply any country with guns that country would be in a bad way as a military power. The entire artillery of Russia and Japan, France, Germany and Italy was manufactured at the Krupp works, and during the South African war, when the artillery made in English arsenals proved worthless, England had to apply to the Krupp works to supply the urgently needed weapons.

Practically every gun on every European warship was constructed in the Krupp works at Essen.

She not only is the richest woman in Germany, but she is perhaps the most powerful woman in the whole world. By her whim or will nations may be made or destroyed. If she chose to do so she could shut down the vast gun works and refuse to supply the munitions of war to some nation that must have them or cease to exist.

Her father had no son and educated his daughter, Bertha, to take his place. She has been trained in every detail of the business and takes personal charge of it.

It is said to be the war aspect of her work that interests her most. The manufacture of locomotives, steel girders and other products of her factories is all humdrum to her. The earliest toys of her childhood were absolutely perfect working models of every battleship and gun constructed at the factory.

She has made a careful study of every detail of battleship construction, the secrets of rapid firing guns and the composition of shrapnel, dynamite bombs and other death dealing ammunition.

For Ivy Poison.

This time of the year children or grownups going through woods are liable to get into poison ivy. Some children pull it up without knowing what it is. So here is a remedy that will often make it disappear after the first application:

Dissolve one ounce of sugar of lead in two ounces of sweet spirits of niter, add one pint of water that has been boiled, but must be added after cooling. Use only externally. Don't leave where children can handle it. This is to be rubbed on affected parts.

SOME THEATER BORES.

Haven't you been annoyed at the theater—

By the enthusiastic friend who nudged you when there was an especially funny or telling point in the play?

By some one who insisted on telling the plot to a companion while you were listening to the actors on the stage?

By the man or woman in front who dodged about so you could scarcely get a glimpse of the stage?

By the criticisms or explanations of some one who had seen the play before?

By persons who came bustling in late, making you miss the opening of the play?

By the stranger who borrowed your opera glass or insisted on loaning you his or hers against your will?

Spiders Are Not Insects.

The spider is not an insect, though probably nine people out of ten would class it under this term. With scorpions and mites, spiders form a class in the animal kingdom known as arachnida. This name is derived from a mythical personage called Arachne, the daughter of a purple dyer of Lydia, who was fabled to have challenged Minerva to a trial of skill in spinning. So indignant was the goddess at this act of boldness that she forthwith transformed the hapless challenger into a spider, presumably in order that she might have the best possible opportunity of practicing the art on which she prided herself so much. Spiders differ from insects in five main particulars. Their eyes are simple instead of compound, they have eight legs in place of six, they do not pass through the metamorphoses which are characteristic of insects, they have no antennae, and their breathing is accomplished by means of organs which combine the functions of lungs and gills instead of by tubes pervading their bodies. These points of distinction are sufficient to determine the fact that it is impossible to class spiders as insects.

Seasickness.

Seasickness comes on oceans, lakes and some rivers. Not every one, however, who travels upon these bodies of water can acquire it, as it appears to come only to those who have a gift for it. It has one great merit not common to all gifts, as it may be acquired without previous practice. Those who are skillful do not have to be taught. Like inspiration and the wonderful one hoss shay, it comes to them "all at once and nothing first."

Various cures have been devised for seasickness. One of them is publicity. If you can keep on deck where you will be seen by all men and a few fishes that may be staring at you, it is said to be a great help. The best cure, however, is carefully to remove the water from underneath the particular vessel in which you happen to be passing away. If enough water can be removed the seasickness will be invariably cured.

Seasickness is the only thing you get from the steamship company that you don't pay for.—Life.

Quite Simple.

"Mr. Yaleblue, I want to ask you a question," remarked the Wellesley maiden to her partner as they entered the conservatory.

"A thousand if you like," replied the gallant collegian.

"What is a kiss?"

The young man was taken aback, but quickly pulled himself together and firmly said, "This is."

"Sir," replied the indignant seeker after higher culture, "you misunderstand me. The interrogation I put to you was a mathematical problem which I thought might interest a student from Yale college."

"It does, it does," said the junior as he twirled his light mustache, "but if it's a conundrum I give it up."

The maiden's eyes sparkled, and there was music in her voice as she threw out the answer, "Why, it's nothing divided by two."—Philadelphia Ledger.

SCHOOL EXPENDITURES.

Mayor Curley of Boston appeared before the recess committee of the Legislature on City Charters on Tuesday and is quoted as follows:

"I firmly believe that the expenditures of the school department should be under control of the mayor. I don't see why, for instance, the superintendent of schools, Mr. Dyer, should receive more than the Governor of the commonwealth in salary, the same as the mayor of Boston, more than the commissioner of public works or other city officials who have more responsibility. They pay too high salaries in the school department." Supt. Dyer is paid $10,000; annually.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy J. O'Brien, of 14 Gay street, have returned from a visit to Dr. White, Mrs. O'Brien's brother.

IDENTIFIED BY SISTER

Woman Found Wandering in Merrymount Park

The mystery surrounding the woman found wandering near Merrymount Park about midnight, suffering apparently from amnesia, was cleared up today when Mrs. J. White of Quincy, a sister, called at police headquarters and identified her as Mary A. Chambers of Weymouth. She will be taken home this afternoon.

The woman, said to have been employed in a Boston restaurant, was first seen on Hancock street and later in the park. Two young men who sympathized with her condition brought her to City Square and she was sent to the station.

There her answer to questions was "Tell nurse to get my nightkown," and shortly after she fell asleep. She passed a comfortable night and when her sister called this morning had not awakened. The woman was married and has several sisters in Weymouth.

Volunteers have reported, ready to cut out and sew the garments, sewing machines have been sent in, and as fast as a shipment is ready, it will be forwarded to Miss Mabel T. Boardman for the use of the Red Cross Society in its European war work.

BAILEY NOT A CANDIDATE

Rumor Connected Him With Mayoralty

There was a well defined rumor about City Square this morning that Councilman Charles W. Bailey of Wollaston had announced his candidacy for Mayor at the coming fall election.

Councilman Bailey was reached at the Boylston National bank in Boston and when asked in regard to the rumor said that there was not an atom of truth in it. He further said that he not only was not a candidate for Mayor, but neither would he be a candidate for any other city office. This is taken to indicate that Mr. Bailey will not be a candidate for reelection to the City Council this fall.

Assessor Buckley Says 60 to 70 Per Cent of Increase in Valuation Is There

Board Has Endeavored to Equalize Valuation

In speaking of the high valuation of the city this year, Chairman Buckley of the Assessors stated Wednesday that the increase was largely on old property. That in going over the city the Assessors had found much property which in their opinion had a ridiculously low valuation placed on it and this they had raised according to their best judgment.

Of the increase Chairman Buckley said that from 60 to 70 per cent was on old property, and the balance was on new property. That while increases were made in all wards, that of course the largest increases were naturally in Ward One.

He would not say that the Assessors were right in valuation they had placed on estates, but he believed that they were. They had found many cases of what was considered unequal valuations, and these they had endeavored to equalize.

At the present time he was unable to give the real estate valuations by wards as they had not ben complied in that manner as yet.

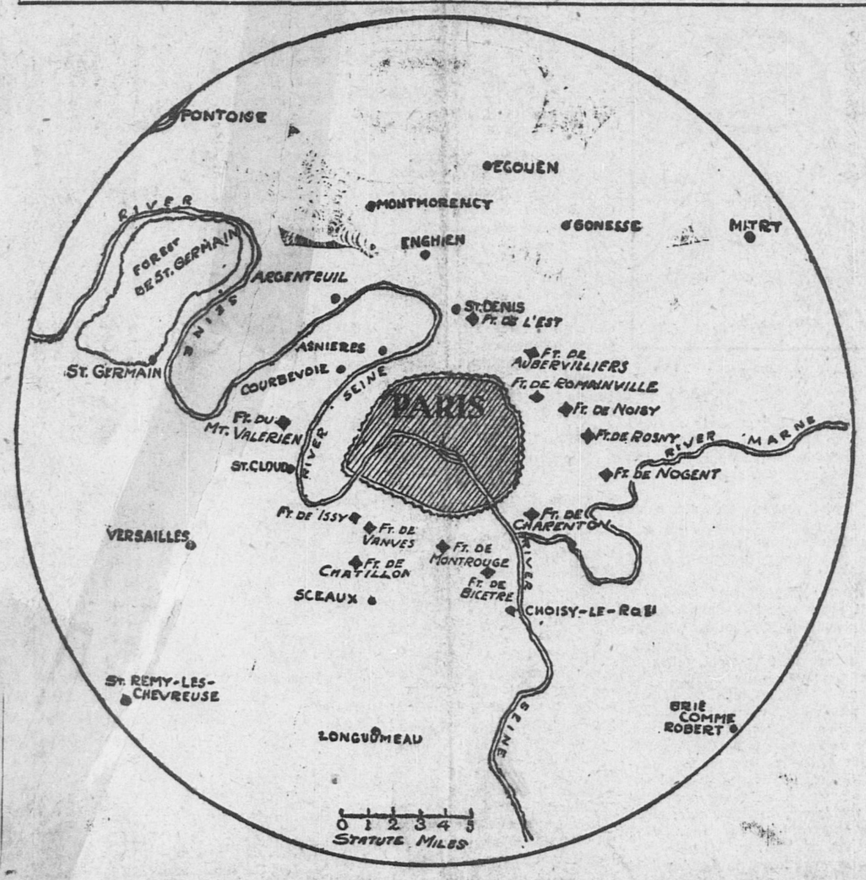
Map Showing Principal Forts In Great Circle Of Defenses That Protect the City of Paris.



Paris is considered the strongest fortified city in the world. As the German army gradually pushed the allies back the city prepared for a long siege. Houses in the suburbs which obstructed the cannon fire from some of the forts were blown up. Many people hastily fled to the south. Fifty-one forts and masked batteries defend Paris in addition to the solid wall of masonry around the city proper. The Germans besieged and starved the city into surrender in 1871, but conditions are different now. Figures show that nearly $800,000,000 has been spent in building new forts and remodeling old ones. The forts have a sweep of eighty-five miles and protect 600 square miles.

GRADUATION OF HOSPITAL NURSES

First Class Since Training School Was Established at City Hospital of Quincy

Kind Words by Dr. Nichols, Dr. Gordon and F. B. Rice

The first class of nurses of the Training School for Nurses of the City Hospital of Quincy were graduated Wednesday afternoon. The exercises were held on the lawn and were well attended.

The graduates were Miss Florence Ethel Hanscom, Miss Anna Victoria Ljunquist, Miss Alice McGlew and Miss Hansnora Neilson.

Those who took part in the exercises were Fred B. Rice whose father made the hospital possible, and Dr. John A. Gordon, one of the persons active in the hospital since its founding. The address was made by Dr. E. H. Nichols, professor of surgery at Harvard and consulting hospital surgeon.

At the conclusion of the exercises Mrs. Paul R. Blackmur, president of the Hospital Aid Association pinned handsome pins on the graduates and Mr. Rice presented diplomas.

During the afternoon an entertaining concert was rendered by Miss Amy Fallon, Miss Ruth Keating and Miss Eilleen Kanally of Dorchester.

Refreshments were served by the nursing staff after which the institution was thrown open to inspection.

Fred B. Rice in his remarks said:

It is not often we get such a gathering of friends of our hospital; therefore I want to improve the opportunity to briefly tel something of the progress of the institution. Some figures must be used as the story is told better by that means.

On June 17 the doors of the hospital had been opened 24 years. It was the wish of its founder, William B. Rice, and of its father, our good Dr. John A. Gordon, that it should be a home where all who were sick—rich or poor—could turn to regain their health.

These men had faith that all who could pay would, but none were to be refused. There was to be no distinction of race, creed or riches.

At first we had only a man's ward, a small woman's ward and three private rooms. This continued almost until five years ago. Since then there has been added the new woman's ward and eleven private rooms, a new surgical ward with most modern equipment, a beautiful new nurses' home, and an obstetric ward.

From the start the hospital has been served loyally by our doctors. When the hospital was enlarged a few years ago the staff was increased, and the doors were opened for all physi-

Probably for the next few years the European tourists will visit Africa and other comparatively civilized countries.

The dances that were taught last winter will never be popular this fall, as the dancing masters can't make any more money teaching them.

Apparently American women have got to wear American fashions this winter, but if the prices are made high enough they will be satisfied.

The farmers are called on to increase the food supply, and the county fairs propose to help on the cause by holding some horse trots.

One puzzle is how those mild-eyed creatures, the Belgian hares ever got that name.

ARGENTINE BATTLESHIPS.

When one realizes that the money involved in completing the "Rivadavia" and "Moreno," the contract taken by the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation of Quincy, was over twenty-five millions, he should, in order to get an adequate idea of such a sum, further realize that it is equal to the entire property value of all land and buildings in the ordinary city of 25,000 inhabitants.

Still, Quincy, besides her heritage of having furnished so many notables in this country's history, is accustomed to large dealings. The fact that 400 houses are built in Quincy yearly is no small matter, but, blessed as she is, with adjoining Boston, being only eight miles from the South Terminal, and being in the Metropolitan district for water, sewer, parks and boulevards, she enjoys all the advantages of the big city and still has the green fields and sky, so necessary for children.

With seashore and country combined, best of schools, churches, parks and playgrounds, good roads, excellent fire and police protection, good building sites at reasonable prices, both in the city and on the shore, it is no wonder that the better class of home-seekers, are flocking to Quincy and soon are adding their voices to the general chorus of "Come and live in Quincy."

"SEE AMERICA FIRST."

One of the favorable by-products of the war in Europe will be the diversion of the American tourist travel. From an economic view-point, this current has always been a heavy loss. It is always admitted to draw hundreds of millions of dollars away from this country.

On August 1 Europe practically closed up her hotels and rail ways, and went into the killing business. A good many curiosity seekers may go abroad next summer, much as a crowd of ghouls assembles wherever there is a railroad wreck or boiler explosion. But others are likely to find Europe in turmoil for years. It is a time which everyone with the money and leisure to travel may well take to familiarize himself with the wonders of his own land.

The war ought to give every American a renewed respect for his fatherland. While the powers of Europe have been loading themselves up with the barbarous implements of wholesale murder, America has been making better highways, lighting its cities, removing disease by sanitation, and improving its farm methods.

While Europe will now be destroying many matchless relics of its venerable past, America has been erecting churches and monuments, painting pictures and carving statues. Much of this work has been crude, but much of it is very wonderful. While foreign powers are working off the cruel fevers of barbarism, let us here at home value at its worth all that our own builders and painters and sculptors have done.

There ought to be now in every American heart a greater affection for his own land. It should stand for him as the land of peace, as the land where love and science and labor are the ideals, not blood and iron. Let him then, until Europe repents of its follies and insanities, see what God and the hand of man have done for his own soil.

CAPITAL IS TRANSFERRED TO BORDEAUX

Outposts of German Cavalry Within Fifty Miles of Paris

GERMANS DISPLAYING REMARKABLE ACTIVITY

Allies Who Are Being Driven Back May Be Able to Hold Attention of Invading Columns—Non-Combatants Ordered to Leave Antwerp, Where an Attack by Invaders Is Evidently Expected—London Greatly Concerned Over French Centre—Germans Continue to Drop Bombs From Air—British Defeat German Advance Guard In Sharp Engagement In Forest—People of Paris Witness a Veritable Battle In Air

London, Sept. 3.—With the cavalry outposts of the German army in the forest of Compeigne, less than fifty miles distant from Paris, the French government was temporarily transferred to Bordeaux.

The French continue to hold off the German assaults upon the centre and right, but the crushing and battering attack upon the left continues unabated.

The removal of the capital, while not of great importance, has had a tremendously sobering effect upon London, which for the last few days had begun to feel convinced that the German war machine had nearly run down.

Coming as it did on the anniversary of the surrender of Napoleon III. at Sedan, and especially with the confirmation from Russia of a tremendous German victory in East Prussia, thus considerably removing the pressure from Berlin, the day was one of discouragement in London.

The engagement in the forest of Compiegne, which resulted in a defeat of the Germans by a force of British, has presumably been followed, as was the case in Belgium, by an advance of the German infantry into the forest.

Another German column, pressing upon Paris upon a line further east, reached Anizy-le-Chateau and Soissons. Soissons is about eighty miles from Paris, but it is behind the great French inner defense at Laon.

French May Be Trapped

The assault from the north has now, it is clear, passed well behind La Fere and Laon and is in a position to attack the inner line from the rear as soon as the assault from the front is begun. As fighting has already been reported as taking place near to La Fere, it is possible that the French on this fortified line may find themselves between two fires.

The French have, however, probably prepared for this emergency, as it has been apparent for many days. And presumably the allies who are being driven back by the force that has reached Compiegn and Soissons will be able to hold the attention of the invading columns.

This attack, too, has seemed from the outset to be directed against Paris, the great objective of the German armies, and it is doubtful if a halt is called before the invaders are within sight of the forts that guard the French capital.

Germans Again In Belgium

The Germans have been displaying extraordinary activity since Sunday. Belgium, which was a few days ago almost free from Germans, has been suddenly inundated again, and orders were issued to all non-combatants in Antwerp to leave the city at once.

Rumors are current that the Belgian army has suffered so terribly in its unequal conflicts with the Germans that it will be unable to supply enough men to garrison Antwerp as effectively as plans call for.

Another Zeppelin hovered over Antwerp again and the usual German aeronaut rode over Paris. Bombs were dropped in both places. No damage was done in the French capital, but in Antwerp several persons were injured when bombs exploded near houses that had been converted into hospitals and which were flying Red Cross flags. The Antwerp story appears to be authentic, as the American consul visited the spot where the bombs exploded and was shown the houses that were damaged.

Anxiety Over French Centre

The greatest concern is felt in London for the French centre. The right appears to be gaining a little ground daily upon the Germans, who are apparently making no effort to advance and merely seek to check another French attempt to get into Alsace.

The left of the allies' line is being pushed backward faster than elsewhere and here the threat against Paris is most imminent, but it is not believed that the rush here can do more than bring the Germans within sight of the forts about the capital. The great guns, without which it will be impossible to make any impression upon the steel forts, are thought to be with the centre army of the Germans, which is moving much slower than had been anticipated.

The advance of the German cavalry to Compiegne, Anizy-le-Chateau and Soissons was as swift and as baffling as their amazing dashes through Belgium in the early days of the war. The British held a strongly fortified position in the forest of Compiegne and opened fire so suddenly that the Germans were driven back with a loss of ten cannon.

The forest proved an admirable place for the defenders, who had chosen their position in a place where the German cavalry was at a disadvantage. It is probable that fighting is still being waged here, as it is a difficult place for the invaders to seize unless they have an overwhelming force.

The forest is fifty-eight miles in circumference, densely wooded, and intersected by numerous roads and paths which are, however, too narrow to allow cavalry to be effective.

Little is known of the German advance at Anizy-le-Chateau and Soissons. Soissons is now unfortified and could offer no such resistance as it did in the Franco-Prussian war, when it was able to hold out four days against the conquerers.

Reports were heard in London that the formidable army of the crown prince had been defeated near Spincourt and Longuyon. It was supposed that these referred to earlier engagements in the war, for the crown price's army has been for several days reported as trying to get across the Meuse several miles west of the scene of the rumored defeats.

French Standing Firm

About Rethel and along the line of the Meuse, where the attack has beeen almost as fierce as that on the north, the French continue to hold their lines practically intact.

Opposite Nancy, the French advanced still further along the Sanon river and must be within sight of the boundary that they crossed so confidently many days ago. The advance also continued further south in the Vosges, where the Germans appear to have left only a curtain of men, just enough to hold the French garrisons in their forts and to prevent any real invasion of Alsace and Lorraine.

South of Nancy, in the gap purposely left between the great forts at Toul and Epinal, no news is obtainable of the fighting, although this is one of the most important places in the French defense.

Battle In the Air

Paris was treated to an unusual spectacle—a veritable fight in the air. Late Wednesday afternoon, after the lone German aeronaut had come and gone, three fast speeding machines were seen above the city. Machine guns and rifles began to clatter and for a few moments Paris experienced some of the thrills of war.

The guns failed to stop the aviators, but the fire caused one to separate from his companions. While they were swooping in great circles, dropping bombs persistently, two French machines were seen rising slowly above the roofs of the city.

They gained headway and were soon near enough to the lone German to draw fire from him. The shots were answered and for a few moments the duel in the air proved most spectacular.

Finally, however(the German succeeded in getting high enough to be out of range and disappeared toward the northwest. His companions were soon in flight, although they hovered for several moments above the city and were plainly in sight of the crowds that thronged the streets.

BRITISH CASUALTIES

Loss of 3949 Men and 188 Officers Reported to London

The official casualties suffered by the cavalry brigade and of three of the divisions, less one brigade, of the British force in France follow:

Killed: 36 officers and 127 men.
Wounded: 57 officers and 629 men.
Missing: 95 officers and 4183 men.

This report was received in London from the headquarters in France of the expeditionary force.

As regards the men, as distinguished from officers, it is known that a considerable proportion of the missing were wounded men who had been sent down country and of whom particulars were not available at headquarters.

In the missing are included those who have not been accounted for, and the list of missing may comprise prisoners not wounded and straggiers, as well as casualties.

RED CROSS NEEDS MONEY

Plans For Sailing of the Hamburg to Europe Are Completed

New York, Sept. 3.—The Hamburg-American liner Hamburg, chartered by the American Red Cross to take sixty American doctors and 120 nurses and medical and surgical supplies and hospital equipment to Europe, will sail on Monday, Miss Boardman says.

A great deal more money than is now on hand will be needed by the Red Cross if it is to carry out the great work planned. Miss Boardman said she would like to have a fund of at least $1,000,000.

DYES ARE RELEASED

Germany Lifts Embargo Which Threatened Cotton Industry

Washington, Sept. 3.—Representative Metz received from Rotterdam and transmitted to Secretary Bryan advices that Germany has raised the embargo on exportations of dyestuffs, but not on pharmaceutical products.

Metz asked the state department to make represetation for raising the embargo on the latter. Free shipments of German dyestuffs via Rotterdam are of inestimable importance to the cotton goods industry of the United States. Without German dyestuffs it was threatened with at least partial suspension.

CONTEST IS CLOSE

Noone Leads Hutchins In New Hampshire by Nine Votes

Concord, N. H., Sept. 3.—With forty-four small towns in the northern part of the state still to be heard from, Albert W. Noone is leading John C. Hutchins by the narrow margin of nine votes for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The towns not reported are isolated places, which are always late in sending in election results. A recount of the vote will be necessary, probably, regardless of the complexion of these delayed returns.

Rolland H. Spaulding, who won the Republican nomination, continues to increase his lead over Rosecrans W. Pillsbury.

Sulloway's whirlwind victory in the three-cornered fight for the congressional nomination in the First New Hampshire district was a feature of the primary results.

JOBS FOR IMMIGRANTS

Free Employment Agency to Be Established at Boston

Washington, Sept. 3.—Immigration Commissioner Caminetti's intention to establish a federal free employment bureau in Boston marks one step in the development of a plan long cherished in the department of labor but never before attempted in a systematic way.

This is, practically, to make a federal employment agency of every immigration station. As immigrants arrive in Boston desiring work, they will be listed according to occupation and everything reasonable will be done to find positions for them.

One of the essential features of the new plan will be to make an active working arrangement with the Massachusetts free employment bureau maintained by the state.

Mine Sinks Steam Drifter

London, Sept. 3.—The steam drifter Eyric, engaged in mine sweeping operations in the North sea, struck a mine and went to the bottom in three minutes. Six members of her crew are missing.

WEDDING AT WEYMOUTH

Miss Mabel F. Baker Bride of Harry I. Bicknell

Not only most every one in North Weymouth but friends from afar were in attendance Wednesday evening at the wedding reception of Miss Mabel Frances Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Baker of 36 Pearl street, North Weymouth and Harry Irving Bicknell son of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace H. Bicknell of 258 Front street, Weymouth.

The ceremony which was the double ring service, was solemnized at half past seven by Rev. William W. Rose of the Second Universalist church of Weymouth at the home of the bride. Charles Bicknell of South Weymouth, acted as best man for his brother and Miss Esther W. Bicknell was maid of honor. Helen Bicknell sister of the groom was flower girl. The ushers were J. Carlton Trainor of Weymouth and Herbert Hudson of Somerville and Ernest Larrabee of Marlboro, both of Tufts 1912 and classmates of the groom.

In pink crepe de chine and carrying pink roses the maid of honor made a delicate combination of color with the bride whose gown was of white charmeuse with duchess lace trimmings. The bride's veil was caught with orange blossoms and she carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and wore a gold bracelet, a gift from the groom.

As souvenirs of the happy occasion the bride presented the maid of honor with a pin, and the groom his best man with a topaz scarf pin and the ushers with amethyst scarf pins.

Miss Doris L. Torrey played the wedding march. The house decorations were ferns and hydrangeas making a most effective floral setting.

Following the ceremony a large reception was held from eight until ten o'clock the parents assisting in receiving the guests. There was music by Towers orchestra and it was a large and animated throng that extended congratulations among them being college friends of the groom.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Vitus Fecht of Wilmington, Del. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Alexander of Andover, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Thayer of Lynn, Miss Velma Henderson of East Pembroke, Mrs. Charles Simmons of East Weymouth, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Gellette and Mrs. W. H. cians of Quincy of recognized standing to send their patients to it. Today the staff is divided into a medical and surgical staff, thus specializing the work, and insuring the best results to patients.

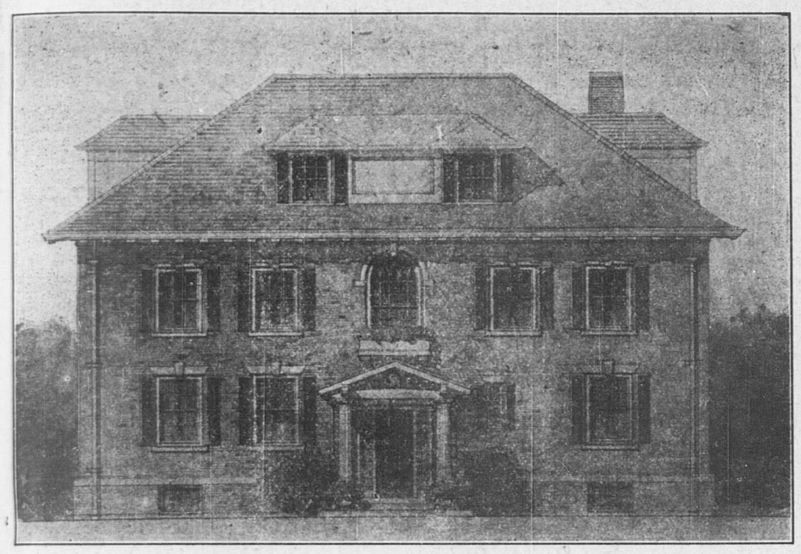
Up to Jan. 1, over 6700 patients had been admitted. Of these 102 came in the first year, (really only six months.) In 1894, 188 were admitted; in 1904, there were 307; in 1909, 313; in 1913, 651.

So far this year, eight months, 580 have been admitted and if the average keeps up the next four months over



NURSES' HOME, QUINCY HOSPITAL

860 will have entered in the year 1914.

Of these patients in 1906 out of 328, nearly one-half were free. In 1913 nearly one-third were free, a changing proportion probably caused by greatly increased number of private patients, due to our better equipment in that respect, and to our fine new operating ward, and to the large number of maternity cases, which are charged in the open ward the very moderate sum of $15 per week.

In 1891 we had only 10 patients per day, but in 1913 we had jumped to nearly 26 per day and the average increased so far this year to a daily average of 34 per day. It has cost to care for each patient as follows—In 1897, $1.88; in 1904, $2.12; in 1913, $2.30 a steady rise in cost, but is it not greater than the increased cost of living throughout the community. It should be less this year if the ward does not make the price prohibitive.

In the last five years our expenses have doubled. Receipts show our income from patients last year was nearly $12,000 much more than double that of five years ago, and this year that item will probably be $2,000 more than in 1913. Today the endowment fund is more than $100,000 a fine growth but not in keeping with the increase in expenses. From our city $1,000 was received annually up to 1896, $3,000 for the next four years, $3500 each year for the next two, $4000 each year off the next eleven.

In other words while the city has nearly doubled in population and wealth the hospital has more than doubled its equipment, and is caring for double the number of free patients and a total of more than three times as many patients. Yet, in that time, the city has increased its appropriation for this semi-public institution only $1000—from three to four thousand. By law the city can appropriate $5000.

The annual deficit was formerly from $2000 to $4000. It is now nearly $7000. We now owe over $15,000 two years' deficit. The plant and endowment fund is worth $200,000, all private gift, and all for the use of this community. To meet our deficit great efforts have been made to raise money by soliciting the citizens. This has become a great burden on a few, and unless some new means of raising this money annually is found, it is reasonable to ask the city government to increase its appropriation to meet our annual deficit and assess it on our tax bills.

Plans were under way for a Hospital week this fall to wipe out the deficit. The war has upset all our sopes in that direction, and it seems wise to defer this collection till next spring.

All this is maintained to care for the sick. It is more than a hospital. It is a training school for nurses—and the product you see before you. Sickness comes without warning. There is no time to train nurses then. We must be constantly alert to give the most efficient possible training to the young who devote their lives to this calling.

Germany has won so far in the European war because she is prepared. This hospital for this community at least is doing its best not only to train nurses to go into your homes but to keep a home in the highest state of efficiency, where all can come when they need it. We ask your support, morally and financially.

A WORD TO NURSES.

Dr. Nichols, in a most interesting and instructive address to the graduates said as follows:

"I want to congratulate the members of the graduating class on the completion of their training and their choice of a profession. The profession they have chosen is one of dignity and usefulness, and of opportunity for service—not only in caring for the bedridden, sick persons but also in many branches of public usefulness and service, and the field is constantly widening.

All should remember, however, that their "training" is like the doctor's education, merely a training in fundamentals of their profession, and that they really, like the doctors, have new opportunities for learning. The nurse who believes that completion of training school means completion of knowledge will fare just as a doctor does who is of that opinion.

Sometimes doctors who do well in medical schools are unsuccessful as practitioners. The same may be true of nurses. Some of these failures are avoidable, some are due to personality or the lack of it. I'd like to speak of the avoidable failures.

1.—Nursing while a splendid profession is still a business proposition, and a nurse's engagement is a business matter. All such arrangements should be complete before starting on the case, and discussion of terms, duties, emergencies, may make it unpleasant, but generally tact makes it possible and avoids apportunities for later disputes. It is poor business to have doctors make the arrangements. They may consider the family's interest above yours.

1.—The first obligation is to the patient. You must never lose advantage by an unguarded tongue. It is the unforgiveable sin in a nurse. Your presence is not welcome, and kindness, consideration and sympathy are expected. Affection and emotion are not. Personal gossip must be avoided. Avoid hospital gossip. Don't gossip about other patients—it may go at the time, but later the patient thinks if you gossip about one you may about them, and you will not be again employed. Don't try to make a friend of a patient. You make many friends in your profession by good work but not by trying.

Families look upon nurses as a trial. You are not their guest but a busy employee. Family routine must be contact makes up for many short comings, but not in the long run for good nursing. Efficient, intelligent service brings its own reward in money and funds. Wide interests and general information, notably an ability to read makes long cases likely. Respect for your profession and yourself will protect you from all real annoyances.

You have chosen as your life work the most humane and useful of all professions. I want to congratulate you on the choice and wish you all success.

DR. GORDON'S ADDRESS.

Dr. John A. Gordon, the friend of all the nurses, in his address spoke of many things of interest to the profession. He said:

Graduates of the Class of 1914 of the training school for nurses of the City Hospital of Quincy, I congratulate you on having passed the first milestone in your professional career. The happy day which seemed so far away to you when you entered the class three years ago and to which you looked forward with feelings of anxiety and pleasure has come at last. You passed your probation successfully. You observed the rules and regulations of the schools. You did creditable work as pupils and nurses. You obtained good marks in your examinations and now you have received your diplomas, which testify to all to whom it may concern that you are capable and qualified for fulfilling all the duties of the trained nurse.

In these three years you have changed. You have acquired and developed a new power and attributes which make you more fitted to take up the responsibilities of life.

The diploma will be your passport into the new domain which you are about to enter. For a time at least, until your reputation is established, it will be your only recommendation and dependence. When people find out your good qualities as women, and your abilities as nurses, they will not think so much about your diplomas.

Besides being an evidence of your training and ability, your diploma will be an admission card to the various organizations for advancing and improving the science and art of nursing, of which I trust your duty to yourselves and to the world will prompt you to take advantage. Add your mite to the ever-increasing sum of knowledge, and make the world a little better for your living in it. The science of nursing is still in its infancy. We are only on the borderland of what good nursing is to be. The people are still largely ignorant of its first principles. There are wide fields open to you for cultivation and advancement.

The hospital which has given you your training expects you to do your part in this uplifting work. Besides doing your work well in the particular cases under your care, it expects you to be factors of education in every home you enter, and in every association of which you become a part.

Every home you leave ought to know more about getting well and keeping well than when you entered it. Every association to which you belong should obtain some benefit from your experience and wisdom.

The people are interested today as never before in hygiene, eugenics and the prevention of disease. They will know you have been trained and at one of the fountain springs that opens the door to the knowledge of these things. They will expect that you know somethings and can do some things that will help along in the general uplift.

The first milestone in your professional career only marks the beginning of your life work. The diploma practically cut you adrift from the influence of the hospital. For three years you have worked and studied and nursed the sick and injured under the supervision and advisement of others. From this out you will be thrown on your own resources. The courage that comes from the knowledge of nursing and your ability and tact to use that knowledge aright, will I am very certain enable you to be successful. The hospital has faithfully endeavored to give you that knowledge, and expects you to be efficient in the use of it.

Do not allow yourselves to lose the influence that have been about you in the training school, and continue your studies in all that pertains to the science and art of nursing. Keep yourselves in the forefront of your profession. If possible spend a few months every few years in some hospital or training school, so that you can keep up with the new ideas and new methods in nursing.

Your patients will not be satisfied with anything less than high class modern methods. When you invite the public to rely on your ability and skill in caring for their sick, you must be prepared to give not only the best there is in you but the best there is to give.

To be satisfied with your ministrations they must know you are capable beyond the peradventure of a doubt.

Always keep in mind the ethical principles which underly your profession. You have a human duty to perform. To obtain a livelihood is honorable and praiseworthy, but I am very certain that deep down in your hearts there is a nobler reason for the work you have undertaken. It is, or, it should be, the intense desire to make yourselves serviceable to humanity, to help the needy, to assist in restoring health and comfort to the sick, and to alleviate suffering and sorrow whether in body or mind.

There is no higher calling for a woman in these days than that of trained nurse, whether the profession is sougt as a means to obtain a living or from sentiments of sympathy and the womanly desire to do good. The position is one that fulfills the highest ideals of civilized humanity. Nothing more noble can be conceived than the desire and willingness to lend ones health and strength to the care of those who are unable to care for themselves. If you do your work well and acceptably you will receive the commendation and esteem of grateful hearts as well as the pecuniary reward to which you are entitled.

Do not look upon your patients simply as cases. Always realize they are living human beings with hearts, minds and feelings and that they may be suffering from sorrow, anguish or despair, as well as from bodily injuries and disease. A little conscious sympathy, a kindly word, fitly spoken, will often do wonders in alleviation of their suffering.

There are many things that could be mentioned but time is short. I wish you all success. "Love bless you, Joy crown you, God speed your career."

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The pictures now on exhibition in the art gallery of the Thomas Crane Public Library are representative of the birth dates of three famous artists and their contemporaries. The first date, 1452, is that of the birth of Leonardo da Vinci, and the exhibit of his picture includes a copy of "Mona Lisa" and other originals in the Louvre. One of the most famous of the group is the "Martyrdom of Savonarola," Savonarola having been born in the same year as the artist. The "Virgin of the rocks" and "King Francis I" typify the sincerity and breadth of subject of the painter.

The second date, 1483, marks the birth date of the artist Raphael and the reformer Martin Luther. Raphael has helped to immortalize the great work of Martin Luther by his paintings of the man and his home. Raphael's wonderful imagery of the unknown is expressed in his "Jacob and Rachael" and "St. Michael and the dragon." Both Raphael in the 15th century and Michael Angelo in the 16th century have painted St. Peter's of Rome, and three copies are included in the exhibit.

The third date, 1564, marks the birth date of Michael Angelo, and among the pictures that are representative of that date, are copies of the impressive "Statue of Moses" and the "Erythrean sibyl."

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

Fund Proposed to Encourage New Industries

The first meeting of the Board of Trade since the summer vacation was held Wednesday evening, President Hamilton presiding.

It was announced that Commodore Frank F. Crane, J. S. Swingle and Joseph A. Sedgwick would represent the board as delegates to the seventh annual convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways convention to be held Sept. 22-27.

John F. Scott, NeClario Bros. and the Means & Thatcher Inc., were admitted as members.

FORE RIVER CHANNEL.

Water Front Commissioner Crane explained the situation relative to deepening the channel of the Weymouth Fore river to 24 feet to a width of 400 feet, and of the hearings that had been held before Col. Cragie, the District Officer.

ANNUAL OUTING.

A. L. Whitman told of the annual outing of the Board and of its visit to the several industries of the city.

W. H. Teasdale of the Transportation committee said that the railroad was going to take up the matter of the fall timetable this week and if anyone had any suggestions to make now was the time.

A communication relative to the Woman's Suffrage question was laid on the table.

A communication from the International Trade League requesting its co-operation in obtaining fair treatment for the Germans and for the citizens to remain neutral during the present trouble in Europe, was placed on file.

A communication from Mabel T. Boardman requesting the appointment of committees to solicit funds for the Red Cross association was placed on file.

LOYALTY TO QUINCY.

It was voted that 1000 copies of the address on "Loyalty to Quincy," delivered at the annual banquet by Rev. A. L. Hudson, be printed for distribution. The chairman and secretary were appointed as the committee to have the address printed.

FORE RIVER PUMP.

Joseph L. Whiton spoke at length on the matter of the fire engine pump known as the Fore River pump. He said the patterns, etc., could be bought for $15,000 and that it was simply a case of assembling. That the Fore River company would not manufacture the pumps and that they would not allow it to leave the yards. Mr. Houghton of the company had informed him and showed him a letter from Chief Kenyon of New York to the effect that if it did what was claimed for it. he would order 20 or 25. That Philadelphia wanted some of them, and that Mayor Curley of Boston had promised to order engines, or pumps. We want that industry located in Quincy and it was simply a case of money. The other concerns that had sought capital in Quincy were no good.

It would require capital of $50,000 at least to start the concern.

Edward P. Powers said what Quincy needed was new industries and a concern like this would advertise Quincy all over the country. He hoped efforts would be made to retain it here.

Frank F. Crane told of his efforts in other cases to raise money and said that there was no trouble but what money could be obtained from the Old Colony Trust Co., if they were shown that there was a good prospect of orders and that it was a solid business.

Joseph L. Whiton replied that the machine must be demonstrated in New York first. It had already done at Manchester and Salem more than claimed for it, but it could not be taken to New York until $15,000 was planked down to the Fore River Corp. It seemed to him the Fore River Corp. were acting a little strangely in the matter. He would like to have Mr. Houghton come before the Board and explain.

It was voted that the matter be referred to the Committee on New Industries and Mr. Whiton, who would have Mr. Houghton meet and explain to the committee.

NEW MEMBERS.

A long talk by the President followed on the question of new members, and the campaign which the Board had started for a membership of 500 before the end of the year. To further this object it was voted to remit the initiation fee for the remainder of the year.

During the discussion Joseph L. Whiton asked what Board of Trade could do for a new industry other than give its moral support. Continuing he said, "If the Board of Trade wants to start something the thing to do is to have a fund so that the Board of Trade can help a new industry get a foothold by paying its taxes for a few years. That would be of some assistance. That he did not believe, as some did, that when a new industry located here it was wise to soak them all possible for taxes."

President Hamilton said with a membership of 1000 that it could have a fund of $5,000 to use at any time.

Reuben Grossman said that he believed with Mr. Whiton, and that if a fund was started they could put L. Grossman & Son down for a contribution of $100.

Joseph L. Whiton said that he would be one of 100 to contribute $25 each, and the President said he would be another.

A rising vote of thanks was then given L. Grossman & Son for the offer of a contribution.

The question of more members was again taken up and it was voted to hold a special meeting at Colonial hall Sept. 16, to which members would invite their friends. The meeting was given in charge of the Membership committee.

The meting then adjoruned.

Many long time friends and relatives attended. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy, and music was by the regular choir which sang the plain Gregorian chant. There was a profusion of floral remembrances. Burial was in the family lot in St. Mary's cemetery.

STORE BREAK.

Boys are thought to be responsible for breaking and entering the store of Remick Bros., on Hancock street last night. The break was discovered this morning. Entrance is thought to have been gained through a rear cellar window, after which a way was forced into the main store. The quantity of goods taken and their value is an open question.

OLDPORT, MAINE.

Miss Ruth Ambrose, representing the Board of Trade at Oldport, Me., is in town today delivering circulars among business houses and residents to introduce the city of Oldport, famous in song and story. The circular after giving a brief history of the city, states that finding itself slipping into oblivion the city has waked up and proposes to place itself on the map once more. It asks you to give the old city some thought and that perhaps you may find there your ideal for a summer home.

OFFICE OPENED BY UNCLE SAM

Marine War Risk Insurance Bureau In Operation

NEW ADJUNCT OF THE NAVY

Objections of Big Shipping Concerns to Placing Fleets Under American Flag Are Overcome—Government to Control $10,000,000 Company Which Will Buy or Build Frieght Vessels

Washington, Sept. 3.—Uncle Sam's marine war risk insurance bureau, designed to inspire confidence in American shippers and aid American trade expansion, is open for business today at the treasury department. President Wilson signed the act creating the bureau yesterday, and last night Secretary McAdoo announced the appointment of W. C. Delanoy of New York, an underwritting insurance expert, as director of the bureau.

Delanoy opened an office today ready to insure American ships and American cargoes in American ships. His bureau is under Assistant Secretary Peters.

Administration plans as to the merchant marine also took definite form in other directions. At a conference between Secretary Daniels and members of the naval affairs and merchant marine committees of the house it was decided to press one measure for the obtaining of a government-owned fleet of ships.

Chairman Alexander of the merchant marine committee reported favorably to the house the bill providing for the organization of a $10,000,000 company controlled by the government which will buy or build freight carrying vessels.

It was decided at the conference to amend this bill to allow the ships built or purchased by the company to be utilized by the navy if necessary.

An executive order suspending certain sections of the navigation laws, as is authorized under the registry bill passed last week, will be issued.

This and the signing of the war risk bill removes objections of various big shipping companies to placing their fleets under the American flag, and such concerns as the United Fruit company, the Standard Oil company, the United States Steel corporation and the Dollar Steamship company are expected to make applications. These companies alone would add 200 steamers to the American merchant marine.

AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE

Mount Washington to Pass Into Hands of the Government

Lakeport, N. H., Sept. 3.—Mt. Washington is the nation's property at last. The government and the owners, after two years of negotiating, have agreed upon the purchase price, the foresters are satisfied with the terms, and the forest reservation commission will at once authorize the transaction.

This is by all odds the most important purchase that the government has made in connection with the White Mountain national forest establishment, both from a sentimental and from an economic standpoint.

Scenically, it is the grandest part of the mountain country, and the Mecca of all tourists to the region. Economically, also, it is of great consequence, for here there are still standing considerable bodies of original forest, and three New England rivers draw important tributaries from this fountain head.

Austrian Centre Penetrated and Wings Crumpled

RUSSIA'S LOSSES ARE HEAVY

Claim, However, That They Are Far Less Than Those of the Enemy—Two Army Corps Defeated by Germans In Eastern Prussia—Movement to Take Berlin Delayed Until Austrians Have Been Disposed Of St. Petersburg, Sept. 3.—The Austrian army has been completely crushed. News from the front, where the general battle has been in progress for eight days, is most faverable to Russia.

Lemburg, the capital of Austrian Galicia, is now held by the Russians. The Austrian centre has been penetrated by a superior Russian force and the wings are now being crumpled back upon their outer lines.

Official dispatches from Grand Duke Nicholas tell of a sweeping victory in the bloodiest battle of modern times. The Russian losses have been very large, it is admitted. But it is stated they are far less than those sustained by Austria. Entire brigades of Austrians have been completely annihilated. Among their dead are some of their highest rank officers.

It is stated that while the fighting continues, and will probably continue for several more days, the situation is most favorable to the Russian arms. With Lemburg held by the Russians and the Austrian centre penetrated, the Austrians will have great difficulty withdrawing to new positions and their ranks are so badly demoralized that it will be very difficult to reform them into an effective fighting force.

The Russian offensive has been centred on the Austrian lines and enormous re-enforcements have been hurried to fill the gaps in the first offensive line. Because of this there has been a temporary halt to the proceedings in eastern Prussia. Positive denial is made, however, that any of the territory already gained has been abandoned.

Two distinct Russian armies are operating in Prussia. The first moved from Kovno against Koenigsberg and Allenstein. The second is operating from Poland toward Thorn and Grandenz.

While the German lines have stiffened and the force opposing the Russians has been greatly increased, it is still insisted in the reports from the front that it will be impossible to check the Russian advance when the orders are given to proceed. But until the Austrian resistance is completely crushed there will be no general assault on the intrenched German position.

Another sweeping success over the Austrians is reported, supplementing those of the victories at Lemberg and near the Russian Poland frontier. The war office announces that the Russian left wing, operating from its position on the Dniester, captured a supposedly impregnable Austrian position that was heavily garrisoned.

The official announcement states that the Russians charged the Austrian position at the point of the bayonet and swept over the intrenchments, completely routing the Austrian troops. Five thousand Austrians were left dead on the field. The Russians captured thirty-two big guns and more than 1000 prisoners, including the Austrian general in command. As a result, the Russian left is now cooperating with the centre, and the retreat of the Austrians is seriously menaced.

The general staff announces that the Austrian Fifteenth division was completely routed near Lustchoff on Aug. 28, and that 100 officers and 4000 soldiers were taken prisoners.

The Russian general staff admitted that two army corps, operating in eastern Prussia, have been defeated by the Germans there. In the official report it is set forth as follows:

"Two army corps operating in eastern Prussia have been repulsed by a superior German force and have sustained severe losses. This, however, is unimportant because it has been from the very inception of this war the aim of the general staff to crush completely the Austrian power in order that the way will be cleared for a straight march on Berlin.

"The operations against Austria are continuing with the best results. Three entire armies are engaged along a battle front that extends from Dniester river to Russian Poland.

"Already many thousands of Austrian prisoners have been taken. Whole regiments have been surrounded by Russian cavalry and forced to surrender.

"The operations in East Prussia, while subordinated to the general campaign to crush the Austrian resistance, will be continued in considerable force. The fortress of Koenigsberg is now completely invested and a part of the city is held by the Russians. The Germans have been very heavily re-enforced and are now in great strength all along the lines of their fortifications. Despite this fact, however, the march on Berlin will be begun just as soon as the Austrian army has been annihilated."

The Playwright of St. Petersburg

A Story of the Russian Revolution

By EUNICE BLAKE

The chief of police in St. Petersburg called one of his most efficient men into his private office and said to him:

"Vronsky, there is a plot hatching to assassinate the grand duke. We have but a trifle of information about it, but on what we have we must build the rest. To do this we need to proceed with the utmost caution. The name of Peter Alexandrovitch has been given us, but merely as a suspect. I wish you to set a watch upon him, note who goes to see him and whom he goes to see. Intercept his mail, but do not retain it. After having examined it reseal it and pass it on, but be careful to leave no traces of having opened it."

The chief then gave his deputy the address of the suspected man and sent him forth on his work.

Vronsky hired a room opposite Alexandrovitch's house. Alexandrovitch's name was down on the police lists as a playwright. Every morning by 9 o'clock he was in his study, which was on the second floor, working at his plays. Vronsky, whose room was a story lower than the study, could only see the playwright's head, though his desk was close beside the window.

Sometimes Alexandrovitch would move about the room or appear to shift something before him on his desk, but Vronsky could not see what he was doing, only that he was in motion. At other times Alexandrovitch would sit perfectly still, his eyes bent down on his desk without the slightest movement. Vronsky could understand why he should move about the room or at his desk, but not why he should sit perfectly still. He referred the matter to a theatrical man, who said that usually a play was made by first laying down what is called the scenario—that is, the story. Some playwrights use dummy figures on a miniature stage while making the scenario, and when they have finished it they write the dialogue. It was suggested to Vronsky that Alexandrovitch when moving at his desk was making his scenario and when still was engaged in writing the dialogue of his plays.

Vronsky gave orders at the postoffice that Alexandrovitch's mail be returned for examination. A letter thus intercepted contained a statement that the suspect had been working for several days on the scenario of a play and that he would spend the balance of the week in putting in the dialogue. The watcher had noticed that his man had been active at his desk, and for the next few days he was remarkably quiet, sitting for hours at a time without apparent motion, though several times he turned his head from the window. On each of these occasions the motion was followed by a lady coming to the window to change the curtain to let in or cut off light, as required.

It did not seem to Vronsky that there was any doubt that Alexandrovitch was, during the day at least, following his vocation as playwright. But this had nothing to do with any secret work he might be doing. Besides the official, having been ordered to watch the suspect, remained at his post. One day he was sent for by his chief, who asked him if he had seen Alexandrovitch the day before.

"I did," was the reply. "He sat writing at a window of his house most of the day."

"Are you sure?"

"I saw him with my eyes."

The chief looked puzzled. "I have information that he was seen in Moscow yesterday," he said. "He was disguised, but was recognized through his disguise."

"Then he must have been in two places at once."

"Did you see him about noon?"

"I did. When I went to dinner he was writing at his desk."

"H'm!"

"Was he seen in Moscow at that hour?"

"My informant reports that he saw him there."

"Can you rely on your informant?"

"That is the question. We never know when we hire a spy that he does not enter our service for the purpose of gaining information for the revolutionists."

"Do you doubt that I am true to his majesty's interests?"

"I have perfect confidence in you."

"Then have a care how you tell your secrets to whoever has told you that he saw Peter Alexandrovitch in Moscow yesterday. I swear to you that just before I went to dinner yesterday—I go at half past 12—I saw a lady, likely the suspect's wife, come to the window, pull the shade partly down—for the sun had come around to shine in at the window—then turn, put her arms around his neck and kiss him. I left them in that position."

The chief seemed greatly perplexed. After some thought he asked:

"Does Alexandrovitch go out often?"

"No; he goes out very seldom. He seems to be very busy. I have intercepted several letters addressed to him from managers asking why he had not finished work he is doing for them, and letters from him to parties saying that he cannot at present contract to do any more work, since he is unable to finish what he has in hand."

"Have you come near him?"

"Yes. One afternoon when he went out I followed him, as I always do when he leaves his home. He walked a short distance, then turned suddenly and passed me as near as I am to you. He went back to his house and in a few minutes came out again with a package in his hand for the post, which he appeared to have forgotten. I possessed myself of it and found a play which, I judged, he had been revising."

"You had better make some excuse to enter his house and see him there. But be careful that he does not suspect you to be shadowing him for the government. That will do. You may go."

The next day Vronsky, wearing the badge of a building inspector, went into Alexandrovitch's house, pretending that work was being done on a sewer beneath it and he wished to examine the walls to see if they were cracked. He saw the playwright sitting at his desk with a number of chess men before him, each piece bearing a label. They were set on a piece of cardboard, on which was drawn the outline of a stage. Alexandrovitch was reading from some manuscript before him and now and again would move one of the pieces off or on the stage.

The next afternoon Vronsky went to his chief and reported that he had been in the suspect's house and seen him working on a play.

"Have you seen him today?" asked the chief.

"Yes. He was sitting quietly at his window writing and smoking, as he often does when at work. Why do you ask?"

"Because I have just received a telegram that he is in Moscow."

The speaker handed Vronsky a dispatch which he read with every evidence of surprise.

"Whose signature is this?" he asked.

"One whom I trust as implicitly as I trust you."

"But may he not be mistaken in the person?"

"He is never mistaken. He is the best sleuth in the government service."

"I will go at once to Alexandrovitch's house, enter it and see with my own eyes that he is there."

"Wait a moment."

A telegram was laid before the chief, who took it up, tore off the cover and read:

The grand duke has been assassinated by a bomb.

It required some time before the recipient of this important news could recover from the shock. Then he said:

"Go! Enter the house of Alexandrovitch unannounced, go to his study and put your hand on him and let me know the result at once."

Vronsky darted out of the office and in a few minutes was at Alexandrovitch's house. He attempted to open the door, but found it locked. He listened for a moment, but heard no sound. Something told him that the place was deserted. He ran across the street and looked up at the study window. There sat the playwright at his work. Vronsky ran back and hammered at the door loud enough to be heard in any part of the house.

No response.

Smashing a window, Vronsky effected an entrance and ran upstairs. He met no one and made his way unopposed to the study. Alexandrovitch was at his desk, but took no notice of the intruder. Vronsky went up to him, put his hand on his shoulder and knew that the figure was inanimate.

A further examination revealed the fact that it was of straw, the face wax. The head was set on a pivot and could be turned by pulling on a cord.

Vronsky ran back to his chief and reported how he had been deceived. He was informed that government officials in Moscow had discovered that Alexandrovitch was the leader of the conspiracy that had resulted in the grand duke's death. He had contrived to keep the attention of the St. Petersburg police fixed on him in the capital by means of the dummy while he was spending enough of his time in Moscow, disguised, to direct the operations. But he had made good his escape.

Good Form

Dinner Calls.

Those who have been invited to a dinner party, whether an acceptance or regret was sent, should call on the hostess within a couple of weeks. Eight o'clock in the evening is considered the proper time. The lady and her escort send in a card apiece for each lady in the house, while the man adds one of his own for each man in the family.

On entering the lady does not remove her hat, but the man leaves his hat, topcoat and cane in the hall. The conversation should be impersonal, to talk of people is not in good taste, subjects of general interest should be discussed, and no reference should be made by the callers as to this being a "dinner call," rather leaving it to be implied that the hostess has made herself so charming and gracious that her personality prompts the courtesy.

Those who call in such formal fashion have an opportunity to make themselves either very agreeable or the reverse, and as agreeable people are always in request it will be the very best form and the "proper thing" to keep the conversation to a point that when it is time to leave those receiving will be quite truthful in expressing the wish, "I hope you will soon come again," a thing that is often said without being meant.

In the course of the call it is a pleasant way to say something nice about having enjoyed the delightful dinner so recently. A caller may say: "We were so delighted to meet Miss B. at your dinner lately. It gave the opportunity to renew an old time acquaintance," or something of the sort, so giving the hostess to understand that her hospitality was thoroughly appreciated.

Business Manners.

To the business woman the men in the office are men, of course, but with a difference—just the difference that the fact that she is working with them must make.

She will not be the less polite or the less pleasant, but she will be a little more reserved. In the sanctuary of her own home she may rightly unbend, but in the arena of business she must keep her armor of dignity and discretion. At home she may choose her men associates. In business she cannot, and her colleagues as well as her employers are the gift of necessity, not of free will.

She should remember that in an office her sex is, as it were, on trial, and by her behavior it stands or falls in the eyes of others.

Even the pretty license allowed her in the social world because of her sex is not for her here. It would be as much out of place as a ball dress in a kitchen. Yet the ordinary courtesy that every man should pay to a girl she should expect, though if it is denied her she must not always insist upon it beyond the barest limits of decent behavior.

In short, she must learn never to obtrude her sex upon others and never to forget it herself, and at first this is not easy.

But in time she will find it quite natural to assume her little business manner.

Tango Prizes.

Tea and coffee sets and services for iced drinks compose some of the more elaborate prizes for dancers. The odd looking little leather cases known as tango party boxes form another type of coveted prizes. Outside they are of alligator, morocco or suede in various dark tones, and they are lined with pale tinted satin or soft kid. They are finished in silver or gold, with key, lock and clasps to match the interior fittings of change purse, powder box, cologne bottle and mirror.

These party boxes and other vanity cases and purses when used for dance prizes for women are paired with cigarette and match cases and silver mounted or gold knobbed sticks for the men, and when bracelet watches are given a man's watch and fob completes the reward for the winning couple.

Borrowed Books.

To have a book that one has lent returned in a thumbed and dog eared condition makes you "see red," more especially if you afterward find that it has been handed round among the friends of the borrower. It's such a cheek to lend a book belonging to another person!

It is bad form to treat a book badly, no matter whether it is yours or not. Even with a library book don't turn down pages. It is so easy to mark one's place in some other way.

Serving Tea to Men.

Afternoon tea is often very much enjoyed by men, and the arrival of half a dozen or more masculines gives pleasure to the ladies assembled. Men usually like tea very hot and rather strong. Many prefer sugar and cream to lemon, and these should be provided. Salted nuts, bonbons, mints and olives with the sandwiches may well make refreshments the better enjoyed.

Lace Tea Cosies.

There are attractive tea cosies made of filet lace, mounted over silk and padded heavily under the silk. Pink is the color usually of the silk, but any desired color can be used to match the other fittings of the tea table.

MISS FORETIER HAS RETURNED

No Truth to Story of Arrest As a Spy

Miss Jane Foretier the Wollaston Park young lady whom it was reportted several weeks ago had been arrested and was being held in Germany as a French spy, arrived in New York on Wednesday, and is expected to reach her home in Quincy some time this week.

She was in communication with her home by telephone Wednesday evening, and said that she intended to remain in New York until she got rested.

The story which received wide circulation that she had been arrested as a spy she branded as false. She said that she was in Germany July 25, going from there to Naples where she arrived Aug. 17

She further said that she had no trouble whatever, except being short of money. At no time during her trip was she molested, and could not account for the story that she had been arrested as a spy.

As soon as she could get passage she started for home and was very glad to get back to America.

President Whiton of the City Council received word from his mother on Wednesday to the effect that she had sailed that day on the Creole for New York and that the steamship would arrive in New York early next week, She left London minus all of her baggage, but was only too glad to get away under any conditions.

Unless definite information concerning the whereabouts of Fred Moir of Norfolk Downs is received within a few days the State department at Washington may be asked to institute an inquiry for him.

Mr. Moir left the Phillipines early enough to reach the United States on Sept. 15. He was to come overland, via the Trans-Siberian railroad, and if he left at the time he expected to, must have reached central Europe about the time it was in the first grip of the war.

Mr. Moir is well known in this city. He was the honor man of the Class of 1903 at Adams Academy and a sumna cum laude man at Harvard in 1907. He was appointed to the civil service shortly after and was sent to Manila His five years' service expired several months ago and he decided to come home and engage in business. He was a brother of the late John Moir, a former councilman.

Mrs. George Harmon (nee Helen Rhines,) the daughter of Mrs. Effie Rhines of Miller Stile road, was one of the party of Americans who made their escape from the congestion and delays of Italy by way of the Cretic, and sailed from Liverpool last week for Boston. John Clair Minot has written a very interesting account of the flight under date of Liverpool, Aug. 22, which was printed in the Boston Herald. Some parts of the letter are reproduced.

This is the story of the way in which a few war-beset American tourists got from Genoa to Liverpool, on their way toward the home land that never looked half so good to them as it does now.

But to go back to the beginning—if I may be pardoned for giving this narrative a personal turn. When I walked into the American consulate at Genoa early on the morning of Aug. 11, Consul-General John E. Jones was looking through a big stack of letters from stranded Americans at interior points, begging for help and especially for information as to the prospects of getting home. Like hundreds of others, I had been a daily caller for a week and he knew me, though he was the busiest man in Italy, as well as the most patient, courteous and cheerful.

"Will you help me out?" he cried. "We are being buried alive and must depend largely on volunteers to make up the office force."

I responded with alacrity, and so without ceremony I entered the consular service of the United States.

Well, the days passed. The crowd of Americans increased, and no authority came from Washington, or from the ambassadors in London or Rome, to relieve the unhappy situation by chartering the steamers. The options would soon expire. Italy might be drawn into the war any day. All the consul-general could tell the crowd was that he had money to his credit for the relief of those in dire straits, and that sooner or later the government would get them home regardless of their ability to pay their passage.

This was very reassuring as far as it went, and the tireless, thoughtful consul-general was attending personally to hundreds of cases daily; but it was not government charity that most of us wanted so much as a chance to get back home to business and to school.

There were official reports from the American consuls in Switzerland of 18,000 Americans there. There were known to be 600 in Venice and 400 in Florence. There were already 3000 registered in Genoa, the port on which the others must depend, though some were escaping at Naples. And the only immediate prospect of a steamer to America lay in the plans of a second committee, this time headed by John T. Blodgett of Grand Rapids, who planked down $75,000 in gold to bind a contract of $170,000 for the Princepessa Mafalda, a fine boat of the South American service.

Consul-General Jones was able to give assurance that the second committee would be fair and businesslike in its methods, but the fare must of necessity be high, the time of sailing was very uncertain, and the boat could take only 600, including its steerage capacity.

So it came about that two or three of us set out to investigate the possibility of getting to England on the Cretic, which it was said would sail Aug. 14. This White Star liner which has been in the service between Italian ports and Boston in recent years, was in the harbor for its annual layoff for repairs.

A committee of British subjects, of which the Rev. T. G. Pollard of Surry was the leading spirit prevailed on their government to use it as a means of getting home, since it was not possible to get there by land. But at the British consulate and the White Star offices they told us that the Cretic would take only British subjects and that Great Britain wanted fewer Americans instead of more. That avenue of escape seemed closed.

But a few of us had met the Rev. Mr. Pollard at our hotel and were indebted to him for many kindnesses. He was full of sympathy and encouragement. He felt that there was going to be room for a few Americans on the Cretic, and he got busy in our behalf. His energetic efforts were one of the influences that brought from London the cabled modification of the order that only British subjects could go on the Cretic.

The good news spread like fire. To be sure, it meant a steerage passage; there was no certainty of getting home from England; there was the hazard of sailing on the ship of a nation which other nations were at war. But England was itself home, as compared with Italy. Our little party jumped at the chance. Others at other hotels eagerly clutched their American passports and rushed to the White Star office.

LEAVING GENOA.

Thus it came that when the Cretic steamed out of Genoa harbor late in the evening of Thursday, Aug. 13, there were 80 Americans, of whom 25 were men, who leaned over the rail with the hundreds of British passengers to watch the ancient city—with its terraced lights and the moon rising beyond its hills—disappear from sight. We had climbed up the long companionway with no little trepidation late in the afternoon.

OLD GRANITE MANUFACTURER

Thomas H. McDonnell Passes Away Today

Thomas H. McDonnell, for many years one of Quincys prominent granite manufacturers, passed away this noon at his home at 65 School street, aged 66 years.

THOMAS H. McDONNELL.

Mr. McDonald was a son of the late Patrick McDonnell and has made Quincy his home for the greater part of his life. After receiving his education he entered the granite manufacturing business with his father upon the death of whom he with his brother the late John J. McDonnell continued the business for many years under the name of McDonnell & Sons having large cutting plants in Quincy and Barre, Vt. and branch offices at Buffalo and Albany, N. Y., and Indianapolis, Ind.

Mr. McDonell retired from active business in the granite industry a number of years ago, after which he became interested in a number of business enterprises, being at one time a director in the old Quincy & Boston Street Railway, as well as being interested financially in several other business enterprises. He was also one of those interested in the formation of the Quincy Quarry Railroad being the first president.

His health failed him several years ago when he retired from all business cares. He has been in poor health for several years and of late went about but little.

He was affiliated with several of the fraternal organizations including Quincy Council Knights of Columbus. He leaves a widow.

NEW POPE IS ELECTED

Honor Falls on Archbishop of Bologna

Rome, Sept. 3, Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa, archbishop of Bologna, was chosen Holy Father this morning. He will be known as Pope Benedict 15.

Della Chiesa is the name of an Italian family, the members of which live in all parts of the world. Santonino Della Chiesa lives with his family at 34 Rodman street, South Quincy.

When seen this noon he was carving a choice piece of Westerly granite at the yard of Mayor Miller. He said as far as he knew there was no relationship between Pope Benedict and himself, although in his 21 years in this country he may have lost track of the family.

His sister is of the Catholic sisterhood and at the College at Lake Lughano where she is a teacher, she is known as Sister Mariano. Santonino was born in Milan and Pope Benedict in Genoa. An effort will be made to trace their connection.

QUINCY DAY TODAY AND EVERY DAY

A New England City With the Life and Growth of Western Cities

Well Advertised Today All Over New England

That QUINCY is an ideal city in which to have a home, as well as a city possessing many advantages that appeal to one looking to locate a manufacturing industry, is being set forth all over New England today as never was before.

It was a bright thought of Herman S. McIntire, when he conceived the idea of placing before the world, through the local papers, as well as through the medium of the metropolitan newspapers, some of the many things that make QUINCY an ideal city, not only for business industries, but for a home.

Broaching his idea to the business men in and about City Square he found financial support was readily forthcoming, and drawing from a long experience as an advertising man, he has produced today an advertisement both striking and convincing. The advertisement is one which will immediately attract the notice of every person who scans any Boston newspaper today.

The most striking thing about the advertisement is the word QUINCY, which stands forth in large black bold type while in smaller type is a general invitation for people to come here and live, in a live city of 40,000 live people.

Accompanying this general invitation are thirteen separate lines, each beginning with the word QUINCY, which set forth in a concise and convincing manner the reasons why Quincy is all that is claimed for it.

It will be noticed that no names are signed to the advertisement showing that no one party has any axe to grind, but that it is the work of the business men, who are the people back of the movement. What QUINCY needs is more such united efforts to build up the city, from which good results are bound to come.

It was Rev. D. M. Wilson a former pastor of QUINCY who said:

"QUINCY seems the one name congenial to the spirit and history of this locality. Deep-rooted in chivalrous norman life, transplanted here with the first settlers, associated with so much that is fine and high in many who here bore it, and in utterance full and dignified, it tastes of the soil, it seems almost the natural product of environment, and not a title fixed by formal vote. Honored at home, abroad revered, it is a distinction to be called OF QUINCY."

"The more the name of Col. John Quincy is scrutinized the more he is exalted. For 21 successive years, that is from 1719 to 1740, he was returned to the House of Representatives with unfailing regularity. His personality, his character and judgment, and his sturdy provincial patriotism so impressed his fellow representatives that they elected him Speaker of the House from 1727 to 1741, a period of 14 years. A tribute from town and Province that stamps him as no common man."

Shall we quote from Rev. A. L. Hudson's admirable address on "Loyalty," at the annual banquet of the Board of Trade:

"Every city has its own peculiar advantages and charms; and QUINCY is first of all a city of homes. In this respect it meets a need which is growing every year, in response to a wide spread movement in American life. Up to about the middle of the 19th century the population of the United States were chiefly living in the country. Then began a rapid drift toward the commercial centres until our larger cities population became so congested and so mixed that city homes no longer seemed desirable to the more prosperous of our native population.

German war strategy is exemplified in this picture. It shows observers on ladders with brushwood screens using their field glasses to detect the enemy. From a distance this ruse appears like a tree. This method is employed by the Germans in their advance into France. It is necessary that they know the exact location of the allies in their shifting positions in order to progress as rapidly toward Paris as they have.

FATAL FALL FROM A TREE

Gilbert M. Miller, Former Expressman, the Victim

Gilbert M. Miller, brother of Mayor John L. Miller, while picking apples from a tree in his yard on Kent street shortly before noon today fell from a ladder and sustained injuries from which he died almost instantly.

Mr. Miller's fall is thought to have followed a dizzy spell, from which he has been a sufferer the past four years.

The fall was witnessed by several people and they rushed to the spot and carried the unconscious man to hns home. Physicians were summoned but life was extinct when they arrived.

Mr. Miller probably died from a fractured neck since several bones were broken. He fell a distance of about ten feet and is thought to have struck on his head.

Mr. Miller was best known perhaps as an expressman, which business he carried on for many years. It was in November, 1872, that he started an express business between Quincy and Boston under the name of Millers' Express, which was later changed to the name of Abbott & Millers' Express, and with the exception of eight years when he was engaged in teaming granite he steadily engaged in the express business, until within a few years when he retired from the general expressing business.

Since that time Mr. Miller has been engaged in the general job wagon business, his line of work consisting largely of furniture moving, although he has devoted some of his time to landscape gardening.

While engaged in the general express business, his firm was the first to adopt the use of automobile trucks to do their work between Quincy and Boston. During all of the years which he was engaged in the general expressing business, as well as the moving business, he established the reputation of being a competent and careful moyer.

Mr. Miller came to Quincy from Cambridge upwards of 35 years ago. He was a brother of Mayor John L. Miller and was the father of Charles W. Miller and J. Gilbert Miller who were for many years associated with their father in business who with his wife survive him, also two daughters, Mrs. L. H. H. Johnson of Milton and Mrs. George D. Follett of Putnam street, Quincy.

ENDORSED BY MAYOR CURLEY

Mayor Curley appealed by letter to Senator Weeks and Congressman Gallivan on Thursday not to let the River and Harbors bill be lost in the shuffle of adjournment. In his letter he called attention to the items for appropriations for the Weymouth Fore river as well as the appropriations for the harbor of Boston and other cities of the commonwealth.

He further said, "I am duly appreciative of the weariness that has resulted from the continued session of Congress during the last two years, and the important character of the legislation that it has provided, but I sincerely trust that for the welfare of Boston and New England, a quorum can be maintained in the House and Senate until the River and Harbor bill is passed."

DOCKING ABSENT CONGRESSMEN.

Years ago in the various legislatures it was customary to pay the representatives so much per day. As the country grew in wealth, this seemed rather picayunish to our expanding statesmen, and yearly salaries are now more commonly paid. Also the large element of legislators who neglect their public duties were against a system that sometimes docked them personally for absences.

The small attendance in Congress has become such an evil that more than a third of the members have recently been summoned back to Washington, and a vote passed for suspension of pay in case of absence.

If a man takes a job for a private corporation, he expects to give up most of his time to it. But when he works for the government as a congressman he seems to think he may spend a large share of his time on his private business, thus enriching himself with two salaries at one time. It is a wrong view of public service. The Congressmen who stick to their desks and are recorded on all roll calls, may find themselves more popular than those that spend so much time out on the cross-roads buttonholing the voters.

FOOD SCARCITY.

A wholesaler of grain was asked a few days ago, what was the effect of war on his business. He said it was much like the case of a man who had a large and plentiful succession of highballs. Everyone in the trade was flushed and excited. Consumer is bidding against consumer, forcing the prices up against each other.

He predicted, if the war continued, that very high prices on food stuffs would be seen before spring. But he would not advise the average consumer to buy ahead of his needs at present prices.

It is certainly a tremendous misfortune that the war comes just as the autumn season is starting. Were it spring, a campaign could at once be organized to persuade farmers to plough up and seed down every available acre. Every man with a back yard could be urged to grow some kind of food supply.

There is a plenty of food for our people, and something to spare. Many feel that the doors should be closed against exports while prices are high. Also that liberal exportations will tend to prolong the war. Still, if exports are shut down, the women and children and other non-combatants of Europe would be the ones who would feel the pinch first. The soldiers will be fed at any cost.

While there will be no famine here, the necessities of life may cost very high before spring. Poor people will suffer. The public will do well to make as much use as possible of the less expensive foods, like potatoes and other vegetables, fish, canned goods, etc. Our grandparents knew what appetizing dishes could be made out of simple salt fish, which many people despise nowadays.

It is none too soon to begin a campaign for the enlargement of our food supply next summer. Farmers in the more southerly climates should stuff every acre full for early spring delivery. Everything eatable will be salable next year, and at good and probably high prices.

The dear girls are buying the war editions of the papers so as to get the latest news about the fashions.

Your political friend now comes along and asks you to start a movement to force him against his will to be a candidate.

After going on a vacation for his health, the thin man usually finds he has lost five or six pounds.

One of the most approved methods of getting extra vacation at this time of year, is to take out a membership in the Hay Fever Associations.

As they only killed off 10,000 to 20,000 people in Europe yesterday, it is called a very quiet and peaceful kind of a day.

INNER FORT HAS FALLEN TO GERMANS

French Troops Retire From La Fere After Vicious Battle

CAPITAL OF FRANCE ENTRENCHED FOR SIEGE

Amiens Also Occupied by Invaders Several Days Ago, but Actual News of Event Has but Just Become Public—London Disheartened at News That Valley of the Somme Is Abandoned to Invaders—Germans Swarming Toward Paris In Tremendous Columns—Pau's Soldiers Forced to Retire From Field They Gained So Brilliantly—French Government Hurriedly Removes to Bordeaux—Herrick Stays In Paris

London, Sept. 4.—The great German army that has been smashing its way through the lines of the allies to the north of Paris has at last won its way to the forts that guard the French capital.

Already the guns that have been rumbling behind the cavalry and infantry are being set up in favorable positions to batter through the steel and concrete of the Paris forts just as they battered the strongholds of Liege and Namur.

Such is the general opinion held in London, despite the fact that no confirmation of fighting at the forts has as yet been received.

Everything heard in London bears out the assumption. Not until Thursday was it learned that the Germans had marched in triumph through Amiens as long ago as last Monday.

On the same day a force of German cavalry was engaged with British troops in the forest of Compiegne. News of this clash was not received here until Thursday, and it was then supposed that the fighting occurred only a few hours previous.

But Fifty Miles From Paris

Compiegne is but fifty miles distant from Paris. The Germans from the north have been ploughing ahead through the ranks of the allies at the rate of ten miles a day. Since Monday, as no reports of German reverses have been received, they must have advanced thirty miles. The northernmost of the Paris forts is over twenty miles away from the heart of the city. It is nothing beyond the simplest lesson in arithmetic. London has not heard that Paris is now being invested, but it is certain that such is the case.

The departure of the French government officials to Bordeaux is another suspiciously confirmatory fact. They would not abandon the capital until the last moment and it is supposed in London that their hurried leavetaking of their beloved city was not undertaken until it was absolutely certain that nothing could stop the German rush.

Evil tidings poured into London from France throughout the day. The news that the valley of the Somme had been abandoned to the invaders was disheartening.

Then came the most direful story of all, that La Fere had been captured after a vicious fight and that the French had retired from that vital fortress as long ago as last Saturday.

Allies' Defeats Just Known

The discovery that the recent defeats sustained by the allies had happened several days ago roused profound anxiety over the battling that has since occurred.

Northwestern France is today a land of desolation, picturesque but horrible to look upon. North of Paris are swarming the Germans in tremendous columns that seem to stretch beyond the farthest horizon. Cavalry are sweeping through the country, driving ahead of them the disorganized but still valiant remnants of the British, Belgian and French defenders.

Behind the swiftly moving cavalry pours an endless mass of infantry, and behind these, drawn by great traction engines, are rumbling the huge guns from the Krupp works at Essen, the newest and most terrible weapons that man has devised.

Here and there are blackened farms, where revenge has followed the firing of shots from ambush, but firing has not been employed so wantonly in France as it was in Belgium.

Populace Fleeing Paris

Paris itself is a seething hive of industry, with thousands of men working day and night erecting great earth entrenchments between the formidable forts. To the south of the capital stretch interminable lines of fugitives, crowded into trains and automobiles, choking the roads with lumbering vehicles of every description. Thousands are fleeing north and south on foot.

All interest is now concentrated upon the advance of the Germans from the north. Nothing has been heard from the lines in the centre and on the right of the defense, where it is presumed that the allies are falling back slowly or perhaps even holding the German onrush.

But from the north the most heroic efforts of the British, the French and the few thousands of Belgians who fell back with their allies, has been unable to stem the tide of the most tremendous invasion that history has ever known.

Pau Wins and Loses

Confirmation came of the victory of General Pau over the German advance, which was rumored several days ago. At the head of the French who retook Mulhausen in the opening days of the war, he struck the most effective blow against the northern advance since the invaders first trod upon French soil.

Through Saturday and Sunday his men charged again and again at the Tenth army corps and the Imperial Guards, who were in the vicinity of La Guise. The assaults were so persistent and so strenuous that even the vaunted German lines were checked and finally wavered. The French, remembering the battle of Mulhausen, redoubled their efforts and finally the German line broke.

Hundreds of the invaders were driven into the Oise river and throughout Monday the roads leading to the north were crowded with Germans in complete rout. But the advantage that the veteran general had obtained could not be followed up. While his troops were shattering the enemy, the French lines in the centre and at the left were being steadily forced back and at last Pau and his victorious soldiers had to retire from the field they had gained so brilliantly.

The British, after their defeat of a German cavalry column in the forest of Compiegne, abandoned their positions on Monday. The bridges over the Oise river were first blown up, but the latest dispatches direct from Compiegne, dated Monday, state that the appearance of the Germans was hourly expected.

Germans Hold Amiens

Amiens, which has been alternately said to have been occupied by the Germans and held by the allies, is now known to be securely in German hands. A body of Uhlans rode into the undefended city on Sunday. Mayor Figuet received at his offices a deputation from the German army which rode into the city with a white flag. Soon afterwards the mayor announced that the city had been surrounded. He was informed by the Germans that the city officials would be held personally responsible for the good conduct of the citizens and that their lives would be forfeited if a German soldier was killed by snipers.

On Monday the German army passed through the streets of Amiens. The soldiers sang lustily as they trod the streets, roaring out the strains of "Die Wacht am Rhein" and "Deutschland uber Alles" in the thoroughfares which so recently heard "The Marseilles."

Invaders Press On

The invaders did not halt at Amiens. The infantry poured through the streets for hours. Before they passed the town hall, the tri-color had been removed and a German flag was fluttering above their heads.

The French did not fall back toward Paris, but retreated to Picquigny, a small town about eight miles distant from Amiens toward the northwest. They blew up the bridges over the Somme before they left, but the Germans made no effort to pursue them.

The fall of La Fere has been rumored for several days, but nothing definite was learned of the city's fate until Thursday, when London heard that the place had been stormed five days ago. This was the most depressing news of the day, for La Fere is the northernmost of the three strong forts that comprise the inner line of the French defenses of Paris, the line where it was confidently expected the rush of the invaders could be stopped.

HERRICK STAYS IN PARIS

Poincare and Other Government Officials Go to Bordeaux

President Poincare and the members of the French cabinet arrived at Bordeaux and were greeted by cheering crowds. They have established headquarters for the government.

The hotels, boarding houses and private homes are overcrowded with the new arrivals, who, including officials of various grades, number probably 5000.

All the ambassadors and ministers to France, with the exception of the American ambassador, Myron T. Herrick, have left Paris, accompanying the government to Bordeaux. Herrick, in accordance with his wishes and with the sanction of the state department at Washington, remains at the capital.

THE BATTLE OF JEDAR

Servian Report Says Austrians Lost 30,000 In Killed and Wounded

A Servian official statement gives new and fuller details of the battle of Jedar. The Austrian force, it says, was composed of 200,000 men and held a favorable position. By its retreat it admitted defeat. The Austrians left on the field of battle 10,000 dead and more than 20,000 wounded.

"Altogether," continues the statement, "40,000 of the enemy were placed hors du combat. We have sent to the interior more than 4000 men whom we took prisoners and have captured six guns, much ammunition, the material for the construction of a 600-metre bridge and a train."

GERMAN RULER GIVES UP

British Flag Is Now Flying Over Two Samoan Islands

A dispatch from Wellington N. Z., says the governor of New Zealand has received a message stating that the German governor of Samoa has surrendered and that he has been sent with other German prisoners to the Fiji islands.

The landing of British troops in Samoa was carried out with great expedition. The Union Jack was hoisted over German Samoa Aug. 29.

The Samoan islands in the Pacific ocean have been owned jointly by the United States and Germany, each country being in possession of two islands.

GERMANS LOSE ISLANDS

Seven In Asiatic Waters Are Taken by the Japanese

Japanese forces have occupied seven islands about the German province of Kiauchau. Landings were made without resistance and the troops took full possession.

The Kiauchau waters had been heavily mined by the Germans, and mine-sweepers are now engaged clearing all passages for ships. One thousand mines have so far been removed.

It was officially admitted at Tokio that the landing of Japanese troops on Shantung peninsula began Thursday and is progressing successfully.

ADRIATIC MAY SAIL

Liner With Mounted Guns Declared Within Neutrality Rules

The state department at Washington ruled that the White Star liner Adriatic, which arrived in New York with four six-inch guns mounted on her decks, may sail without violating the neutrality regulations of the United States.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Peters wired Collector of the Port Malone to grant permission to the liner to clear, following receipt of the state department's decision.

Her status as a merchant ship was fixed by the joint neutrality board.

"Friendship" In Neutral Port

Washington, Sept. 4.—Secretary of State Bryan was asked:

ADAMS SCHOOL LOT IMPROVED

Contractor Has Made It a Beautiful Spot

One of the most acceptable improvements made this summer on school grounds was the grading of the new Adams school lot, and when the pupils report for the fall term on Tuesday morning a transformation will meet their eyes.

The uneven, rocky grounds which caused over a dozen accidents of minor nature, now resemble a bowling green, and in keeping with the plans of the architect the terraces on the northerly corner of the grounds have been built, a stone wall supporting the tons of filling required.

The work was commenced in July by Michael T. Shea, who was awarded the contract, and over a dozen men were employed in completing the work. Charles Foy was foreman.

The money for the grading was secured after all kinds of expressed dissatisfaction by the parents of the children.

CLAMBAKE OF THE EAGLES

The annual clam bake of John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, at the Squantum aviation field on Labor Day promises to be one of the biggest political affairs ever held in this city. An open invitation is extended to candidates for all offices, regardless of party affiliation, to be present and discuss the reasons why they are in the race. Many have informed President Frank J. Duffy they will attend.

Among them is Charles W. Guy, candidate for re-election, as Councilor. Guy Adams Ham, aspirant for that office on the Republican slate, Richard Olney 2nd, of Dedham, unopposed candidate for the Democratic nomination to Congress, Senator Louis F. R. Langelier, Representatives Michael T. Sullivan and Edward J. Sandberg and others.

The feature of the day will be the ball game between the Eagle's team and the Quincy Point Social Club. Some of the players have not been in uniform since their grammar school days. By special arrangement moving pictures will be taken of the entire program.

LABOR DAY SALE.

In laying out plans for Labor Day one should not forget the great auction sale of house lots on the property on Robertson and Kimball streets, known as West Quincy Terrace. Aside from a band concert which will be given during the day presents to the value of $1,000 will be given away free to those in attendance. One hundred of the most desirable building lots in the city will be auctioned off one at a time, the terms of same being unusually easy. The sale will also continue for three days.

COOLER TODAY.

The thunder and lightning storm at 1 o'clock this morning cleared the air and as a result the weather this morning was much more comfortable. The thunder shower remained over Quincy for a short time but evidently was centered somewhere else, for the lightning flashes were not very vivid and the thunder seemed to be some distance off. An immediate coolness of the air was noticed when the storm broke, and this morning the weather was decidedly cooler. The average temperature Thursday was 86 degrees, the highest point reached being 91 degrees at noon. From then on the temperature dropped gradually, although at 6 o'clock it had not fallen below 82.

QUINCY DAY

"This condition led to a second stage in city building—a fresh migration from the crowded and uncomfortable centers to the freer air and sunshine of suburban life. Of all the cities of the country Boston stands easily the first in the beauty and variety of its many suburbs; and among them all none has so many attractions to offer to the home seeker as our own QUINCY.

"Its diversified area, sloping from wooded hill tops with their ocean view over rolling parks and level downs, to the sweeping shore line of the bay, gives ample scope for each man, according to his taste, to possess the one most desirable building site in all the world.

"The dignity of its traditions, and its wealth of historic incidents and places add a charm which "age cannot wither nor custom stale," and now its transportation facilities which in the past have been a drawback, are being much improved and promise soon to meet all reasonable demands."

QUINCY was named for Col. John Quincy.

QUINCY has the largest shipyard in the country, employing 4,000. Builder of Battleships New Jersey, Rhode Island, Vermont, North Dakota, Rivadavia and Nevada.

QUINCY has quarries of the best granite in the country—QUINCY granite.

QUINCY was 31st in population in State in 1875; 29th in 1880; 27th in 1885; 23d in 1890; 22d in 1895; 21st in 1905; and 20th in 1910. Probably 18th or 19th now.

CHARLES E. UNDERWOOD.

The body of Charles E. Underwood was brought to this city from Lynn on Thursday and funeral services were held from 51 Coddington street, the home of his sister, Miss Julia B. Underwood, for over 50 years a teacher in the Coddington school. Services were conducted by Rev. A. L. Hudson of the First Parish church, and burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

FLOWERS AND VEGETABLES

Children's Gardens Exhibit at City Hall

One does not need to visit the county fairs in order to see an exhibition of beautiful flowers and tempting vegetables for all that is needed today is to visit the Council Chamber at City Hall, where an exhibition is being held of flowers and vegetables raised by Quincy boys and girls.

The exhibition is given under the direction of the Civic Committee of the Quincy Women's Club, and that of today surpasses by far any of the exhibitions of previous years. One hardly realizes what an immense amount of good work this committee is doing in the way of inculcating a thrifty spirit among the children of Quincy. They go about their work in a quiet and unostentations manner and the results obtained are remarkable.

This year in the early spring 2000 children bought seed of the committee of which number 1500 are showing the results of their labor. The seed are obtained from Miss Edna R. Thayer of Worcester, a former school teacher, but now an invalid, who makes a specialty in raising seed for childrens' gardens. These seed are sold to the children for one cent a package so that money consideration does not stand in the way of entering into the competition.

The main idea of the Civic Committee is to inculcate a spirit of thrift among the children, as well as to enable children of poor families to help out the family table. In some cases in the poorer sections of the city, the committee have found that the children have not only raised enough vegetables to supply the family table with fresh vegetables, but in several cases the children have added to the revenue of the family by selling their product. Then again the children are encouraged to work out of doors in gardens, which is a most healthy occupation and gains information that may be of vast assistance to them in later years.

In addition to the exhibition of flowers and vegetables which is given in the Council Chamber at City Hall, there are many gardens throughout the city. At the City Hall exhibition, the committee award blue, red and yellow ribbons for the first, second and third prizes, and a green ribbon for a special prize.

The judges of this exhibit are James Nicol, superintendent of Mt. Wollaston cemetery; William Patterson and Charles J. Anderson, all practical gardeners. They began their work of judging the exhibit shortly before noon, but so extensive was the exhibition that it will be too late to publish today the list of prize winners The complete list however will be published in the Daily Ledger of Satday.

For the gardens, the committee will give cash prizes and as these gardens are scattered all over the city, it has been quite a job to visit them all. These prize winners have not been fully awarded as yet, but will also be published Saturday.

Few doubtless realize the large amount of work that has devolved upon the Civic Committee in conducting this branch of the work of the Womens club, and it seems that it is of so much importance that it might be classed as part of the educational system of the city and that eventually it will be conducted under the direction of the School Committee.

At the present time the work is being carried on among the children of the grammar school from the fourth grade up.

LOST SEVERAL HOURS.

Little Corinne Anderson of South street, 5 years, old was lost from home for several hours Thursday. She left on an errand about 9 o'clock and had not returned at noon, and an appeal was made to police headquarters. Before they took action of a definite nature the little girl was found by the firemen at the Ward Two hose house and returned to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Anderson.

DISTRICT COURT.

Th continued case of Nathan Sternberh, whose automobile killed the 6 year old Chelsea girl, Ethel Kaplan, Aug. 22, and who was arrested for manslaughter came up in court this morning and was again continued until Sept. 22. In the meantime an inquest will probably be held.

Edward E. Walkins was fined $15 for violation of the automobile law at Milton.

WILL ENTER PRIMARIES

G. B. Bates After the Republican Nomination

In answer to many inquiries put him regarding the probability of his entering the Republican primaries, Gustave B. Bates informs the Daily Ledger that he will be a candidate for the Republican mayoralty nomination. He says he has felt all along that this would be his final decision, but withheld his announcement until such time as he could discover something like a real and general desire that he should go into the primary.

The desire has been clearly expressed according to Mr. Bates, by many Republicans, and consequently now that he realizes that he should meet the wishes of the Republican friends, he states that he will go into the primary.

Mr. Bates also states that he has been asked by many Progressives to take that party's nomination, but that up to the present the Progressive sentiment has been only of individuals. He declares his candidacy is not to be limited by party lines, but he also realizes that a movement, especially such a movement as he hopes to see started this fall in Quincy, is stronger and more capable of filling its promises if there is a strong disinterested organization behind it, and so Mr. Bates welcomes endorsement and help from any quarter.

Mr. Bates intends to carry out his original intention of getting a Citizens nomination, and hopes that he will receive the encouragement of the right-thinking men in all the recognized political parties.

Mr. Bates says he will make no further statements for the present, either in regard to his candidacy or to municipal matters, but will wait until the right time to take up with the people of Quincy the problems of municipal government.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

"Sari," Henry W. Savage's production of Emmerich Kalman's internationally famous operetta came to Boston from New York heralded as not only the most emphatic hit of last season in Manhattan but as an offering that had achieved success in an unusual degree in nearly every important capital of Europe. Boston theatregoers who crowded the Colonial Theatre on the opening night of the season by their enthusiastic demonstration of approval of the piece admitted the justice of the claims that had been made for it and added their verdict of commendation to that of music lovers of other metropolises. "Sari" has been performed since to a succession of audiences characterized as much by their social brilliance as by their unusual size. Every performance has been greeted by a gathering which has virtually taxed the capacity of the large theatre. Such instantaneous and tremendous success would be unusual in the depth of winter; at this season of the year, when the casual theatregoer has so many other things than entertainment to distract his attention from the playhouse, it is little less than phenomenal. The newspaper reviewers and the playgoing public of Boston agree on the extraordinary merit of "Sari" and in the belief that its engagement at the Colonial Theatre will be an event long memorable.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Tremendous enthusiasm marked the anxiously waited opening of the Craig Players' ninth Boston season at Castle Square Monday. With eight successful years' work to their credit and with big plans ahead for the future, the company who have made their home in South Boston may well feel that the title of "America's Foremost Resident Players" bestowed upon them by the Dramatic Mirror, has been well earned. Certainly applause and numerous tributes that made their birthday night on Monday so remarkable should constitute a red letter day in the annals of the Company. No better choice for such an occasion could have been made than "Over Night" Bartholomae's irresponsible farce-comedy of a honeymoon trip that just escaped disaster. All the players rose to what they felt was a special occasion and acted with a verve and go that made the farce in the words of the Traveler next day "carry all before it." As Elsie, Miss Young was sweet and lovable, even in the funny little tantrums that were the nearest thing to a loss of temper. John Craig, William P. Carleton, Dudley Hawley, Al Roberts (with a banjo solo that was alone worth the money) Mabel Colcord, Kate Ryan and other members of the company did fine team work.

For next week John Craig is giving "The Girl of the Golden West," the big drama, full of thrills and sensations that created such a furore when first produced in New York. Of the much talked of card table scene, Belasco has said himself: "It isn't only true to life it is life." The incident in fact is founded on a story told him by his father an old forty-niner. "The Girl," will be played by Miss Young. The part has always been a favorite one with her, and Castle Square patrons are sure to have a powerful interpretation of a role that gives greater opportunities for big acting than any woman's part written within the last ten years.

SCOTTISH GAMES ON LABOR DAY

The clans of the Order of Scottish Clans of Boston and vicinity have completed arrangements for their annual picnic and games to be held at Caledonian Grove, Spring street, West Roxbury, on Labor Day.

The games this year are evidently to be better than ever.

The clansmens' games which are always keenly competed also the competitions in bagpiping, Highland dancing, etc., will be run on a professional basis, all money prizes. The athletic events open to the world will be strictly amateur, and some of the greatest runners, jumpers, vaulters and weight throwers in this country have already entered for the various events.

The splendid prizes recently exhibited by Thomas L. Williams at his store on Hancock street, are for the amateur events, and their excellence insures keen competition on the part of the contestants in the various events.

The five-a-side soccer football games will be of especial interest to Quincy people, particularly those from the Fore River and South Quincy districts. The Fore River teams have been winning these games for several years. Many of the teams affiliated with the Boston District league have entered teams so that whichever team does win, it will have to play some to beat the others.

Clan MacGregor of this city is well represented on the general picnic committee. Thomas Johnston, Angus Kerr and Alex W. Russell are the delegates from the big clan. Thomas Johnston will act as ringmaster, which means that there will be none but competitors on track and field, insuring the spectators a chance to see all that is to be seen.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS.

Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, met Thursday evening and appointed a committee to draft resolutions on the death of Thomas McDonnell, a charter member who died Tuesday noon at his home on School street.

This evening the members of the council will go to the house in a body and conduct a prayer service.

The meeting was the first since June. At the next meeting a committee will probably be appointed to bring in a list of nominations for candidates to be voted for at the annual election in October.

The new illuminated clock erected in front of the store of T. L. Williams on Hancock street is greatly appreciated by the travelling public. It will be illuminated at night. The dial of the clock is so large that he who runs may read.

ODD FELLOWS ARE PROSPERING

The annual session of the Grand lodge, I. O. O. F., was held Thursday at Odd Fellows building, Boston. The grand lodge degree was conferred upon a class of 157 past noble grands. Between 12 and 2 o'clock a banquet was served in Berkeley hall at which speakers from Grand lodges of other jurisdictions were welcomed.

At the business session James Bennett of Lynn was elected as grand master.

The report of retiring Grand Master Walker showed a net increase in membership during the past term of 1372, which was the largest for the past twenty years. There were 243 lodges with 60,107 members on January 1, and on July 1, the membership has increased to 61,000. Weekly benefits were paid to the amount of $160,110.71, relief for widowed families $3,260.79; relief and education of orphans $246.50 for burials $55,658.80; special relief $32,437.07; total $251,713.87.

During the past year one Rebekah lodge has been instituted in Medfield, making 185 lodges in this department with 34,514 members, an increase of 905 for the year.

The payments were as follows: Relief of members, $3246.56; widowed families relief, $105; special relief $1,697.89; total $5,949.42.

CARNIVAL A GREAT SUCCESS

The closing of the three day carnival of the Town River Yacht Club, at its headquarters on Thursday evening, was an event that will not soon be forgotten by members, for many, taking advantage of the nearness of the water, the moonlight, and the tide, divided their time between following the program arranged by the committee and distance swimming.

Men, women and children were involved in the sudden turning of the affair into a bathing night, and after they had disported to their hearts' content they dressed and remained until the illuminations were turned out.

As on other nights the Baby Doll booth proved to be the attraction, and several hundred Teddy Bears, soldiers and babies were distributed to the residents of the ward. Because of the extremely warm weather there were few dancers. The entire amount realized however is a neat sum and will be devoted to the advancement of club interests.

MRS. HARMAN ARRIVES HOME

Ten Days In Steerage from Italy to England

Mrs. George N. Harman (Helen Rhines of Miller Stile road) who went abroad alone in July on her honeymoon, arrived back in good health Thursday afternoon and is now at the home of her mother, Mrs. Effie Rhines for a day or two. Mr. Harman, who is assistant clerk of courts at Rutland, Vt., met her when the S. S. Arabic docked in Boston on Thursday morning, and came with her to Quincy.

Mrs. Harman was in Austria when war was declared, having completed a tour of Germany and other countries in a party of ten. She contemplated a tour of Switzerland and a visit to Paris, but after a delay reached Italy.

Below is given John Clair Minot's story of the ten day's trip in steerage from Genoa to Liverpool as printed in the Herald, the first installment appearing in the Daily Ledger of Thursday. It is all true, Mrs. Harman says. From Liverpool she came to Boston on the Arabic.

A steerage trip of 10 days, or possibly longer, was not something to get enthusiastic over. We had vivid memories of the sights and smells of the steerage when we crossed a few weeks earlier. Of course, this was different. There was one price of passage for all the pasengers, one fare for all at the table, and the privileges of all the decks for all on board. But the British subjects, properly enough, had first choice of the staterooms, and then the male end of their passenger list overflowed into the steerage where we were given a hospitable welcome.

As we climbed aboard the tender, the American ladies were shown aft to the steerage on Deck D, and the men were escorted down through the quarters of the crew to the forward steerage on Deck E. Well, it was not so bad to look at and smell of as we had feared. There was little of the traditional steerage smell, for the boat had been in port several weeks, and had been well fumigated and aired. But hot!

Those same weeks in port, under the summer sun of Italy, had done their work thoroughly. There was room to spare, for our number was far short of the capacity of the big compartment. The nine portholes on each side gave an abundance of light. The sheets were clean and the red blankets looked new, but the narrowness of the bunks and the use of a life preserver for a pillow had obvious disadvantages.

There was no place to sit down, no hook or nail in sight, and no place for baggage, save in the spare bunks. Nobody would mistake the place for a cabin de luxe. We straightway felt new respect for Andrew Carnegie and other fellow-Americans who have crossed to America by steerage.

We met the ladies on deck to compare notes, and found them much less resigned and philosophical than we were. Their steerage compartment was but half the width of the ship, and thus was even hotter than ours. The odors that we barely discerned cried aloud to them. The bunks, in narrowness and height from the floor, were simply impossible. And under their feminine inspection the possibility, nay the certainty, of vermin was appalling. But not one wanted to back out. Their sporting blood was equal to the test, and they were leaving Italy homeward bound.

SLEPT ON DECK.

"We will sleep on the deck," they cried. And so it came about that they did, and so did we, and so did hundreds of the British passengers. For the heat and closeness, particularly for the first few days of the voyage, were unendurable in the steerage and most of the staterooms. And the vermin that swarmed the ship from stem to stern were beasts of prey that the hardiest could not ignore. The long lay-off of the Cretic had probably given them a fine opportunity to get the run of the ship. Certainly it gave a tremendous edge to their appetites.

From the first it was evident that the crew, particularly the staff of the two dining saloons, was far short of its complement. There was not a stewardess on board—a fine prospect if the hundreds of women made up their minds to be seasick. Just as it was an emergency cruise, so was it an emergency crew. The officers, engineers and executive heads were on hand but the men were everything and from everywhere—so long as they were British subjects. The many Italians of the regular crew were left ashore.

The emergency crew included, for example, 25 British mechanics and electricians, who were on their way home from a job in Egypt. Unhappily it also included a lot of the riff-raff that always infests the waterfront of a great shipping centre. So promptly did this element make its presence felt in the boldest and most exasperating kind of thefts that on the first night the passengers organized for police duty.

From the volunteer vigilance committee men were selected to stand guard two hours each over the steerage. This arrangement continued day and night for the whole voyage. At first, the guard was almost wholly British, but on the third day, the Americans took over complete responsibility for the forward steerage watch and thenceforth took turns of two hours each in guarding the baggage and their sleeping companions.

VOLUNTEER WORK.

And volunteers of another kind quickly proved necessary. This was in the two dining saloons after meals. Here a little group of American women led the way. Others followed their lead, both Ameircan and British, men and women, and thenceforth there were squads of passengers washing and wiping dishes, cleaning silver, sweeping saloons, setting up the tables, etc., and many a woman who has a houseful of servants to serve her least whim at home worked with unsuspected energy. It was a sight worth seeing, and an experience that will be told with gusto in many homes. Even with this large and willing staff of volunteer helpers, several of the stewards broke down under the pressure.

On the second day it transpired that there would be second cabin accommodations for all the American ladies. This came about through the discovery of several unoccupied staterooms—so great had been the confusion in preparing for the voyage, and partly through the result of hints that the ship's officers and the members of the British committee gave certain Englishmen—hints that it was hardly becoming for them to cling to staterooms while American women, paying the same price for their tickets, were in the steerage. For sometimes, you know, an Englishman is a particularly selfish and complacent individual who has to be jolted into an act that resembles courtesy or into a recognition that others have rights in the world. Perhaps in their own domestic circles they have been waited on and deferred to until they are spoiled.

Of course, when the crisis comes, Englishmen are of the stuff that makes them stand in ranks and go down to death while the women fill the boats; and there are men of other races who never fail in drawing-room graces, but who would fight with women for a place in the boats. I saw a rotund and florid Britisher on the Cretic who loudly scolded an overworked steward because there was no knife or fork at his plate or that of his wife. The steward brought one pair instead of two, and the Englishman promptly took possession of them, and left to his wife the task of getting a pair for her own use.

But that is beside the story. Be it said, that almost without exception the British people on the Cretic considered themselves the hosts and the Americans their guests. There was not only exceptionally good feeling and mutual courtesy, but a particularly fraternal spirit born of the common experiences as war refugees and stranded travellers. In the list of British passengers were half a dozen persons of title, Sir This and the Earl of That, but their presence made no rift in the lute of democracy. A lady of particularly striking presence was Lady Lowther, sister-in-law of the speaker of the House of Commons.

WASHING DOWN DECK.

As to the new quarters given the American women, they altered the situation but slightly. They allowed a little more privacy for toilet purposes and more room for baggage, but they were so hot and crowded with four persons to a room, and so infested with the energetic little beasts of prey that the women continued to sleep in steamer chairs or wrapped in blankets on the deck. Some took refuge in the dining saloon or the writing room. Some camped in the lifeboats where the canvas covering made a good bed.

The worst trouble with sleeping on the decks was the barbarous practise of the crew in washing down the decks each day at sunrise or a little before. This resulted in a hurried scrambling for cabins, hatchways and lifeboats in a way that was picturesque—to use the mildest term of description.

It was not until we reached Gibraltar, by the way, that Liverpool was officially announced as our destination. The Cretic had left Genoa under sealed orders, though all on board had embarked in the hope of reaching some port in England, and presumably Liverpool. But for the first few days there were persistent rumors, which the officers would neither verify nor contradict, that we might get no farther than Gibraltar or might make some French port, if the war dangers of the sea proved at all serious. But on leaving Gibraltar Aug. 17 the bulletin board bore the welcome announcement that we would probably reach Liverpool on Friday, Aug. 21.

For the rest, there were many interesting incidents, though hardly so unusual in ocean voyages as some of those already chronicled. There were Sunday services of a particularly impressive character on the open deck, led by Canon Adams of Kildare, Ireland, and with a sermon by Prof. Margolough of Oxford. The 30 or so members of the Masonic fraternity among the passengers met every afternoon in the second cabin smoking room, of which they had exclusive possession for the voyage. Of the number nearly half were Americans, and the others from all parts of Great Britain and the British empire—India, Egypt, Australia and Canada. A particularly gracious set of resolutions to the captain and officers, and through them to the British government and the committee in charge, were drawn up by a Boston man and signed by every American on board. There was even an attempt at a concert and entertainment, but this was not a great success.

On the last nights of the voyage the Cretic felt its way along in total darkness—no lights above decks, the windows shuttered and the port holes covered with blankets. This precaution was for protection against any prowling German war craft, and persistent rumors had it that two or three of them had escaped from the blockade in the North sea and were off the British coasts.

All this kept the nerves of the passengers more or less frazzled, but happily no worse damage resulted. Two evenings before reaching port there was a secret mass meeting of the British male passengers in the dining salon. It was called by a few chronic kickers who shot off spluttering fireworks of protest against the food, the steerage, the rate of passage, the efforts of the committee in charge, etc.

The malcontents were silenced and shamed by a vote of 10 to 1. We were pleased to hear that the American contingent was constantly referred to as a crowd of good sports who made the best of unpleasant conditions and found things to be grateful for instead of things to find fault with.

Then at last a glimpse of Land's End, the Irish sea, the mountains of Wales, and we are in Liverpool harbor on the eighth day. Here we are—some with tickets home by lines that are still running, some with tickets by lines that are not running and some with no tickets at all. But the situation in Liverpool can hardly fail to be better than that in Genoa, so our courage is good and our hopes are high. And America will be fairer to our eyes than it ever was before.

A LOST HAT

It Was Knocked Out of a Car Window

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

When I was attached to a detective bureau in Albany, N. Y., there was a ring at the telephone one morning, and the chief, being busy, asked me to reply to it.

"My name is Ormsby," came over the wire, "J. L. Ormsby of No. —— Walnut street. A man called here this morning ostensibly from the city water department to examine the plumbing for leakage. Last night my wife was at a function and wore a valuable pearl necklace. She laid it on her dresser when she came in, and it had not been put back into the safe when the man came. He was in the bathroom adjoining her room, and when he left the necklace was gone. What can you do for me?"

I repeated what he had said to my chief, who took up the phone and asked for a description of the man. It was given as about five feet six inches high, weight about 140 pounds, hair a sort of sorrel, no beard, red mustache, well dressed in check suit, negligee shirt with blue stripe, white collar and derby hat. Asked how long the man had been gone from the house, the reply was "about fifteen minutes."

We immediately sent out word to all the police stations to watch for a man of the description given. My experience had taught me that a thief with such a valuable haul would be likely to try to get out of the city with it, and I was not surprised when a reply came from the Union station that a man who tallied with the description given was there and had bought a ticket for Utica. I asked how long before the next train left. The reply was that no train would leave for twenty minutes. I jumped into an automobile and ordered the chauffeur to take me, regardless of the speed law, to the station. We were chased by a policeman on a motorcycle, who called to me to stop. I could not make him hear me and ordered the chauffeur to slow up for a moment. The cop came up, and I displayed my badge, told him what I was after and pushed on, reaching the station just as the train was pulling out.

I got on the rear car, but went through to the smoker, then turned and walked back apparently careless, but really taking in every man I passed. I had gone through two cars and come to the third when I espied a man sitting by himself, his head resting on the back of the seat and his derby hat pulled down over his eyes. I couldn't see the color of his hair, but his mustache had a reddish hue, and he wore a shirt with a blue stripe and a white collar. I passed on to see if there was any one else on the train that tallied with the description; but, finding no one, I went back and took a vacant seat behind the man I had observed.

Of course I didn't pounce upon him. Why should I? I was not sure he was my man, and I had ample time to watch him. If he left the train I would leave it. I waited for the conductor to come along in order to discover to what point my quarry held a ticket. The conductor made progress very slowly, and we were well out of the city before he reached our car.

At this time my man was apparently asleep, his head up against the open window. The conductor occasionally called "Tickets!" but the fellow did not move. When the conductor reached him he gave him one of those pokes with which conductors arouse sleepers or pretended sleepers, and the man started up so suddenly that his hat struck the window sash and fell outside. The owner looked up at the conductor dazed, then put his head out through the window to look for his hat, then withdrew it and said:

"What did you do that for?"

"Do what?"

"Wake me up so sudden."

"For your ticket."

"It's gone out the window. It was in my hat."

"That won't do," said the conductor. "If it had been in your hatband I would have seen it. I've had that racket played on me before. I want your ticket."

"I tell you it was in my hat. I've not only lost the ticket, but a three dollar hat."

"Pay your fare or I'll put you off."

"Well, you'll have to put me off, for I have no money."

By this time I had seen through the man's game and had placed an interpretation on it to which the conductor was oblivious. It was a shrewd plan, a desperate plan, but I confess I admired it. An idea flashed through my brain. I did not wish the conductor to put the fellow off between stations, for I intended to get off with him, and if I did so in open country he would know I was after him. I beckoned to the conductor, who came to where I was sitting.

"I'll pay the man's fare to the next station," I whispered. "Go on taking tickets and when we stop put him off." I gave him a look which he understood, handing him the fare at the same time. The man in front did not look back and was not cognizant of my action.

We had but two miles to go to the next station. I dropped back to the last car and when the train stopped stepped off on to the platform. I felt sure that the passenger would get off the train willingly, and he made no resistance, though he muttered something about an "outrage." Without appearing to notice him I went to a cab standing beside the station and engaged it. There were other cabs, but my man did not use any of them. He stood on the platform for awhile looking about him, while I went to a cigar stand, spent some time selecting a weed, more time cutting off the end and still more striking matches, which persisted in going out, to light it. In this way I consumed the time till I saw my man start off down the track in the direction of Albany. I knew he was going to hunt for his hat.

Going out to my cab, I asked the driver if there was not a road beside the railway track. He said there was and, pointing to the man who was walking on the ties, said:

"I wish you to drive eastward, and be sure to keep that man in sight. Whenever the road digresses from the track let me know beforehand and I will get out and walk till they come together again."

I handed him a five dollar bill, assuring him that if he followed my directions closely there would be more for him. He put it in his pocket, I entered the cab, and we rolled away.

We were obliged to drive a short distance into the town before striking a main road leading eastward and lost sight of my man for a few minutes, but as soon as we passed beyond the houses caught sight of him again, for the track lay over open ground. Our road ran parallel with the rails for half a mile, then struck a side hill covered with a wood. I alighted and, walking in the cover, shadowed my man till near the open again, when I met the cab and re-entered it.

In this way I kept track of the man while he neared the place where his hat had been knocked out through the window. I knew he would recognize it, for when he had looked out after it he had doubtless done so to note the place where it fell. To tell the truth, I had marked the place myself by taking in a certain knoll with a single tree on its crest.

Seeing this knoll a short distance ahead and that it separated the road from the track, when I reached it I left my cab, directing the cabman to remain where he was. I walked up the knoll till I neared the top, then crawled the rest of the way. Fortunately for me the grass was long, and when I reached the summit I could see through it without being seen. There was the man about 300 yards below me hunting for his hat.

There were bushes and long grass and stumps beside the rails, and he was having a hard hunt. I was sufficiently sympathetic to help him and intended to do so provided he made a failure of it, but preferred that he should find the hat himself. There was little likelihood that it had been picked up, for there were no houses near, and the only person in sight was a man working in a field half a mile from the track.

I felt like calling to the fellow that the suction of the train would carry the hat in the direction we were moving when it was lost, a matter that he didn't seem to consider, and kept looking a hundred yards or more eastward of where I believed the article would cease bounding after the cars. But at last, having hunted thoroughly over the ground to the eastward, he turned his attention to an open space covered by long grass to the westward. Suddenly he pounced upon it in a depression within a few yards of the track.

Snatching it up, he looked about him to assure himself that he was not observed, then thrust his hand into and about the crown. Having done this, he brushed the dust away with his sleeve, then put the hat on his head.

For a few moments he stood looking first eastward, then westward, as if in doubt as to which way to go, then started eastward. I went back to my cab and saw him coming on to the road a short distance ahead of me. When I came up with him I called out:

"Get in and I'll give you a lift."

"How far is it to the next station?" he asked, hesitating.

"Too far to walk. Get in."

He did so, and we drove on.

I asked the cabman the distance to the station and something about the town. He said it was three miles away and was considerable of a town. I chatted with my quarry as we rode along, but asked him no questions. When we rode into the town, seeing a sign, "Police Station," I directed the driver to stop and, getting out of the cab, called on the man to follow me. He looked flurried, but obeyed. He had no sooner struck the sidewalk than I clapped my hand on his shoulder and said:

"I want you."

He started, feigned surprise and asked:

"What for?"

"Lifting a pearl necklace. Come in here."

I took him into the police station, and, snatching his hat from his head, from under the lining, around which it was circled, I drew a beautiful pearl necklace.

I clapped a pair of bracelets on him and took him to the station, where I was obliged to wait for the next eastbound train. I telegraphed the result of my expedition to the office, and in about two hours after we had been notified of the loss the lady who had made it was informed that her bracelet had been recovered.

In time I lodged my man in jail and returned the necklace to its owner. The fellow proved to be one of the slickest thieves on the criminal record. He was no housebreaker, but practiced ingenious devices to enter houses and get away with plunder.

LEMBERG FIGHT OF IMPORTANCE

Forces of Czar Are Successfully Piercing Galicia

AUSTRIANS ARE HEAVY LOSERS

Russia May Soon Give Virtual Undivided Attention to Prussia—Five Crack Austrian Army Corps Wiped Out In Battle Lasting Eight Days—Koenigsberg Sortie Fails

London, Sept. 4.—If the Russian victory at Lemberg is as decisive as indicated and if the Russians can keep the Austrian army going, the main interest in the theatre of war may turn to eastern Europe to the exclusion of the German effort to reach Paris.

A beaten Austrian army would permit Russia, who apparently is exerther greatest pressure in Galicia, to give her virtual undivided attention to Prussia—first Posen, then Berlin—and also would open the road to Vienna.

The battle of Lemberg was one of the greatest ever fought. The battle line extended nearly 200 miles, and it is estimated that 1,500,000 men were engaged. The victory was won after eight days of fighting, the climax coming when the Austrians were routed in a final desperate assault on the Russian centre, held by General Ruzsky.

The Austrian army in Galicia was acting in close co-operation, with two German army corps facing Breslau and seeking to envelope the Russian forces in Poland. Their plans, however, met with a series of disasters ending in a complete rout when an attempt was made to pierce the Russian centre.

The Austrian army in left Russian Poland was the only part of the line that has held, and it is being subjected to enormous pressure, heavy re-enforcements having been sent to the army operating against it.

As a result of the fighting five of the crack Austrian army corps, the Third, Seventh, Eleventh, Twelfth and Fourteenth, have been practically annihilated. Their reserve supplies of ammunition, 150 guns of all calibres, field equipment and field supplies of all descriptions, have been captured. Thousands of prisoners, including many officers of high rank, have been captured.

The German garrison at Koenigsberg attempted a sortie in force against the Russian forces which have isolated the citadel. They were driven back with very heavy losses. The Russian official reports describe the situation everywhere as "satisfactory." The Russian army at the front is being constantly re-enforced from the active army mobilized at the interior centres, and the two corps wiped out in the fighting in east Prussia last week have beeen replaced with fresh troops.

The sally of the Germans from Koenigsberg was a desperate one. Under cover of the darkness they burst forth and threw their entire strength against the besieging forces. They had automatic guns mounted on automobiles which they used with deadly effect. The Russian forces, it is announced, fought with desperate bravery and finally checked the assault. The Germans finally retreated to the citadel, leaving many dead and wounded behind. Their losses are described as enormous.

MORE TOURISTS REACH HOME

Dr. Todd, the Misses Horton and Others

Miss Clarice B. Doble arrived in New York, Saturday morning on the White Star liner Adriatic. The voyage was very rough and the steamer was crowded. Nearly 2000 people were on board mostly American refugus. Before leaving Liverpool on August 20 the vessel was armed with four-inch guns, fore and aft, and came the whole way across with shrouded port holes.

There was great excitement on board on the Wednesday night before landing, when a brilliant search light rested on the steamer for five or ten minutes. The crew sprang to the guns in readiness for an attack, but it proved to be another British vessel, the cruiser Essex.

Miss Doble went directly to join her family at their summer home at West Harwich.

Miss Ella A. Horton and Miss Helen K. Horton, well known Atlantic young ladies who were among the Ledger's list of Quincy people abroad arrived in New York on Thursday on the steamship San Guglielmo.

Rev. Dr. James Todd of South Boston, a former pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Quincy, was among those who arrived in New York on Thursday from Europe. Dr. Todd sailed from Boston, June 30, for a pleasure trip to Scotland. When the war started he tried to get passage home but was told there would be nothing but steerage until Oct. 13, and he decided to come by steerage. In speaking of his experience on landing in New York he said: "I spent three days in the steerage," "I can't describe it to you. Imagine an open room with 200 people in it, bunks of iron rods with unclean bedding, without sheets or pillow slips, open scuppers running dirty water, no proper ventilation, dirt and a suffocating odor, and you have the New York's steerage. I paid $41.25 for my ticket. By paying $33.75 more I got into the cabin; but I got no place to sleep. I slept in a chair on deck, or on a lounge, until I met Asst. Sec. of State A. A. Adee, who took me into his cabin. For three nights I had a good berth."

In another column are the experiences of Mrs. George N. Harman, who reached Quincy Thursday afternoon.

Quite a large amount of foreign mail was received at the Quincy post office this morning, much of which had been many days in reaching its destination. Practically all of the foreign mail shows marks of having passed through the hands of the censors, and in some cases people receiving mail found that the censor had removed the inclosed letter so that nothing but the envelope was received.

Among those to receive letters was Mrs. Lydia C. Hultman, whose letter was from her daughter, Mrs. Louis Eckert, who is in Fiume, Austria-Hungary. This letter was mailed Aug. 9, and was exactly a month in reaching its destination.

Mrs. Eckert says that there is a lot of excitement in Fiume, but that she is not allowed to write about it as all letters have to pass through the hands of a censor. She stated that hereafter all letters to or from her most be written in German as that has been declared the official language. One piece of information she conveyed was that all of the Frenchmen in Fiume had been arrested and made prisoners of war.

Evidently she is in no immediate danger, for she states that her husband has secured his passports and has his naturalization papers, and that the Whitehead Torpedo Co., by whom he is employed has completed arrangements so that if it gets too hot that they can start for America.

The letter intimated that there was plenty of live news of which she could write but that it would be useless as the censors would not allow it to pass.

CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Milton Ross of 66 Phipps street, aged 13 years, was thrown from his bicycle on the Chestnut street hill this afternoon, ripping the sole off his shoe and taking some of the flesh with it. His foot became caught in the wheel. Miss Dolan dressed his foot, and one of the autos of the Electric Light Company took him home.

This morning on Chestnut street, George Brown, aged 6 years, son of George Brown, stubbed his toe and fell over a stone marker. He had a toy bank in his hand and cut his arm quite severely so that Dr. Sheahan was called.

Early in the day a small Italian boy pushed a baby carriage under a horse on Chestnut street, but escaped serious injury.

ACCIDENT WAS FATAL.

Word was received this noon of the death at the Bangor, Me., hospital of William McQueen of Liberty street, Quincy, who was seriously injured while trying to board a moving freight train at Millinocket. One leg was severed and the other badly crushed. He was hurried to the hospital in Bangor, Me., where he died.

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

Another first class bill is now being presented at Quincy's pretty playhouse including Maurice Samuels & Co. in their screamingly successful playlet "A Day at Ellis Island" which, as the name suggests, is a funfest of immigration incidents. Tom Hefron, the one-legged comedian proved a very pleasing entertainer. The other vaudeville and picture features offered are all tip-top.

For the first half of next week an excellent holiday show has been engaged by Manager Wardwell. The "Perils of Pauline" will be continued in two thrilling reels. Pictures of the Quincy Playground exercises of last week will be shown. Pathe Daily News will be chock full of timely views of world-wide happenings. And there will be some comedy pictures too.

Vaudeville attractions include Mayme Remington and her Mullata Five, corking colored comedians; Sadakischi Japs, a troupe of Oriental entertainers; Lane-Plant & Timmons, singing and comedy cut-ups; Wells G. Deveaux comedy musical artist.

PRIZE WINNERS CHILDREN'S GARDENS

Exhibition at City Hall Surpassed All Previous Efforts in Number and Quality

Full List of Prizes Awarded for Flowers and Vegetables

The exhibition of flowers and vegetables from the children's summer gardens in the Council Chamber at City Hall was visited by large numbers both Friday afternoon and evening. The visitors in the afternoon were largely confined to ladies, many of whom were the mothers of the children who were competing. In the evening many men visited the exhibition and there were many remarks upon its excellence.

While the exhibitions in other years have been successful, that of this year surpassed all previous efforts, both in the number of exhibits as well as in the quality of the exhibit.

It was no easy task for the judges, Messrs. Nichols, Patterson and Anderson, and it was nearly 4.30 before they had completed their labors, and the ribbons were placed on the different exhibits.

It was expected that the cash prizes for gardens would also be awarded Friday, but late in the afternoon the committee said that while they had spent several days in visiting the different gardens about the city, and had about made up their minds as to the awards it had been decided not to announce the winners yet.

The reason was that the prizes were to be given in cash, and it was thought best to give the prizes through the teachers of the different schools, rather than to entrust money to some of the younger children.

The complete list of ribbons awarded in the flower and vegetable exhibit are as follows:

FLOWER PRIZES.

Beans,—First, Lydia Carue; Second, Ermanno Cassani; third, Agnes Laffan.

Beets,—First, Esther Nelson; second, Agnes Laffan; third, Theodore Parsons.

Carrots,— First, Esther Nelson; second, Madeline Parsons; third, Thomas Parsons.

Cucumbers,—First, Mildred Julius; second, Ciprisno Cicconi, third, Victor Brown.

Cabbage,—First, Robert Park; second, Daniel Keating; third, Lydia Carue.

WOMAN RESCUED BY A WOMAN

Narrow Escape from Drowning at Squantum

Miss Ella Perkins, aged 24 years of Standish road, was rescued from drowning Friday afternoon about 1 o'clock by Mrs. Joseph Allen of Shoreham street. Both were swimming in Dorchester bay off Dorchester street, when Miss Perkins, who was quite a distance ahead, lost courage because of the rough sea and went down. When she came up she shouted for help. Mrs. Allen, who is a strong swimmer, soon reached her side and as she was going down for a second time, grabbed her by the hair and swam to a boat and managed to get her into it. She then swam ashore for help. Capt. Anderson responded and gave first aid. Mrs. Allen is receiving great praise for the brave rescue.

AUTOS IN COLLISION.

The need of traffic rules to regulate the hundreds of vehicles, motor and horse drawn, that pass through City Square was again demonstrated on Friday afternoon when two autos collided. The machine of John W. Alden of 35 Schuyler street, Boston, bore the brunt of the smash and was damaged considerably, the running board and door being pierced while the machine of Walter L. Winlock of 73 Billings road had only a mud guard bent.

Stories as to the cause of the accident vary, but as far as can be learned both tried to avoid each other by taking paths they have been directed to use by policemen. Because the paths intercepted in the rear of a large team the machines were hidden until the collision occurred.

Interviews With a Few of Quincy's Many Hustlers

"The local business men who conceived and carried out the idea of placing before the world some of the many attractions which QUINCY possesses as a residential and business city, have done more to call attention of New England to this city in the one day their advertisement appeared in Boston and QUINCY papers, than has the Board of Trade or Merchants' association in all the years they have been in existence." This was the terse remark made by one citizen Friday night and his sentiment found echo in the minds of many others.

Continuing, the gentleman said that there were doubtless many who had lived in QUINCY for years who never realized what facilities the city had for business locations or what fine locations for permanent homes. While the Board of Trade has doubtless done a good work in its line it has not accomplished much for the report credited to President Whiton of the City Council at the Wednesday meeting of the Board hit the nail squarely on the head.

President Whiton asked, what the Board of Trade had to offer in the way of assistance to new industries seeking locations in QUINCY, and it was a question, that, for a minute, even staggered the astute president, who could only reply that if the Board had a membership of 1000 it could have a fund and accomplish something.

The sentiment of President Whiton immediately found echo in Reuben Grossman, who forthwith arose and offered to contribute $100 toward a fund to be used in getting new industries to QUINCY. A suggestion that members be assessed $1 or $2 each to create a fund was immediately quashed, when the president said that under the by-laws an assessment could not be made, adding that if the Board had a large membership it would have a fund. The Board now has a membership of over 300 and the most that it has been possible to get out at a meeting even when unusual attractions was offered was less than fifty.

Another gentleman seen, said that he believed that placing QUINCY'S advantages before the public in the manner in which it had been done Friday, that is by a large and attractive advertisement in the QUINCY and Metropolitan daily newspapers was a grand good thing and that it should not stop there, but should be continued from time to time.

The idea of the scheme, which was so successfully carried out, was that of Herman F. McIntire. It is well known, said Mr. McIntire, that along about Labor day, when people are getting back from their summer vacations, and are looking forward to a long winter, that changes in locations

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

The Daily Ledger office will be closed all day Monday, Labor Day, no paper being issued that day. On Tuesday the Daily Ledger will continue to boom Quincy.

Monday is Labor day and is the last real holiday of the fall season with the exception of the more recent Columbus day until Thanksgiving comes along. A field day and clam bake, also several base ball grames will provide plenty of amusement for those of the townspeople who expect to spend the day right here at home. As for outside attractions, they are too numerous to mention but will serve to lure many to beaches, games, wood, field, lake, and river. School begins next day and the more serious work of the year is at hand, so everybody is hoping that next Monday will be warm and pleasant. We wish all our readers a pleasant week-end and holiday and trust that no untoward event may occur to mar their pleasure.

HOME AND SCHOOL.

The first day of school, to the majority of mothers, is simply a time when the youngsters must be presented at the school house, washed, scrubbed and mended. Responsibility for their welfare is turned over to the teacher for the rest of the term. The ordinary home takes too little interest in school work.

Teachers do not hold one position year after year as much as they used to. They take low paid positions for a short time, then are apt to move on and up or elsewhere. Under these conditions, they may not know the parents personally. Lacking such knowledge there is little mutual helpfulness.

Another cause creating this break is the fact that new methods are so much used. Formerly a parent could give the child a good deal of help on problems that bothered him. Now the language of the text book and the method of operation are apt to be wholly new. Assistance rendered in the home often leaves the child more perplexed than he was before. This creates in the mind of the parent a feeling that it is useless to interfere.

The less parents understand of school methods the more they become critical and suspicious. Hence the many complaints that this boy or that girl is not getting fair play. Also the teacher is left with the feeling that the home atmosphere is hostile and will not back her up.

Parents should not take the education of their children thus lightly. It is not a matter merely of merchandise, which they buy with their tax bills as they buy their groceries. A little attention to a child's report cards and his tests may help save a waste of school privileges that will afterward be a lifelong regret. It takes but a little time to drop in at the school room. It is a scene of hope and cheer. Any parent will feel younger for the visit, and may be able to make some valuable suggestions.

MISS CASHMAN HAS RETURNED

Came From Naples on the S. S. Carpathia

Miss Lummus, a teacher of German at the Quincy Mansion school, is in Germany, but has been unable to get word through to this country and her whereabouts is uncertain. Although not an native she spoke the language fluently. Mrs. Horace Hann Willard, principal of the school, is anxiously awaiting some word.

Among the passengers on the Cunard liner "Carpathia" which docked at New York City Wednesday, was Miss Helen Cashman of Adams street, East Milton. Miss Cashman left this country early in the season to make an extensive trip through Europe and England. She was accompanied by four friends. The first port the party reached was Naples. They stayed in that vicinity for three weeks and then went to Montre in Switzerland. It was there that the first hardships of the great war were felt. Miss Cashman tried to cash her American checks, but she could not do it. For two days she had only fifteen cents in cash.

The party then went to Interlaken. While on the way they had to wait four hours at a station until train loads of Swiss troops passed by. At Interlaken they saw mobilization of the troops carried on. Aug. 4 Miss Cashman attempted to cable to her people in this country. No cables could be sent, except in German, French or Italian. She finally cabled "Alles ist gut" but the message was never received.

The men left for war just at the haying season and left all that work to the women who had to work daily in the fields.

Many American tourists were stranded, financially. Hotel rates advanced and American money lost its value, so that the tourists were losing money on all sides. A member of the party had heard that a boat on the Pierce line was to leave Naples. They all bought tickets, presumably first class, at the price of $110. When they arrived at Naples they learned that these tickets were steerage and since they would not travel that way their money was not refunded.

On the morning of the day on which the "Carpathia" was to sail Miss Cashman applied for passage. She and the party were lucky to procure passage since they had bought a round trip ticket on the Cunard line. The boat was eight days late in sailing and left port Aug. 18. When outside of the Straits of Gibraltor an English cruiser came in sight and followed the boat for several hours. From this point to America only one boat was sighted that was the "Canopic." Officers and stokers alike had to go and fight for their respective countries. The crew on the boat was an almost entirely new one, and not acquainted with the work.

The whole boat was thrown into first class and the conditions on the boat were not up to the standard. Miss Cashman was very glad to get home even though she was forced to leave her trunks in Europe and was disappointed in her travels.

Four letters from Walter G. Thomas who is in Italy, were received this week by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Thomas of 28 Newton street They were dated Aug. 3, 5, 7, and 13, and al were delayed on account of interference with mail service.

Mr. Thomas states in his letters that great excitement prevailed when it became known war was declared, and that travelers who had spent considerable of their money were hard pressed when gold payment of travelers' checks was refused. Many were obliged to leave their baggage behind and on reaching sea ports found sailings cancelled.

Mr. Thomas in his letter stated he intended to complete his business trip before starting for home. When the last letter was penned he was comfortably situated in Milan.

Mr. Thomas is well known in this city. He was graduated from Adams Academy in 1902, and after a year at Technology he entered the Lawrence Scientific School where he studied architecture. While there he won a scholarship which entitled him to two year's study in Europe. His place of business is in New York where he has been actively engaged for five years.

Some have received the impression that this is the first year that nurses have been graduated from the City Hospital of Quincy, but such is not the case, but the class this year is the first to complete the new three year course.

BUSINESS MEN IN PUBLIC OFFICE.

There has been a loud call of late for "more business men to administer our public affairs." Every well-informed citizen knows that this call is justified. Applied to the choice of a Republican candidate for lieutenant-governor, this demand can be met by Col. A. H. Goetting of Springfield who has a reputation of a successful business man second to none in the state. He is qualified to render superior, hard-headed business methods in whatever position he may be placed. The eminently successful conduct of his own extensive business, the high business principles and ideals he applied during his five years' service in the executive council and as a faithful party worker on broad, intelligent and industrious lines, is an augury of what the people would receive from him as lieutenant-governor.

TAKES NAME OF BENEDICT XV

Della Chiesa, Archbishop of Bologna, Is New Pope

ELECTED ON NINTH BALLOT

Sixty-Year-Old Italian Has Held Many Positions of Honor and Is Opposed to "Modernism" In Church—Elevation of Recently Created Cardinal a Tribute to Late Pontiff

Rome, Sept. 4.—Cardinal Giacono Della Chiesa was elected pope in succession to the late Pius X. He will assume the name of Benedict XV.

Cardinal Della Chiesa was created a cardinal May 25, 1914. He is the archbishop of Bologna, Italy. He was born at Pegli, in the diocese of Genoa, Nov. 21, 1854, and was ordained a priest Dec. 21, 1878. He served as secretary of the nunciature in Spain from 1883 to 1887, in which year he was appointed secretary to the late Cardinal Rampolla. He was appointed substitute secretary of state in 1901 and in 1907 he was elected to the post of adviser to the holy office.

In 1907 he was appointed papal nuncio of Madrid in succession to Mgr. Rinaldini, but this appointment was cancelled three days later. This incident had occurred just before he was made archbishop of Bologna. When Della Chiesa was given this post it was declared in Rome that it was mainly with the object of combatting modern religious ideas, Bologna being the headquarters of the National Democratic league, whose members advocated what is known as "modernism" in religion.

It has been 174 years since the last Pope Benedict. On his election to the papacy in 1740, Cardinal Prospero Lambertine assumed that title. Pope Benedict XIV. was born in Bologna.

The election was on the ninth ballot. With all the ceremony prescribed by the centuries-old traditions of the Catholic church the new occupant of the Fisherman's throne received the first adoration of the cardinals in the conclave who had balloted since Monday.

When the scrutiny of votes showed the election of Cardinal Della Chiesa, the secretary of the conclave, masters of ceremonies and the sacristan of the Vatican were at one admitted to the Sistine chapel. In accordance with the old traditions the cardinal deacon, accompanied by the heads of other orders of the cardinals, presented themselves and asked whether the election was accepted. With the reply in the affirmative, the canopies over the thrones of all other cardinals dropped to the floor, that of the newly elected pontiff alone remaining in place. With the admission of Della Chiesa's priest the new pontiff was then garbed in the white robe which was in readiness in a cabinet adjoining the chapel.

Attired in his robes as head of the church, Pope Benedict then ascended the temporary papal throne, where he received the first adoration of the cardinals and gave his first benediction. The cardinals first knelt, then kissed the foot of the new pope, then the hand and at last were embraced by him.

These ceremonies completed, the ring of St. Peter, which had been in charge of the cardinal camerlengo, was presented to Pope Benedict.

With the conclave called while all Europe was involved in a devastating war, which was largely responsible for the death of Pope Pius from a broken heart, the election of Benedict XV. will go down in history as taking place at one of the most critical times in history. In the conclave were fifty-seven members of the sacred college, a majority of them Italians.

The election of Della Ciesa to the papal throne is not only a tribute to the late pontiff, but also to his closest adviser, Cardinal Merry del Val. As assistant secretary of state and later as cardinal and archbishop of Bologna Della Chiesa was one of Merry del Val's most ardent supporters, and in return enjoyed the fullest confidence of the secretary of state. Being on the best of terms with the Italian government, it is considered certain that the new pope will carry on the policy of Pope Pius looking toward the healing of the long-standing breach between the Quirinal and the Vatican.

Cardinals Gibbons and O'Connell arrived in Rome an hour after Pope Benedict had been elected.

THE MEDICINE CHEST.

During the past year the newspapers have cited hundreds of cases where people have taken poison by mistake as a result of nocturnal visits to the medicine closet. There can be no more dangerous practice than that of getting up in the night and groping in the dark for medicines.

"All medicine chests should be equipped with a light which will automatically come on with the opening of the door," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson, in discussing the many serious accidents which occur from carelessly selecting the wrong medicine from a dark medicine chest.

This principle of the automatic electric light is very extensively used for the sake of convenience in closets, refrigerators, china closets, dark stairways and the like. Both safety and convenience is provided for when the medicine chest is thus equipped.

It would be a comparatively simple matter to equip any chest in the manner suggested, using a regular 10-watt, Mazda lamp. This lamp can be connected through a small switch on the door to the lighting circuit. When the door is opened the switch automatically turns on the light.

AUTOIST ARRESTED.

A man giving his name as James McLean, and claiming to live at 272 Shawmut avenue, Boston, was taken into custody by the police after midnight, on a charge of operating an auto while under the influence of liquor. The machine, a big touring car, struck a pole at Adams street and Newport avenue.

The pole was split and the wires it had supported dropped to the street. Patrolmen Henry Thorne and Henry Riley extricated McLean and called a physician. He was arrested after Dr. W. D. Curtis pronounced him not badly injured. The front of the machine was smashed and linemen were called to put the wires back in commission.

McLane was arraigned in court this morning before Judge Pratt for operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor. Officer Riley testified that McLane was very drunk when arrested.

McLean pleaded guilty and asked the court to make the fine as small as possible as he had two aunts to support. Judge Pratt imposed a fine of $50. When court adjourned there was but little prospect that he would be able to pay his fine and he may have to go to Dedham to work it out.

In the local line-up will be Sid Duggan, Nichols, Jenkins, Bates, Gillis, Cain, Galvin, Curtis, Duggan. The players comprise the strongest line-up this year. Nichols will probably do the twirling:

BURGLARS AT WORK.

When Mrs. Albert L. Clapp of 552 Washington street entered her home yesterday afternoon about four o'clock she found that a burglar had been at work there. The house had been ransacked pretty thoroughly by some one, evidently in search of money but no cash was taken, and a somewhat hasty search showed nothing else missing. Entrance had been effected through a cellar window. Later in the da, about 7.30 o'clock as Mrs. Clapp was returning from the house of a neighbor, a strange man attempted to seize her but her shrieks attracted the attention of several gentlemen living near by and the stranger fled in the direction of the railroad. It was quite dark at the time and Mrs. Clapp's description of the man is necessarily vague. She called up Chief of Police Hunt who went to the scene at once and investigated the affair.

are desired, and it has become a fixed habit with hundreds of families to spend the labor holiday in visiting different localities to see what there was in the way of attractive homes in other localities than where they were at present located. If we can get these people to some to QUINCY and look us over, said Mr. McIntire, I believe that we can convince many that QUINCY is the place for them to locate.

"With the idea in mind of placing an attractive advertisement in the Boston papers in which the name QUINCY should appear in such a manner as to immediately attract attention, I took my pencil and little book one afternoon and called upon some of the real estate and business men in City Square. I explained my plan and in every case the party said put me down for $5 to help along, and if you want more come and see me again. In a couple of hours, one afternoon, I raised over $200. The result you have seen."

The only additonal suggestion which the Ledger has heard was that provision should have been made so that parties from out of town coming to QUINCY might call at some central place where there would be some one on hand all the time to give advice as to the different localities, and answer the many questions that would doubtless be asked. However the notice in the advertisement to call upon any real estate agency in the city may cover the ground, although the impression seems to be that it would be better to have had some central location at which strangers could call.

BANK OPINIONS.

Rupert F. Claflin, cashier of the Granite Trust Company, when interviewed, said the Quincy "ad" was: "A concise, vigorous, earnest, and true exposition of QUINCY'S extraordinary attractions as a place for residence, or business. No waste words or exaggeration. Simple yet forcible. A very able production."

Clarence Burgin, treasurer of the Quincy Savings Bank, in an interview said: "I am very much pleased to know that a few public spirited citizens are willing to spend a little money to bring to the attention of the people of Massachusetts the many advantages of QUINCY as a residential city. Such a movement should have the approval and hearty co-operation of every person in our city.

"QUINCY has a great future, it is an ideal city in which to live. What we want is more loyalty. Loyalty to our government, to our institution, our organizations, our business enterprises.

"Let each one do his part and talk QUINCY—first, last and always."

In conversation with Herman F. McIntire, who helped Frederick E. Tupper dig up a bunch of money for printers' ink to put QUINCY on the map for one day at least, the Ledger man was informed of certain things that exist around City Square which are certainly gratifying.

He was informed that City Square is full of boosters in whom the "boost" is in its advanced stages to a considerable extent, and that there are very few who are free from some symptoms of it.

He found that the Knockers association had suffered a puncture and had gone into the discard, not having sympathy enough to keep it in good health.

He found that it was no trouble to raise money to cover all the papers published in Boston (the QUINCY papers making theirs a complimentary "ad.") and in a number of cases ten times the amount was offered to follow up a campaign of publicity in a systematic manner. There was no tearing a man loose from his money; they said "Come any time on any proposition like this."

He found that the general idea was that, in the next few days, there might not be extra cars to bring people to QUINCY, but that the net result would be wholesome and far reaching.

The Ledger man also found that it was not a real estate man's proposition by any means; it was being talked over by a party of business men at the Granite City Club, and of course it was perfectly patent that, to get business of any kind from its citizens, the merchants must first get the citizens.

Now, for several years back, say ten years ago, we had a good healthy growth in QUINCY; suddenly the Fore River Shipbuilding Corp. landed here and we have had about all we could do for the past ten years to take care of the general overflow from Boston, with the added demand from this industry.

Today we are pretty well caught up with that part of it; the employees who wish to settle in QUINCY are mostly housed, and if we desire to keep the city growing at the rapid rate it has grown in the past we must now reach out and get some of the thousands of people who are settling in Boston's suburbs.

This can only be done by letting people know that QUINCY has advantages not enjoyed by other suburbs, that we are close to Boston with good schools, and all essentials for residence and business.

There are hordes of people the other side of Boston who think QUINCY is located somewhere down on the South Shore or that it is a disease of the throat.

Many people think QUINCY is a country town, off in the woods. It is a long way from it, and the very fact tnat you are willing to spend money to welcome people here has its bearing. When the dog wags his tail you begin to feel at home; if you feel so, other people feel so; it goes a long way.

Mr. McIntire feels that the only way to get these people interested is to get them to come to QUINCY out of curiosity, and some real estate man will sell or rent to a certain proportion of them; the merchants can't sell them till that happens; personally, Mr. McIntire's interests are in East Braintree and proportionately small in QUINCY.

Scores of families are moving at this time of year; they are coming from all directions; they do not know all about the suburbs; it takes very little to influence them one way or the other; a medium-sized advertisement or an illuminated sign will do the trick.

Such a sign, as the train enters each station on the line, would look as if we were trying to do something besides quietly live here, and shine by the reflected light of the many notables who have graced Quincy's history.

A sign out on the Boston and Maine and on the Boston and Albany should be productive of results, and a good big sign "This is QUINCY—a good city and a live city" near the drinking fountain would do no harm.

None of these can be done without money but the business people of Quincy have shown that they can look across a nickel and see a dollar behind it.

We don't want QUINCY to grow in spite of its people it should grow with their help, and we should not be ashamed to let the rest of the world know that we are living. Don't knock; sell your hammer and buy a horn!

AMUSEMENTS

SHUBERT THEATRE.

Arthur Hammerstein's production of "High Jinks" opened the regular season at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, Monday evening, and scored an instantaneous hit. The Boston American in its criticism of the musical jollity said: "The initial performance was a riot of applause and laughter. 'High Jinks' is a rattling good entertainment, full of song and fun, joy and nonsense and people. See it! Forget the war for a while. Chase the grouch! Everybody in the cast is worth a whole paragraph of any newspaper. Perhaps the best thing one can do is to spread the good news that there is a real show at the Shubert and advise everyone to place their order early and often." Despite the "High Jinks" hit, the play will remain at the Shubert only five weeks. Among those presenting it, the cast is led by Stella Mayhew, who is ably assisted by Philip Ryley, Adele Ardsley, Dorothy Vernon, Alberta Devere, Ada Meade, Elizabeth Wood, Emma Francis Augustus Schultz, Dorothy Wolfe Paul Porcasi, Billie Taylor, Bernard Gorcey, Eugene O'Rourke and forty beautiful dancing girls.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

The enthusiastic reception accorded "Along Came Ruth," at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, by both press and public is sufficient proof that this delightful comedy of New England life is bound to repeat its New York success. The piece is full of snap and ginger while its characters are true to life. The scenes of the comedy are laid in Oldport, Maine. The town has lost its grip and has been in a Rip Van Winkle-like slumber for a long time. It takes Ruth, an inspiriting girl, to inoculate the town with her own spirit of enterprise. Ruth represents the sweetest stage heroine imaginable. She is a product of the normal school and demonstrates the efficiency of the modern young college girl. The opening scene shows Israel Putnam Hubbard's "furniture emporium" which is really an old curiosity shop. Ruth, who is obliged to seek a livelihood, is given a position in the store.

One of the most fascinating sides to "Along Came Ruth" is the fun of watching the town grow from act to act, and seeing the characters blossom out as prosperity hits them. For a study of human nature in its funniest and happiest aspects, "Along Came Ruth" is in a class by itself. The engagement is limited for a short time only. Mail orders as usual are given strict attention. The regular Thursday and Saturday matinees prevail.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

Only another week remains to the engagement of the wonderful Biophone at the Tremont Temple, Boston. This remarkable invention was exhibited for the first time in this country last week and to say that they proved a success is really putting it mildly. Those who witnessed the Biophone declare that it is undoubtedly the greatest musical invention ever conceived by the human mind. As a matter of fact these pictures offer the best example of absolute perfection of "talking movies" ever invented. They were originally perfected in Germany where they scored a tremendous triumph. It is a pity that these pictures cannot remain at the Temple for more than two weeks. This, of course, is due to a large number of prearranged bookings made by Manager Plimpton. Therefore, those who would like to view this extraordinary invention had better take advantage of the last few opportunities. The pictures show a number of European opera stars in a repertoire of the best known operatic works. The most remarkable thing to the Biophone is the extraordinary reproduction of the voices. You get the reproduction as clear as in the original Remember that next Monday starts the final week of its engagement. You really must see it to fully appreciate its unsurpassable merit. There are two performances each day, the matinee starting at 2.15 and the evening performance at 8.15, with a popular scale of prices.

BOSTON THEATRE.

The phenomenal success scored by the Majestic Players, during their brief season at the Majestic Theatre, and their subsequent appearance at the Boston theatre this week, has imbued Manager Leahy with the desire to offer his patrons a list of attractions far greater and more elaborate than already presented. For this reason he has retained Dustin Farnum, who will appear next week in what may be rightfully termed his greatest dramatic success "The Squaw Man." The story of this thrilling dramatic success written by Edwin Milton Royle and originally presented by both Dustin Farnum and William Faversham offers many opportunities for excellent dramatic acting. Mr. Farnum will appear as James Wynnegate, a handsome dashing young English army officer, afterwards known as "Jim" Carston. Wynnegate is wrongly accused of having embezzled a trust fund, raised by the members of his regiment for the relief of the widows and orphans of those who die in battle. To save the honor of the family Wynnegate agrees to disappear. He leaves England in a trading schooner and is next seen in the West with a westerner whom he has saved from several "confidence" men. The two become warm friends. Wynnegate, now known as Carson has incurred the enmity of "Cash" Hawkins, who makes several attempts on Carston's life. On his last attempt he nearly succeeds, but is shot down from behind by a beautiful Indian girl Naturich, who out of gratitude he marries and a little boy blesses the union. The subsequent events in the lives of the two people offer a series of tense and absorbing scenes.

WILBUR THEATRE.

William Hodge who made "The Man from Home" so famous and who starred for six years in that delightful Booth Tarkington drama, is said to have every whit as delightful a piece for his unique exploitation in his new play, "The Road to Happiness." His new role of Jim Whitman in this latest footlight hit is declared to be equally full of native humor and Yankee cleverness as his now so celebrated role of Daniel Voorhees Pike. Mr. Hodge describes Whitman, in fact, as being "a sort of younger brother of Pike." "The Road to Happiness" ran for twenty-five weeks at the Garrick Theatre, Chicago, last season, making the record there, and it is now to open the regular season at the Wilbur Theatre in Boston for a run which bids fair to parallel the twenty-seven weeks original Boston engagement of "The Man from Home." The play is said to be "'Sag Harbor', 'Shore Acres,' 'Way Down East,' and 'The Man from Home' all rolled into one," while Lord Northcliffe who witnessed one of its performances in Chicago styles it "an American 'Bunty Pulls the Strings.'" All the quaint and quizzical wit and humor of dialogue which made Pike so delightful is said to characterize Whitman. Plenty of heart interest causes the play to swing between smiles and tears. The supporting cast will include Gertrude Hitz, still his leading lady, as the unjustly accused Viola Winthrop and Hazel Sexton as the Squire's daughter while Ida Vernon, that always welcome old-time favorite, has a unique role. Scott Cooper as the Squire and A. L. Evans as the old farmer, Phil also have conspicuous characters. The engagement will open on Labor Day evening.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Billy Watson and his burlesquers have a mighty good show this season and they should draw good crowds at the Gaiety next week, Sept. 14, where they are to appear. There are some good costumes, good singing and some especially fine scenery. The show is divided into two acts and four scenes. The first act is entitled "Krousemeyer in Japan," while the final act is called "Krousemeyers Christening." The plots in both pieces will be conspicuous by their absence but will be more than offset by the large number of people who work in a remarkable manner. Among some of the songs of the play are "When I'm Dreaming of Ireland" "I'm Going Home" "Mother McCree" "The Blue and the Gray" and the "Rose of the Mountain Trail." Instrumental selections by Marion and Thompson will be among the features of the entertainment. The show on the whole should well be worth the patronage of the Gaiety audiences for Billy Watson is one of the big favorites who play each year at this house.

BRAINTREE LODGE NOTES.

The members of Amana Rebekah lodge attended Kincaide's theatre last Monday evening and enjoyed the program.

A number of members of the Amana Rebekah lodge availed themselves of the invitations to visit at Houghs Neck Wednesday and left South Braintree on the 9:45 A. M. car. In the evening the gentlemen of the lodge were invited to be present.

The last meeting of Braintree Grange assumed the form of a lawn party and was held at the Quincy Yacht club. The invitation was given the Grange members by Frank F. Crane of Quincy. There was about twenty-five who availed themselves of the invitation and all had a pleasant time.

The next meeting of the Grange will be held Monday evening Sept. 14. It will be Neighbors' night, Rockland, Randolph, Everett and Ponkapoag giving the entertainments. Refreshments will be furnished by the Braintree Grange.

An invitation has been received to attend the Randolph neighbors' night on Wednesday, Sept. 9. The lecturer has arranged an entertainment and would like all the members to go who can do so. The plans are to leave South Braintree square at 7.15 o'clock

SCHOOL CENSUS CHANGES.

The honorary bearers were from Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, of which the deceased was a charter member were Grand Knight William A. Carey, Charles C. Hearn and T. J. O'Connell.

The bearers were Thomas Lane of Boston, Representative Michael T. Sullivan, Joseph Dasha, Eugene O'Connor and Henry McGrath.

At the grave in the family lot in St. Mary's cemetery the priests united in a prayer service. Although it was the wish of the family that flowers be omitted, several fine remembrances were received from Boston friends.

HANCOCK STREET SIDEWALK.

Now that a new sidewalk is being laid in front of the Hancock cemetery it would seem best that the long row of Elm trees should be cut down. In most of the cases the trees are in bad shape due to ravages by the elm tree beetle and other insects and the life of them at best will be short. If removed now, and maple or some similar trees set out they will eventually furnish sufficient shade. If allowed to remain it will be but a short time at best before they will have to be taken down which will leave a bad place in the sidewalk. It would be a great improvement if there was a sidewalk outside the trees as well as inside, with a grass plot between.

The statement published Friday, that William McQueen the South Quincy boy who was seriously injured in Maine by being run over by a freight train, had died from his injuries, is denied by his family. Just where the story started that the young man had passed away is not known.

According to immediate family friends, a telegram was received from Bangor, Friday noon, stating that the Young man's condition was as good as might be expected. The telegram said that he would probably lose one leg, but that it was thought that the other might be saved and that he would recover.

RUSSIANS HOLD THEIR LINE

Hard Fighting With Combined Enemies in Russian Poland

WIN VICTORIES IN GALICIA

Czar's Cavalry Terrorizes Austrian Troops, According to Official Reports—Claim That Entire Austrian Army Is In Grave Danger of Complete Annihilation

Petrograd, (St. Petersburg) Sept. 5.—The Russian armies are fighting along an entirely new battle line. In Russian Poland, where the Austrian left wing has been heavily re-enforced by the Germans, the fighting is of the most serious character. The Russians are holding their lines, content to remain on the defensive until the additional re-enforcements now being sent forward arrive.

To the south, in Austria, however, the situation is much different. There the Russians are on the offensive, and the Austrians have been pushed back toward the San river. They are holding their advanced lines and are concentrating on Prezemysl, where another great battle is certain.

The advance of the Russians through Galicia is declared to be extremely rapid. The Cossacks are sweeping the country, in front of the infantry, falling back whenever strong positions are located.

To the activity of the Russian cavalry much of the present success is due. It has deliberately violated the rules of safety in charging intrenched Austrian positions, but by doing so has terrorized the enemy, the official reports say, and as the result the opposition has lost much of its forcefulness.

The general staff issued a statement reviewing the general situation, which was everywhere characterized as excellent. It is stated that the operations in East Prussia are again being forced, although the Germans are now present on the Russian advanced lines in great force. It is admitted the German artillery has so far proven superior to the Russian, but it also stated that additional artillery is now being sent into action.

The war office announces the result of the fighting Sept. 1 between Lublin and Kholm. It stated that the Austrians attacked the Russian centre and were repulsed with the loss of several thousand men and many rapid fire guns.

It is stated at the war office that the entire Austrian army is now in grave danger of complete annihilation. In Galicia the fighting forces are reported as almost exhausted by reason of the continued Russian assault and in their retreat have abandoned enormous quantities of supplies, including thousands of rounds of ammunition, guns of all description, from rapid-firers to heavy artillery, and much field hospital equipment.

It is stated that all of Austrian Galicia from the border to the San river defenses is now held by the Russians. In addition another Russian force is now operating south of the Dniester river. The war office declares heavy re-enforcements are constantly going forward and that already the Austrian army is so far outnumbered that its effectiveness as a potent fighting force has been greatly reduced. It is believed to be the intention of the Russian general staff to drive the army wherever possible into the fortifications and leave enough troops behind to bottle them up, thus making an onward march to Vienna easy.

The war office, in reviewing the twelve days' operations, reports that Thursday, in a battle to the northwest of Lemberg, the Austrians, who had tried to assume the offensive, were badly routed, losing another army standard, several hundred prisoners and many guns. The report says:

"Our victories over the Austrians have been continuous, and it now appears that they were much greater than the earlier reports indicated. The Austrians struck at Zamost, in Russian Poland, and their initial attack was successful, as the Russian forces there were greatly outnumbered. Re-enforcements hurried to the front soon changed this and the Austrians in turn were routed with very heavy losses.

"In the meanwhile the Russian advance was in progress all along a battle line that extended for nearly 200 miles. Lemberg was the objective of the main army operating through Austrian Galicia. The enemy, however, after vainly attempting to block the general advance of the Russians, was routed with very heavy losses. Instead of falling back on Lemberg, the Austrians abandoned that city, first burning many supplies.

"After Lemberg had been occupied Zolkiew, sixteen miles to the north, was taken. The Austrian retreat then continued, the rear guard being badly cut to pieces by the Russian cavalry, which is operating with great brilliancy. The Austrians did not stop until they reached the defenses of the river San. The Austrians have mounted their artillery all along the river bank and the Russian artillery is already firing on it. It is reported from the front that the Austrian artillery up to the present has been very ineffective."

BRAINTREE

The public schools of Braintree will reopen on Tuesday, Sept. 8.

Standish Young of Myrtle street returned home this week from Friendship, Maine, where he has been summering at Camp Durrell.

Miss Louise Green of Arnold street left this morning for the Newfound Lake House, Bristol, N. H., for a two weeks' vacation.

Sympathy is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Roger Lakin of Tremont street because of the death of their little daughter, who passed away Thursday.

The youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Leben of Howard street was taken seriously ill Monday, but now considered out of danger.

The granite curbing at the corner of Elm and Railroad street, furnished by the owner of Long's Block and set by the town, is a great improvement at that point.

MARSHFIELD FAIR.

Quincy was well represented at the Marshfield Fair. This fair now has grown to be one of the largest if not the largest state fair in New England. The Brockton Fair is not a state fair, being a private corporation. The old Plymouth County Fair at Bridgewater; the Bristol County Fair at Taunton, are played out; the Hingham Agricultural Society no longer holds out of door attractions and the Norfolk County Agricultural Fair at Readville ceased years ago.

Quincy was represented by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Burgin, Howard Rogers Mr. Winslow, Henry Rodgers, Elihu Spear, Mrs. James Walker, Miss Elizabeth Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wright, Miss Hersey, Will Howland, Horace F. Spear, Mrs. Helen Bass, George H. Hitchcock and others, all of whom greeted our former townsman Lysander S. Richards, who has been a director and one of the managers for thirty-five years.

The great success of the Society is due largely to the interest taken in it by Tom W. Lawson, its president.

READING IN BED MADE EASY.

There is a great deal of pleasure in reading in bed. Mark Twain not only read while stretched out in bed but did most of his creative literary work in the same position.

Reading while propped up in bed is no more harmful than reading beside the library table provided a good light is obtainable. An electric lamp of twenty candle-power furnishes an excellent light for this purpose if it is arranged so it can be affixed in a proper position on the head of the bed.

A portable electric lamp for this purpose consists of a long silk-covered cord, to one end of which is affixed the necessary screw plug for connecting with the wall socket. At the other end is the lamp and shade and a suitable clasp for fastening the lamp to the head of the bed.

Mrs. Arthur Farmer of 38 Baxter street is entertaining her mother from Alberton, P. E. Island, during the month of September. She is proprietress of one of the large hotels of Alberton.

LET THE SLOGAN BE A BEAUTIFUL QUINCY

Col. Henry L. Kincaide Has Praise for Local Papers and Asks Everybody to be a Booster

Suggests a City Planning Board and Display of Flowers

The Daily Ledger proposes to continue in every issue for some time, the publication of interviews on the advantages of QUINCY as a residential city, and invites everyone to be a booster.

Whether or not the recent advertising of Quincy had anything to do with a building boom, that started in this morning is uncertain. It is a fact, however, that this morning there were many applications for building permits made at the office of the Inspector of Buildings, the estimated value of the work contemplated by the new work being $19,500. As these preliminary estimates are always small, it is safe to say that the total will be nearly $25,000 before the work is completed.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide was seen on the holiday and he writes:

"The recent effort of some public spirited citizens to place before the people of the State, through publicity, the many excellent reasons why QUINCY is a good place in which to reside, is deserving of praise.

"For years our local papers have shown a desire to boost the city through their news columns on every occasion possible. The pessimist, however, has been lurking on every corner, dissatisfied with himself, his neighbors, his work, his city and her institutions. Nothing is right and nothing suits him. It will be the same for him wherever he lives, unless he comes under the influence of the booster and loyal citizen. Not until then will HE become a booster. QUINCY is all right. It is a splendid suburban city with numerous superior advantages as a place in which to live. Its citizens are industrious people, largely the great middle class.

"That our citizens really do get together for common good and sociability is best demonstrated by our many churches, lodges, mens' and womens' clubs, welfare organizations, parents' associations, patriotic societies and such. I doubt if any city or town in the state can be found with a larger number per capita of such organizations as in QUINCY. There many societies and organizations can be made a wonderful factor in the development of our city, if they will but undertake the work.

"We might have a city planning board made up of public spirited citizens to plan and lay out the future development of the city beautiful. There are so many things a planning board can suggest to beautify and improve the city, that each organization and our public spirited citizens might undertake to do some one thing each year. Our citizens would take pride in seeing the wonderful change that would take place, and knockers would soon step into ranks of the boosters or find themselves in unpleasant surroundings.

"Suppose, for instance, every public and private building in QUINCY made a reasonable display of flowers suitably arranged in attractive window boxes—suppose grass plots were improved—new shrubs set out—and things in general kept in better shape. Suppose our factories, work shops, and railroad stations became interested in the scheme—suppose attractive shade trees were set out each year along the sidewalks in our residential sections.

"Suppose unsightly dumps and back yards were all cleaned up, and suppose owners of old buildings became public spirited and painted up these buildings. Suppose old tumbled down sheds and buildings were torn down or repaired.

"In short order the whole city of QUINCY would be transformed in appearance and it certainly would be worth while. Then suppose public sentiment prompted the occupants of every dwelling, shop, factory or other building to own a flag pole and an American flag, and on patriotic occasions to display the flag, which means so much to us all, not only today while the clouds of war hang over other nations, but the flag which represents the great freedom we enjoy. Such a display would be an inspiring sight, and every resident would be proud of his home city.

"If our organizations would each undertake to do something to beautify and improve our city, the citizens as a whole would soon become imbued with the spirit of 'A CITY BEAUTIFUL.'

"QUINCY is all right, and each one of us should believe in her possibilities. Every effort to boost and im-

America Observes Centenary of "The Star Spangled Banner."

Patriotic America now observes the centennial of the writing of its most popular national song, "The Star Spangled Banner." The verses—not the music—were written by Francis Scott Key just 100 years ago during the war with Great Britain. Key was detained overnight on a British battleship near Fort McHenry, Baltimore. The fort was under fire. The rockets' red glare and the bombs bursting in air gave proof through the night to young Key that the flag was still there. When morning came and the flag still flew he dashed the memorable verses off on the back of some old envelopes as he was being rowed to shore. In commemoration of the centenary Baltimore prepared a big celebration to last from Sept. 6 to 13, inclusive, at which it was arranged to display the original flag that inspired the poem, preserved in the National museum at Washington. In the illustration are shown a portrait of Key as he looked when he wrote the verses and picture of a part of the original flag and reproduction in Key's handwriting of a part of the poem.

AUTOMOBILES IN COLLISION

Wife of Dr. H. L. Dearing Among Injured

About 6.25 Monday evening a collision of automobiles occurred at the intersection of Franklin and Summer streets, South Braintree, but the persons concerned luckily escaped serious injury.

An automobile containing Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Thayer, their two little sons, and a friend, R. I. Spier of Enfield, Connecticut, was proceeding down Summer street toward Sunset lake and was just about to cross Franklin street when a machine containing Dr. Henry L. Dearing, his wife and their two children appeared right ahead on Franklin street going towards Braintree. The machines crashed and Mrs. Dearing and the two children were thrown out, Mrs. Dearing being rendered unconscious.

She was attended by Dr. F. H. Merriam, assisted by Dr. F. R. Dame, and recovered her senses in a few minutes. She was taken home by Dr. Merriam in his automobile. Her face was somewhat bruised and she suffered a slight concussion of the brain.

None of Mr. Thayer's party were injured, and all kept their seats. The mudguard of the Thayer automobile was bent and the glass in one headlight cracked. Two spokes in a rear wheel of Dr. Dearing's car were broken. Mr. Thayer stated that he was driving his car about seven or eight miles an hour, that he was sounding the horn and that all lamps on the machine were lighted. It is said that Dr. Dearing's car showed no lights front or rear and that it appeared so suddenly in the path of the other machine that a collision was unavoidable. The official time for lighting auto lamps was 6.40 and the accident happened about fifteen minutes earlier.

WHOLE FAMILY POISONED

Ate Heartily of Toadstools Taken for Mushrooms

As a result of mistaking toadstools for mushrooms, seven Italians were poisoned, and are all on the dangerous list. Three are at the Quincy City Hospital. The men boarded at the home of Adriano Crescini, 35 Brook street, and are known as Pietro, Basillo and Fernando Regio, Luigi Dameoni Yanna Svoldo and Alillo Marconi.

Saturday afternoon one of the party picked a large basket full of toadstools and prepared them for the holiday feast. All ate freely and at 10.30 that night commenced to complain. Finally the poison struck home directly, and then realizing their predicament they became delirious and roused the neighborhood with their cries.

Police headquarters were notified, and an emergency call for doctors was sent out by Sergt. Bishop. As has been the case for several weeks, there was no general response.

Finally Drs. McLeod, Diehl, Ahlstrom, Duncan, Bartlett and Jones reached the house and worked desperately, using hot mustard as an emetic.

Patrolmen Corbett, Malone, Cahill, Halloran, Fallon, gathered, and their assistance was required in restraining the men, who insisted on attempting to escape. After considerable work on the part of the doctors the poison was removed from the stomachs of the men and three were sent to the hospital at midnight.

PRIVATE FUNERAL.

The funeral of Gilbert M. Miller was held Sunday afternoon from his late residence on Kent street, and in accordance with the wish of the family, the services were of a simple nature. Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of Bethany Congregational church officiated. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

These sales will be watched with interest at the present time of high valuation and some comment was made by Mr. Johnson on the same.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS REOPENED TODAY

Large Increase in Attendance Is Reported at Several of the Buildings

Quincy High School Now Has Over 900 Pupils

The public schools of the city opened this morning for the fall term after a long summer vacation. Bright and early the school army of the city were seen wending their way toward the different school buildings prepared for the winter's work.

At the High school the old classes reported at 8 o'clock and the line of study was immediately taken up, and an hour after opening of school work was going on with the regularity of clock work.

The entering class reported at 11 o'clock and the remainder of the session was occupied in registering the entering class and assigning the work. Each of the entering class was given a sheet to fill out which gave the name and age of the pupil as well as the grammar school from which he or she was graduated and other data.

Registration had not been completed to such an extent at 1 o'clock that any data as to the entering class or as to the registration of the school can be given. It is safe to say however that the total registration of the school will exceed that of past years probaly over 900.

Pupils have two weeks in which to enter, and as there are many who have not as yet arrived home from their summer vacation the correct total can not be given for some days.

As was expected some of the grammar buildings were crowded, especially the Washington, Coddington and Atherton Hough schools. It was impossible this noon to give the enrolment or the number of the entering clas, but the figures will be given at a meeting of the teachers who have been notified to meet Supt. Barbour at the Coddington school Wednesday afternoon.

In the Willard and Gridley Bryant schools there is plenty of room. In the Massachusetts Fields and Quincy district both buildings have all they can accommodate, and it is possible that additional seats may have to be put in some of the roms.

At the Atherton Hough school the overflow will have to be accommodated at the Coddington building until the addition is completed and the Washington overflow will be taken care of at the Adams school some of whose pupils may have to be transferred to the Lincoln or John Hancock buildings. Both of these buildings however are well filled.

LUTHERAN CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the Boston District Lutheran societies was held Labor Day at Merrymount park and was attended by upwards of 1500, who came from all the parishes in the cities and towns about Boston, some even coming from Lowell and Brockton.

The address in the morning was made by Rev. A. N. Bernander of Boston and in the afternoon by Rev. W. L. Goldstrom of Norwood and Rev. E. J. Eckstrom of Worcester. Rev. J. L. Larson of Boston, the president, presided. During the services there was music by the united young peoples choir of the churches represented at the conference.

The young people also served a lunch at noon and refreshments at the close of the exercises in the evening. During the afternoon there was also a series of sports.

PASTOR WELCOMED.

Rev. L. Hokenson, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, and Mrs. Hokenson who returned Saturday from their summer vacation in Pennsylvania, were tendered a home coming welcome by the people of the church Saturday evening. The address of welcome was made by Rev. Dr. C. F. Johanson of Boston. During the reception Rev. Mr. Hokenson was presented with a purse of money by the parishioners, while Mrs. Hokenson was presented by the ladies with a beautiful bouquet.

The Quincy Women's Riverside Club holds a regular meeting tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock at the clubhouse on Edison park.

BUSINESS SECURITY.

Stagnation In All Countries, Not Insuring This Security.

One of the most important questions of the day relates to the extent to which a government should interfere in the affairs of business. The successful man has always had to run the risk of attack. Safety from unreasonable interference by government or attack by others leads the ambitious man on to his greatest exertions. In some countries, as in parts of Asia, government rapacity has made it dangerous for a man to acquire anything beyond his bare necessities. In such a society, nothing but poverty and business stagnation can exist.

Governmental intervention in the affairs of business should extend only over such things as are necessary for fair publicity and truthful statements. Under such a government, business security is at its best. Individuality and initiative are encouraged; the country is progressive, and its future prosperity is well guarded. But as soon as legislation begins to deprive the producer of a square deal, or where business is "regulated" by people without the experience and necessary training, business security will be transformed into business depression. A government should be limited to its natural functions of just and reasonable legislation for the greatest good of the greatest number of people, and should never show favors in order to "catch votes" or to secure campaign contributions.

In addition to Certain-teed Roofing, we also manufacture a complete line of lower priced roofings, building papers, shingles, sheathing, carpet linings, etc., put up in standard-sized rolls, packages and weights. THE STOCK EXCHANGES.

The reports of stock market quotations are rarely printed on the front pages of the newspapers. But in ordinary times there are a great many men who turn to the story of the ticker before they read the most sensational dispatches on page one. They may even read the market report before the baseball.

The closing of the stock exchanges of course inflicts hardship. Business men who own securities now have no means of knowing what may be the value of their shares. A great many men are thrown out of work, from the people of substantial investment houses, as cautious and conservative as any bankers, down to the vultures of Wall street, the hangers-on, and has-beens who flock around the blackboards.

To a great many men, the interest they take in stock market "fliers" is a business damage. The same time devoted to developing new ideas in their own field, where they are thoroughly at home, would be far more profitable. The only possible game the outsider can play is to buy only at rare intervals, when the market is deeply depressed. But most men after winning once on a conservative basis, get too much the taste of blood. Usually they go in at the high level at which they sold and drop more than they previously made.

Hence it is that the closing of the exchanges is not all loss. The newspapers published since the stock exchanges closed must seem strangely blank to the great army of fortune seekers who watch the quotations. Even the thrill of marching millions across the sea can not take the place of their sporting interest in the rise and fall of favorite stocks.

A great many business men must now be able to proceed at once to the work of the day. Previously they had first to survey the day's conflict of bulls and bears, and decide whether it was an opportune time to buy or sell. This does not help one to perform efficiently his daily task of bread-winning.

REPUBLICAN DINNER.

The second annual outing and banquet of the Ward One Republican committee is to be held at Nortemans, Houghs Neck, Thursday evening and the affair promises to be fully as successful as that of a year ago. The affair is not held in the interest of any particular candidate for either state or municipal office, the idea being that the Republicans should meet in a social manner and be given an opportunity to hear some of the candidates for State honors at the primaries.

Samuel McCall, the Republican candidate for Governor is expected, as is also Grafton Cushing the candidate for Lieutenant Governor. Others who are expected are George Raymond and Frank Fessenden Crane candidates for the nomination for congressman, Guy Ham, candidate for councillor; George L. Barnes and others.

MEN RESCUED IN QUINCY BAY

Mark Anscus and Charles Honzel of East Braintree narrowly escaped drowning when their sail boat capsized off the Willows in Quincy bay Monday evening. The overturn was witnessed by a person who phoned police headquarters. Sergt. Bishop sent word to Harvey's, Power's and the Wollaston Yacht club and while men were preparing to go to their assistance from these places a motor boat shot out from Adams Shore with three boys. In the boat were Frank Melville 45 Newton street, and Richard and Ellsworth Loud of Gannet road. They headed for the spot and reached the men in time to rescue them in a sensational manner. Both were able to go to their homes.

LAWRENCE—SUTTERBURG.

QUINCY MEN IN HOSPITAL

Walter Ela and Arthur Harris, well known residents of this city, are in the Plymouth City Hospital, and their wives are at their homes, suffering from injuries received in an auto accident at Plymouth on Monday evening.

Walter Ela sustained a broken arm and minor bruises. Arthur W. Harris has a broken wrist and shoulder, and Mrs. Ela and Mrs. Harris sustained slight injuries and are suffering from a slight shock.

There were three automobiles in the party, that of Mr. Ela, Elmer F. Ricker and Dr. Gould. Mr. Ela was leading the party and was some 300 feet ahead. When about 12 miles out of Plymouth, on a sandy road Mr. Ela turned out to pass another automobile and as he did so, one of the rear wheels of his auto got caught in the sand and before he could get out of it the car turned turtle.

Medical assistance was rendered the two injured men, who were taken to the Plymouth hospital. Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Ela who escaped with some bruises and a severe shaking up were able to return to Quincy.

This morning Dr. F. E. Jones left for Plymouth in the touring car of Mr. Barbour and if the injured men are able to take the trip they will be brought back to Quincy. According to the parties in the other two cars Mr. Ela was not going fast at the time of the accident.

BARRY DAY AT TAUNTON

The city of Taunton observed "Barry day" in honor of George Barry of this city, at its Colonial league base ball grounds on the holiday afternoon Practically the entire city government was represented in the several thousands that filled the park in the closing game of the season.

As the "Little Commodore" as he is called in that city, stepped to the bat the first time, Mayor Fish of Taunton presented him with a handsome diamond ring, the gift of the sporting public of the city.

Volleys of cheers floated across the field as the local boy recovered from his surprise enough to make a short acceptance. And, to show how appreciative he was he caught a beautiful game.

The day was literally turned inside out for the youthful catcher. Cards were prominently displayed announcing "Barry Day," and nearly 1000 specially designed hats were distributed to the children for the occasion. A band furnished music all afternoon.

Nearly 50 Quincy people, including Mr. and Mrs. Michael Barry, parents of George witnessed the game in specially reserved seats. Many made the trip by auto.

THOUSANDS AT LAND SALE

Over 1000 people spent the afternoon of the holiday on the Robertson estate which the Bonelli-Adams Co., call the West Quincy terrace. No better name could be selected, however, than the Robertson terrace, as the estate is well known in Quincy. Streets have been laid out on this beautiful estate, and lots were sold at auction without reserve on the holiday.

As an extra attraction there were selections by a band, a free distribution of presents, and finally the gift of a man's watch and a lady's watch and canes to which were attached pennants of the West Quincy terrace. The presents included field and opera glasses, umbrella stands, ash stands, vases clocks, etc.

Several lots were sold on Robertson street where the highest price paid was seven and three-quarters cents. Other lots were sold on Connell street Shirley street and Kimball street. A few sold as low as three cents per foot, but five or six cents was about the average. One of the best lots sold at the corner of Kimball and Campbell streets was purchased by Frank F. Prescott for $195. It is 45x80 containing 3600 square feet. The private sale of the lots will continue.

FINNISH OUTING.

The Lutherforbundets of Boston district were held on the lower Merrymount Park field on the holiday under the auspices of the Quincy society. Three pastors, A. M. Benander, L. W. Gullstrom and J. A. Erickson, participated in the program as well as Dr. C. F. Johannson. Just before the last number all united in singing America

Benedict XV., the New Pope

Benedict XV., the new pope, was born Giacomo Della Chiesa at Pegli, Italy, on Nov. 21, 1854. His elevation to the holy see was as unexpected as was the election of the late Pope Pius X. He was made a cardinal on May 30 last. He was appointed archbishop of Bologna in 1907. He studied at the Academy For Nobles at Rome and was ordained a priest on Dec. 21, 1878. Of the five cardinals recently appointed he was the only one who was not of the so called Curia prelates, or attached in some way to the Vatican. Cardinal Della Chiesa was the intimate and confidant of the late Cardinal Rampolla. He acted as secretary to Cardinal Rampolla when the latter was papal nuncio at Madrid in 1883. He was appointed a monsignor on May 28, 1883. When Cardinal Rampolla returned to Rome and was made papal secretary of state by Pope Leo XIII. Mgr. Della Chiesa was made an official in his office.

BABY BORN AT DRUG STORE

Sunday papers reported the birth of a child in a street car in Dorchester. Not to be outdone the birth of a baby girl took place in the drug store of C. C. Hearn in City Square Sunday morning.

The mother gave her name as Mrs. J. Donaldson of East Braintree. She was on her way to a Boston hospital and feeling fatigued on arriving in City Square entered the drug store of Mr. Hearn for relief. She was taken to the prescription room where she was attended by Dr. H. E. Diehl who had been hastily summoned. The police ambulance was summoned and she was removed to the City Hospital where mother and baby are reported as doing well.

BOY HIT BY AUTO.

Francis Lloyd of Field street, 10 years, was struck and run over by the auto of C. W. Nightingale Saturday evening in Kincaide square, but Sunday was able to get around as though nothing had happened. Francis jumped in the path of the machine and was struck by the mudguard. The forward nigh wheel passed over him. He was cut on the forehead and somewhat bruised.

Louis Ross of the Wardwell bowling alleys carried him to the residence of Dr. W. F. Blanchard nearby, but on finding him out brought him to alleys where he rendered first aid. No doctors could be reached on an emergency call. Dr. John A. Gordon who was passing treated the boy and took him to his home.

RILEY—THOMAS.

Bernard Riley of Common street, one of the best known young men of this city, and Miss Catherine Thomas, of New Orleans, were married in New York on Thursday and are now at their new home at 55 Bedford street. The couple met in New Orleans several years ago. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Riley, and is a sheet metal lather. His occupation takes him to all parts of the country, and it was while on a trip he met his bride. ACCIDENT PROVES FATAL

William McQueen Dies at the Bangor Hospital

A dispatch from Bangor, reports the death of William McQueen, the 17 year old Quincy boy who was seriously injured last week, while trying to board a freight train at Millinocket for Aroostook country, where he was to seek employment in the potato fields. McQueen, accompanied by Fred Carlson and Roy Crammond, left Quincy some ten days previous to seek work in the potato fields. They went to Portland by boat, and from there to Millinocket they rode in a box car, and were boarding a train when the accident occurred. His companions saw the accident, and ran to his assistance. With a shoe string they tied up tightly the injured boy's leg so that he would not bleed to death. One of the boys ran for a doctor. The McQueen boy was taken to the hospital in Bangor, and the other two boys spent what money they had left in following him there where they have been seeking shelter at the police station that they might be near their companion.

The boys are heartbroken over the accident, but will remain over to attend the inquest which is being held today.

Up to a few weeks ago young McQueen worked in the shipyard but owing to lack of work lost his position. It was then that he started for Maine to find employment.

His body was brought to Quincy, and this afternoon his funeral was held from his parent's home. Among those present were members of the Clark class of the First Presbyterian church, with which he was affiliated. Rev. Daniel McLeod of the United Presbyterian church conducted the services. There were many floral remembrances. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery, the bearers all being chums of the deceased.

Miss Avis Tobey led the Y. P. S. C. E. service Sunday evening at the Wollaston Congregational church and the topic, "The prayer verse," was considered by the members.

DRIVE BACK GERMANS ALL ALONG LINE

Vigorous Offensive Is Suddenly Taken by the Allies

DRAMATIC CHANGE IN THE FORTUNES OF WAR

Powerful Force of Invaders That Has Been Smashing Back British and French Unexpectedly Outflanked by Fresh Army Hurled Forward After Enemy Had Been Lured by Allies' Plan of Retreat—Battle Over Tremendous Area Crumples Up German Lines and May Be Carried Into German Territory—Nothing Appears to Have Been Overlooked by Strategists Who Planned Surprise

London, Sept. 8.—The great gray armies of Germany have their backs to the foe. Lured on by the masterly strategy of the French generals, a smashing blow has been delivered by the allies, and the Germans are slowly retreating over the French soil across which they have been sweeping like irresistible conquerers.

Whether the defeat will be so decisive as to drive the Germans out of France and change the war scene to Germany cannot be determined for several hours.

All that can be said now is that for the moment the offensive has been taken by the allies, that everywhere along a battlefront of 175 miles the Germans are either retreating or barely holding their own and that every indication points to the fact that the invaders have not only been outgeneraled but outfought.

The powerful German force that has for days been smashing back the British and the French, seeking to outflank the retiring armies, was itself outflanked by a fresh army not yet identified that struck suddenly and heavily into the invading ranks at Nanteuil-le-Haudouin, many miles north of the outposts of the German force.

Outflanked by Fresh Army

The movement was masterly in plan and execution. Before the Germans could face about and get into strategic positions for fighting, another attack was delivered at Meaux. The fighting began Saturday and hour after hour the battle line extended, to Sezanne, to Vitry-Le-Francois, and finally to Verdun, the great French fortified town near the Lorraine border.

The Germans, confident in their ability to continue the invasion that had been so uninterruptedly successful, had penetrated to Coulommiers and Le Ferte Gaucher on Saturday and Sunday, meeting with some resistance, but advancing steadily.

Nothing indicated that the French and British were willing to engage in battle. The high tide of the German triumph was sweeping southward like a tidal wave over the countryside to the southeast of Paris. Already the German host was prophesying that the allies were afraid to fight, that all France lay powerless before them.

Lured Into a Trap

Lured on until the lines were too far outstretched, the first blow of the battle crumpled up the German lines. Before they could be re-formed, the armies that had been retiring unwillingly were hurled forward at last. Both British and French, rebellious against the orders that had carried them backward so many miles, rushed forward against the lines that were trying to face the new danger from the west.

The German retirement began Sunday night, but so doubtful even then was the result of the battle over so tremendous an area that not until Monday did the news of the engagement reach Paris, within a few miles of the great battle lines.

Even now the result of the fighting in the east is uncertain, but in the west the Germans are in a position that is perilous. From Nanteuil-le-Haudouin the allies have continued their victorious march eastward as far as the River Ourcq, where several engagements have been fought which have resulted uniformly in a German retreat.

Invaders In Dire Peril

The French official statements, which have been characterized by conservatism and accuracy, do not state that the German retirement will be permanent or that the allies can continue their triumphs.

But unofficial reports, coming direct from the theatre of war, indicate that the invaders are in dire peril. One considerable force is said to be falling back toward Paris, straight upon the great guns that France expected would be turned upon an advancing and not a retiring foe.

A message from General Pau, the French hero of the war, conquerer at Mulhausen and at Guise, announces that the allies have won a victory at Precy sur Oise, evidently a still earlier achievement than that at Nanteuil. Of more dramatic and important interest is his statement that the imperial guard under command of Crown Prince Frederick William, have been annihilated by the withering fire of the British guns, which the Germans have before this learned to dread.

Was Utterly Unexpected

The sudden change in the fortunes of war has been as dramatic as anything known in all the history of warfare. No coup of Napoleon has been more masterly, no flanking movement of all the wars ever waged has been so impressive in strength and so utterly unexpected by an enemy.

It is too early for the allies to exult unduly over this spectacular move. It may prove a deadly thrust. But London is wild with joy that cannot be restrained, for the strength of the flanking army appears to be so great that it will compel a retirement of the German forces all the way along the great battle line from Paris to Verdun.

Nothing seems to have been overlooked by the French generals who planned the surprise. The position of the allies is admirable, superior in every way to that which had been held when the fighting was on the frontier.

Safety For Allies

On the left of the allies stands Paris unconquered, with its great guns offering shelter to the allies in case of a surprise and with a huge garrison ready to take part in the attack the moment that the German lines show signs of faltering.

Not far from the centre is Chalons-sur-Marne, fairly well fortified, and an entrenched camp capable of housing many thousands of troops. On the right are the grim forts about Verdun, the northermost defense of the great Meuse line that was too strong to tempt an attack by the invaders.

Everywhere is safety for the French and British in case of a repulse; everywhere is continued menace to the Germans once any portion of their lines begin to give. And the first sign of wavering have been passed hours ago, for now Germans by thousands are falling back, more rapidly every hour, on a line that extends for many miles eastward from Paris.

And along the battle lines extending southward from Verdun, where the Germans have been battering to get into the rear of the allies, the French forts and armies are holding their own, so that the time for flanking movements by the invaders seems to have passed.

IMPERIAL GUARD LOST

Reported to Have Been Annihilated by British Force

A Boulogne dispatch to the London Evening News says:

"A telegram has been received from General Pau announcing a victory by the allied forces under Field Marshal French, commanding the British, and General D'Amade, at Precy sur Oise, about twenty-five miles north of Paris.

"The allies were drawn across the northern line with the centre at Precy. The English troops were on the left and the French on the right. The former had in front of them the imperial guard, under Crown Prince Frederick William.

"On both wings, it is reported, the allies were successful. The German left was held by the French and retired to the north.

"The imperial guard, who were ordered to surrender, were annihilated by the British. It is reported that the crown prince was in their midst."

The British official bureau has received no confirmation of this message.

ALLIES FORCE RETREAT

Text of Official Communication Given Out at Paris

A general action is proceeding to the east of Paris, from Nanteuil and LeHaudouin to Verdun, according to an official communication given out at Paris. The text of the official notice is as follows:

"A general action has started on the line through Nanteuil-le-Haudouin, Meaux, Sezanne and Vitry-le-Francois and extending to Verdun.

"Thanks to the very vigorous action of our troops, strongly supported by the British, the Germans started retiring.

"The Germans had advanced Saturday and Sunday into the region between Coulommiers and Le Ferte-Gaucher.

"In the Austro-Russian theatre of operations, twelve divisions of the Austrian army in the vicinity of Lemberg, Galicia, have been completely destroyed."

Nateuil-le-Haudouin is twenty-five miles northeast of the city of Paris and ten miles southeast of Senlis. The distance from Nanteuil-le-Haudouin to Verdun is roughly 120 miles.

ALLIES SIGN COMPACT

All Three Nations Must Consent Before Peace Can Be Made

"All for one; one for all" is the gist of the latest pact between members of the triple entente. By this new pledge, signed at London by representatives of the British, French and Russian governments, they agree that peace shall not be concluded separately during the present war by any one of the allies and that no one of the allies will demand conditions of peace without the previous agreement of the others.

As a result of this agreement there will be no rest for the kaiser even in event of the capture of Paris and the defeat of the allied armies in France. He cannot treat for peace with them as long as the czar's forces still menace from the north.

BRITISH CRUISER SUNK

Second to Be Blown Up by Mine In the North Sea

The light cruiser Pathfinder, of the British navy, has been blown up by a mine in the North sea. The loss of life is not definitely known. Paymaster Finch was killed and Commander Leake was wounded. Six junior officers and two petty officers are missing.

The Pathfinder is the second British cruiser to be blown up by mines in the North sea. She was of 2940 tons and carried a complement of 268 men. She was commissioned at Portsmouth in October, 1913, and was attached to the English flotilla.

GERMANY'S SIEGE GUNS

Huge Death Instruments of Great Value to the Invaders

Germany has clearly demonstrated the value of huge siege guns in the present war. The Germans are well equipped with these guns, the greatest implements of destruction yet conceived for land operations. The problem of transporting these huge pieces has been overcome by the use of powerful motor trucks.

In former wars the use of such guns has been prohibited by the inability to get transport facilities, but the use of trucks and specially constructed wheels for the guns has made it possible to rush these instruments of death close on the heels of the cavalry and infantry.

The 11-inch howitzer and the more recent invention of 14-inch calibre are the big guns used by the Germans. The 11-inch gun is 11 feet long. The shell weighs 760 pounds and can be thrown six and one-half miles. Thirty-eight pounds of powder are used in the charge. The 14-inch howitzer can throw a shell of 1250 pounds more than eight miles.

WILSON WON'T TAKE STUMP

President Declares America Is Greater Than Any Party

Washington, Sept. 8.—President Wilson announced he would not make a speaking tour during the coming campaign. He declared his intention of "staying on the job," because of the "unlooked for international situation."

"America is greater than any party," the president said. "America cannot properly be served by any man who for a moment measures his interest against her advantage. The time has come for great things. These are days big with destiny for the United States, as for the other nations of the world."

His injuries, affecting as they do his right arm, will make it impossible for him to sign papers of state for several weeks to come.

Miss Marion Farwell, president of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Wollaston Congregational church, who has been quite ill, is much better at present.

The Knights of Pythias of greater Boston held a field day at New Downer Landing on Saturday. There were 1200 people present and 30 lodges were represented. The main sporting feature of the afternoon was the base ball game in which the Quincy A. A. beat the Clapp Memorial 4 to 2. The batteries were Duggan and Leonard, Condon and Thompson.

NOVELLI—PEARCE.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized Monday afternoon at the residence of Dr. Charles Wendell Garey, 1187 Hancock street, when Miss Jennie Olive Pearce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Pearce of Fitchburg, became the bride of Elmer Frederick Novelli, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Novelli. The bride is well known in Quincy as a nurse, and the groom is also well known as the local manager of the Folsom Tea Co. on Granite street.

The ceremony took place at 2.30 o'clock, Rev. Edward Norton, pastor emeritus of Bethany Congregational church officiating. The room where the ceremony took place was prettily decorated with asters, dahlias, golden glow and other fall garden flowers, and the ceremony was witnessed by a few intimate friends of the bride and groom.

Miss Olive Johnson of Quincy was the maid of honor, and Miss Gammia Novelli of Quincy, a sister of the groom, was bridesmaid. The groom was attended by Knud Schested and C. Willis Carey.

Dr. Garey presided at the piano, and the bridal party entered the room to the inspiring music of Mendelssohn's wedding march, the bride being preceded by the maid of honor and bridesmaid.

The bride wore a handsome white silk gown with a long veil caught up with forget-me-nots and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses. The maid of honor wore a yellow crepe de chine with lace trimmings and carried a bouquet of white asters, and the bridesmaid wore white silk and carried a boquet of pink carnations.

The bride's gifts to the maid of honor and bridesmaid were chains with pendants, and the groom's gift to the best men were stick pins.

A reception followed the ceremony the bride being assisted in receiving by her mother and the maid of honor and bridesmaid. Light refreshments were served during the reception.

After a brief wedding trip, to Vermont, Mr. and Mrs. Novelli will make their home for the winter at 1187 Hancock street ,where they will be at home after Oct. 1.

YACHTING PARTY CAPSIZED.

Frank Ranagan and party of Norfolk Downs were rescued from drowning Sunday afternoon when a heavy squall capsized their sailing dory off Moon island. Ranagan had taken his guests out earlier in the day and were returning from a fishing trip in Hingham bay when the squall struck. The party was rescued by a passing boat. Later the dory was recovered by Mark H. Kenney of Somerville who towed it to City Point.

QUINCY MEN IN HALL OF FAME

John and John Quincy Adams and John Hancock

No city or town has more native born sons in Boston's "Hall of Fame" than Quincy, Massachusetts. John Adams, the first Vice President of the United States, and also the second President, was born in Quincy; President John Quincy Adams was also born in Quincy, and so was John Hancock, who as Governor signed the act incorporating the town of Quincy in 1792.

In its daily lesson in history which just now is a sketch of the different men in the "Hall of Fame" the Globe says:

John Hancock's uncle was a man of wealth who made his fortune as a bookseller. He left most of his fortune to his nephew, but he also founded the Hancock professorship of Oriental languages at Harvard College. This uncle, Thomas Hancock, had adopted John, sent him to Harvard, and had then taken him into his business.

In all the events that marked the period of the Revolutionary struggle, John Hancock took a foremost part. As a signer of the Declaration of Independence, his name is preserved in the history of his country, and his patriotism was demonstrated in every action of his political life.

Hancock received honorary degrees from Yale, Brown and Harvard Colleges, and the Hancock alcove in the Harvard Library has 1098 volumes that Hancock ordered from London after the fire of 1764 at Harvard. These books were specially bound and they cost him $2500.

He had given to the Brattle street Church a handsome mahogany pulpit, seats for the deacons, a communion table, and the sum of $5000 for needed repairs; soon after this the British took the building for use as a barracks.

At a time that the French fleet arrived at Boston John Hancock entertained 40 officers of the fleet at his house each day. Prices were high for food and there was difficulty even in getting enough at any cost. One day he ordered the milking of all the cows that were at that time pastured on the Common, no matter who owned them; it took 12 pounds of butter that day to serve the guests.

At a banquet given to 500 French allies at Faneuil Hall, when the city of Boston was supposed to be the host, John Hancock paid all the bills. It was John Hancock who fitted out the frigate Alliance and paid all the expenses of Col. Laurens to go to France as our diplomatic agent and thus secure the aid of that country in our struggle for political freedom.

At the handsome Hancock residence on Beacon hill, even while he was Governor of Massachusetts, John Hancock had a salt-fish dinner served every Saturday; and while he was President of the Continental Congress he had Boston codfish sent for his table and served it to his most distinguished guests.

FIELD DAY AT BRAINTREE

The annual clam bake and field day of the Pond Street A. A. was held at Sampson's field on the holiday.

A fine clam bake with an abundance of catables was served at 12.30. The "bake" was in charge of Jack Gratto and Charles Custance. The waitresses were Mrs. Frank G. In the afternoon, there was a closely contested base ball game between the Red Men A. C. of Quincy and a picked team from the Sunset league, the visitors nosing out a victory by the score of 6 to 5. Several players were hurt slightly during the progress of the game and Mrs. J. S. Pierce of Randolph was hit by a pop fly, but none of the injuries were serious.

BERMUDA CUP WON BY AREYTO

Once more the Bermuda trophy offered by the City of Boston has been captured by a Quincy boat. This trophy is raced for annually on Labor day. The cup was won four years ago by Hollis Burgess in a race held under the auspices of the Mosquito club, who presented it as a trophy to be raced for annually on Labor day. The cup has been won by the Squantum, Winthrop, South Boston and Quincy clubs, and this year a Wollaston club boat takes it. The Yacht to be successful this year was the Ayreto of Com. E. F. Drew of the Wollaston Club who won over the Marie L, of A. W. Findlay. The Areyto won out with a lead of 2 minutes, 23 seconds corrected time.

FOOTBALL AT QUINCY HIGH

Thursday at the first call for football candidates issued by Quincy High, the men will report to Capt. Paul Larkin and Coaches Mansur and French for the first pratice of the year.

Quincy will have a pretty good chance this year, especially as the entire back field is still eligible, with the exceptions of Mullen and Murphy, who graduated in June. The veteran backfield men who probably will report are Crocker, Crosscup, Brown, Jepson and Smith.

Hamlin, Larkin, Foy and probably, ex-Capt. Young will be the seasoned men in this year's defense. The rest will have to be raw material.

The loss of Leon White, last year's big tackle, will be felt this season, as he was one of the best men filling the position in this vicinity.

Manager Tom Barstow has completed a schedule that has already been published in the Ledger, the first game being played Sept. 19, at Wellesley and the first home game, Sept. 25, with Hingham.

WOLLASTON A. A. WINS TWICE

The Wollaston A. A. annexed two victories on the holiday. In the morning they defeated the Neponset Wanderers, and the Elmwoods of Newton in the afternoon. Steven's hitting was the feature of the morning game. The score by innings was:

Wollaston	2	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	1	—5
Wanderers	0	2	0	1	0	1	0	0	0	—4

Batteries—Hoyt and Fowler; Woods and Dickson.

The afternoon contest by innings:

Batteries— Sawyer and Fowler; Hicks and Cornell.

BASKET BALL.

On Jan. 5, Quincy High will play its first basket ball game at home with Wellesley. The entire schedule of league games follows:—

Jan. 5—Wellesley at Quincy.
Jan. 8—Reading at Reading.
Jan. 12—Winthrop at Quincy.
Jan. 15—Revere at Revere.
Jan. 29—Wellesley at Wellesley.
Feb. 9—Revere at Quincy.
Feb. 16—Reading at Quincy.
Feb. 26—Winthrop at Winthrop.

About six other games will be scheduled, but with teams outside the league.

Last year inconvenience was caused the players and others, because of the length of the schedule, which caused it to run through the March vacation, and about a week beyond. This year all the games can be played in January and February, which is by far the better way.

As in football, the team will stand a good show against the others in the league. Earl Bates, the veteran forward will captain the team, with Fred Roach as manager.

SPORT NEWS

James McLaughlin of Bates avenue became the New England champion on Saturday in the hop, step and a jump by clearing a distance of 45 ft., 5 1-2 in., at the New England championships at Rockingham fair. McLaughlin has worn the B. A. A. colors for several years. He is a brother of John McLaughlin, a well known jumper, and Thomas McLaughlin, a well known sprinter. He is 22 years of age. McLaughlin will represent the B. A. A. in the national championships.

Fay Phelan qualified for the finals in the century dash, but got no place. In the 220 he finished second, defeating Treadway, the man who has lowered Drew's standards in several events.

Carl Linden, a Finnish resident of West Quincy, was third in the javeline throw, 141 feet. Thomas Djerf entered the hop, step and jump and Fred Kingsbury the 220 yard dash. Neither got places.

WALNUTS WIN THREE.

The Walnut A. C. of Atlantic won three games over the holiday season. Saturday they beat the Holy Name of St. Johns parish, 4 to 3 in 10 innings. Labor day morning they easily beat the Glover A. C. 8 to 3, and in the afternoon they closed out the Bigelows 15 to 7. They now issue a challenge to any teams in the state for the championship.

SPORTS AND POLITICS

At Outing of John Adams Aerie Eagles

Upwards of 200 members and friends of John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles attended its annual clambake at the Squantum aviation field on the holiday. The program included a base ball game, unbilled demonstrations of athletic prowess, and brief speeches by candidates for national, state and city officers.

While the palatable bake was being prepared by Thomas Kilroy of Bristol, R. I., and Thomas Drennan of Attleboro, the Quincy Point Social club, captained by William McEwan, handily defeated the Eagles, captained by President Frank J. Duffy, 11 to 5, in an interesting baseball game.

William Fletcher won a pair of shoes offered for the greatest number of runs scored. A second game was underway when the bake was uncovered and Senator Louis F. R. Langelier, pitching for one of the teams, lost a beautiful chance of winning, what promised to be a most exciting fest.

Efficient service was rendered by the entertainment committee, headed by James J. Mellen, after which President Duffy presented the speakers of the day. All received a royal welcome, whether they touched upon politics briefly or extensively.

Richard Olney, 2d, of Dedham, Democratic candidate for Congress, struck a responsive chord when he declared in favor of a rebuilt merchant marine. He pointed out briefly the ultimate benefits and the assurance of prosperity it carried with it. He endorsed the principles of President Wilson, and said while he had favored a gradual revision of the tariff he believed conditions would now rapidly adjust themselves.

Senator Louis F. R. Langelier's only political reference was that he was a candidate for re-election. He spoke of good friendship existing between the candidates of the present and sandwiched several interesting stories in his brief remarks.

Rep. Michael T. Sullivan scored a hit when he said he believed the workmen's compensation act would be further amended in favor of the employees, and said he had consistently supported that piece of legislation from its introduction two years ago, and during its revision and extension of benefits last session.

John A. Kiggen, district representative to the Democratic state committee endorsed the candidacy of Mr. Olney, and Councilman John A. Nelson spoke in a congratulatory vien.

Treasurer William Welsh of the aerie closed the program. He announced that $1360 had been expended the past year in sick and death benefits, and $870 for the relief of orphans and widows of deceased members.

Sunset brought to a close one of the most successful events in the history of the local aerie.

MILTON GAMES.

The Cunningham Gym baseball team won another game Saturday afternoon when they defeated the Samec club team of Somerville by the score of 3 to 1. The game was uneventful excepting for the hitting of H. Robertson who got three hits in three times up. Chamberlain pitched his usual, good game, striking out 10 men.

The scroe by innings:

The Cuningham Gym base ball team at last have found their equal in the national game, since they were defeated on Labor day by the Page class of the Dudley Street Baptist church by the score of 2 to 0. The game was very close up to the seventh inning when the visitors tallied their two runs. Chamberlain did not pitch as well as usual, and Milton's hitting was decidedly weak.

DARTWELL AND THE CLARA

Having Close Contest in Both Associations

Although there is one more open yacht race under the auspices of the Y. R. A. M. which may change the result, it is doubtful if it will affect the standing in Class D, in which most of the Quincy boats sail. The standing therefore in this class will be read with interest by local yachtsmen, who will not be at all surprised to learn that the Dartwell of ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore of the Quincy Yacht club will carry off the championship in that class. In the Interclub Association however the Clara of ex-Commodore Herbert W. Robbins has the lead. The Dartwell won more points this season than any other yacht in the Y. R A. M.

The standing to date in the Y. R. A. M. and Interclub Y. R. A. of the class D boats is as follows, the entries, points and average being given:

Y. R. A. M.	E.	Points.	Av.
Dartwell	17	1395.7	82.1
Clara	17	1339.0	78.7
Iris	16	842.9	52.6
Mudjekeewis	16	754.3	471.

HIS FATHER'S FRIEND

By PERLEY POORE SHEEHAN

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

When a man has been pining for the romantic all his life—a man, who is going on forty and has an economical wife and a steady job, a man who stays home evenings and rolls his own cigarettes—when a man like this has been yearning for just one weird, scarlet adventure before he is forever too old and he is suddenly confronted with it, what happens?

Does he fall for it?

Sometimes, and again— There was the case of William Q. Johnson!

Of course you may argue that his case was exceptional in that William was none other than the son of Bill Johnson.

Bill had brought his picturesque career to a close by getting hanged in Melbourne—an interesting man and famous in his day throughout the south seas.

But William had never been permitted to know anything about his father's activities. And, as for ships and things, his sainted mother had brought him up to shun them as evil inventions.

On the evening of his adventure Johnson came home from the office, as usual, at 6:30, dutifully kissed his wife and washed himself hurriedly in preparation for the waiting soup. He was visibly preoccupied.

Presently his wife said to him:

"You look worried, dearie. Isn't your work all right?"

"Everything's O. K.," he responded, but he relapsed into silence.

She didn't question him further. He had these silent spells.

Sometimes it was a dispute with his chief at the office, sometimes a stirring of old ambitions, sometimes a goading thought of his small salary.

It was never anything worse than that. His habits were exemplary, and his wife knew it.

Yet the very thing that now held Johnson tongue tied was something he dared not confess—something he could hardly admit to himself without blushing.

It was the memory of a girl!

We should state at once that there were extenuating circumstances. Not only was the girl extraordinarily beautiful, but the way in which she came across William's notice was extraordinary as well.

He had seen her just as he was coming up the steps with his latchkey in his hand. She couldn't have been more than nineteen or twenty. She was slim and dark, and her face was wonderfully lovable and alert.

For a fraction of a second she had inclined in his direction—eyes, face, figure—with parted lips, as though about to speak to him.

Then something in his attitude—he was the most delicate minded of men—or some second thought of her own had made her hesitate.

The girl passed hurriedly on. William passed into the house.

The oddity of the experience had not immediately appealed to him. But a minute later as he climbed the stairs and later still when he washed his face and on through supper he recalled the alertness of the way she had looked at him.

It gave him a shadowy feeling of uneasiness and regret. He tried over and over again to imagine the words that she might have said had he given her the opportunity.

Recollection of the incident returned to him incessantly long after Mrs. Johnson had gone to bed.

He was nervous and wide awake.

Suddenly amid the little sounds of the deepening night—the ticking of the clock, the rumble of a distant trolley car, the stirring of an uneasy window sash—there came a soft, distant tapping at the door.

Johnston started and looked up.

It was past 11. For an interval he did not stir. The summons was repeated, a little louder, but still guarded and cautious.

Johnson tiptoed to the inner hall, turned up the gas and cautiously opened the door.

He had pretty good nerves for an office man, still he couldn't suppress a movement of surprise.

Standing there before him, grotesquely black and misshapen, was a negro dwarf.

The visitor didn't attempt to come in. Instead, he immediately plunged into a series of urgent signs that Johnson was to follow.

He was obviously in a hurry.

Johnson came to a swift resolution. The night had begun adventurously. He would see it through.

As best he could he made the dwarf understand that he would come as soon as he could change his slippers for his shoes. A few minutes later, without having disturbed his wife, he was following the negro silently down the stairs.

It was but a few minutes' walk from the placed Johnson lived to a park, facing upon which were the houses of the wealthy. That's the way it is in New York—poverty and opulence separated by a line as narrow and intangible as a meridian.

To this park Johnson followed the dwarf, the only clear thought emerging from his bewilderment being that his wife might wake up and find him missing.

His guide went fast, with a shuffling, loose jointed glide that kept him on the verge of a run.

Half a block farther on the negro scurried up the steps of a brown stone mansion and, assuring himself that Johnson was still at his heels, opened the door and entered.

The hall light was dimly burning, and Johnson caught an impression of sumptuous furniture.

The negro never tarried, but mounted to the second floor, traversed a corridor to the door of a rear room, paused until Johnson had caught up with him, then knocked and threw the door wide open.

The room was a-shimmer with light.

If Johnson's eyes were dazzled by the sudden brilliancy, his brain was no less confused by what he saw. The most prominent feature of the chamber was a large, white bed, and on this there lay one of the strangest figures he had ever looked upon, not even excepting that of the dwarf who had led him there.

He saw a mass of tangled white hair, knotted about by a red silk handkerchief, and a drift of white beard.

The rest of the face showed brown, like leather, and was set with a pair of piercing blue eyes.

"Come here, where I can look at you," said the man on the bed. Then: "Well, you're Johnson, all right. And I bid him farewell at Pawalanne.

"Willie, your father would 'a' been here if he was livin'," the old man continued. "There are debts that no man forgets. I've come for to seek you on his account. I've got here none too soon."

"I'm sorry you're sick," said Johnson.

"Your father died when you was little," the patriarch went on; "otherwise you'd know all about me. I'm Robert H. King, and king I've been, too, these fifty years. But, oh, they're an ungrateful lot! They're an ungrateful lot!

"I ruled 'em fair, and I ruled 'em squire. I lost my right hand, though, when your father went. He'd 'a' put down this revolution. Do you hear? They started a revolution!"

Johnson said that he heard.

"There's a Malay out there named Possa Sing. He's at the head of this here revolution. He started it because I wouldn't let him have my gal. But I had other plans. I was thinkin' of Red Bill Johnson—a full measure of a man he was—and how he used to boast about that little boy of his'n back in New York.

"It was the last thing that he said when I bid him farewell at Pawalanne —'Be a father to little Willie.' And, by Christopher, I'll do it yet, in spite of that black Malay Possa Sing!

"He got too strong for me—I'm not the man I used to be—but he ain't too strong for Red Bill Johnson's boy. I found your address in a New York directory. I got one from Batavia, and $40 in gold it cost me too. And I rented this house for to die in.

"I could trust the agents for that, but for the rest I couldn't trust them. I had to see you. I've piled up pearls and power for you, Willie. And that ain't all." He paused.

"Minnie," he panted hoarsely.

Johnson turned and half rose impulsively from his chair. The door had opened. Standing there, graceful, slim, shrinking, was the girl of the unspoken message.

"Did my father call?" she asked sweetly, with a lisping accent.

"Aye, stand there, Minnie. Do you blame me for refusing to give her to a Malay?

"Half breed, but I've raised her like a white man's gal. Them people'd die for her. I crowned her queen before we left. That'll settle Possa Sing. He was crazy for her, more than the rest, but him that gets her gets all. And she's a white man's gal." The old man paused. When he spoke again his great whisper was strangely smaller.

"So I brought her with me," he said, "for Red Bill Johnson's boy. There's a schooner at Macassar. 'Sail sou' by west for Pantar strait"—

Those were the last words that Robert King, or King Robert, ever spoke.

When Johnson emerged sufficiently out of his confusion to focus his eyes on the patriarch he noticed that the latter was staring strangely in the direction of the door.

Involuntarily Johnson wheeled and saw standing there a dark youth, whose face was stamped with an expression of fierce and joyful ecstasy.

The girl had also turned, and there sprang to her lips a sob that was transformed into a name. It was "Possa Sing!"

In his extremity Johnson turned to the girl.

"What did he mean?" he whispered.

"I am to be your bride," she faltered. "He made me promise. I started to see you this evening—to ask you not to come." She was shaken in a sudden burst of weeping, and her accent got the better of her. "But, ah, saire, even now, not yet, you have promised him—nothing!"

There are moments of exquisite consciousness in the lives of all of us when we recognize clearly the parting of the ways. Such a moment Johnson experienced now. On one side he saw the flat routine of his civilized mediocrity—dull work, advancing years, unlovely poverty, and then—king of a tropic isle, romance, "pearls and power."

He wavered, he heaved a mighty sigh, and then, recovering his hat from the floor where he had placed it beside his chair, and, looking neither to the right nor left nor unlocking his set jaws for speech, he strode out of the room.

The flat was dark and silent when Johnson got home.

It smelled somewhat of cold cooking, and his wife, waking from her sleep, called out for him not to forget that in the morning he had to go to work.

RUSSIANS ROUT AUSTRIAN ARMY

Enter Lemberg While Adversaries Are Still In Flight.

LATTER ABANDON EVERYTHING

Last Stronghold In Galicia Expected to Soon Surrender or Be Taken by Assault—Practically Open Road to Berlin Will Result From Final Overthrow of Austrians

London, Sept. 8.—The Daily Chronicle's special correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs that prisoners to a number as yet unknown, guns, including 2000 mitrailleuses, and 30,000,000 days' rations, were only part of the booty at Lemberg and Haliez.

The Rusisans entered Lemberg while the Austrians were still in flight. It their panic the Austrians left the ground strewn with articles of equipment, clothes, rifles and ammunition. Even officers' swords were thrown away and the wounded were abandoned on the field.

As the story of the fourteen days' battle shapes itself, its outstanding feature is the quality of the Russian infantry. For two weeks they thrust at the Austrian line extending from Komenka to Haliez. General Russky was in command on the north and General Brussiloff on the south.

The latter had for his objective position the junction of the Lipo and Dneister rivers, where the Austrians held the bridge at the head, which presently became the key to Haliez. It was here that on Sept. 3 the great diffused battle narrowed itself down to a real struggle.

Semi-official reports from Russia state that their troops are gradually surrounding Przemsyl, which will soon either surrender or be taken by assault. Przemsyl is a strong fortress, fifty miles west of Lemberg, and its fall would mean the loss of the last stronghold in Galicia of the Austrians. It will clear the way to an advance of the Russians westward.

The correspondent of The Times at Petrograd, referring to a battle just begun, which, if as successful as the Russian operations against Lemberg, will overthrow the Austrian forces and practically open the road to Berlin, says:

"Reliable information as to the progress of the battle enables me to state that the outlook is no whit less promising, but that several days may elapse before the final overthrow of the Austrian army.

"The enemy composes at least thirty divisions, besides several German corps, and will fight with the courage of despair.

"On the East Prussian front there is news of the appearance of part, if not the whole, of the Third Bavarian army corps. The troops were installed at Allenstein, which is being reconnoitered by Russian cavalry."

Unofficial news is that the Austrians still continue their flight southwest of Lemberg, and that everywhere the pursuing Russians collect arms and stores abandoned by the enemy, while whole detachments willingly ask to be made prisoners, saying that the rigor of their officers, together with the privations, make their lives impossible.

Refugees from Dalmatia, along the Austrian coast of the Adriatic sea, according to advices from Rome, say that life there is entirely paralyzed. The public service corporations, including the lighting plants, are out of commission, and militarism reigns despotically everywhere.

TO GO ROUND THE WORLD

United States Salute In Honor of Star Spangled Banner

Washington, Sept. 8.—President Wilson has ordered a salute of twenty-one guns to the national flag Sept. 12, at noon, to be fired by all the naval vessels, naval stations, army posts and revenue cutters.

This salute will go round the world. It will be heard from American warships in Mexican waters, in West Indian, Samoan, Asiatic and South American waters, and from the armored cruisers on the coasts of the contending powers of Europe.

The salute is to be fired in connection with the celebration in Baltimore on Sept. 12 of the Star Spangled Banner centennial as a special mark of honor to the flag and to the national anthem.

Molineaux was arrested at Babylon, L. I., after his appearance on the streets there in a bath robe and old hat.

L. S. ANDERSON PASSES AWAY

Was Manager of the Granite Railway Company

Luther S. Anderson, for many years, manager of the Granite Railway Co., passed away at his home on Granite street at 3 o'clock Monday morning after an illness of several weeks' duration, aged 56 years. Mr. Anderson had not been in the best of health all winter, but he kept about attending to his business affairs until early in the summer, when he was obliged to take to his bed. His illness was of such a nature that but little hopes were entertained for his recovery but he lingered along until Monday morning.

Luther S. Anderson was well known to many of the citizens of Quincy, especially among the granite trade in which he had been actively interested fora number of years.

Born in Braintree, April 9, 1858, he received his early education in the public schools of his native town and at the English High school of Boston from which he graduated in 1873. He then entered the Adams Academy graduating in 1878 and from Harvard college in 1882, receiving the degree of A. B., "Summa Cum Laude," the highest honor conferred by the college for meritorious work.

He then entered railroading and was for several years, assistant treasurer of the Union Pacific railroad, at the time Charles Francis Adams of this city was its president. When Mr. Adams retired, Mr. Anderson also resigned his position.

Some years later he became interested in the Granite Railway Co. and for many years he has been its energetic manager. Many marked and expensive improvements have been inaugurated at the plant of the company under his regime so that today it is doubtful if there is a better equipped modern granite quarrying company in the country than is the Granite Railway Co.

He was one of the instigators in the building of what was known as the Quincy quarry railroad, leading from his plant at West Quincy to all of the quarries back of the hill and he was its first superintendent. While acting as such he has conducted many sightseeing parties over the road whose grade is one of the steepest in the country.

Although not a seeker after public office he served Ward One in the City Council for three years, and while a member of that body served on all of the important committees. He has also been one of the Managers of the Adams Academy for many years.

Aside from this he for a long time took a prominent part in the affairs of the First Parish church, serving on several of its boards and it was largely through his efforts that changes were made in the basement of the church so that the sarcophagi, wherein lay the remains of two Presidents of these United States could be seen by visitors. Since that time thousands of people from all over the United States have journeyed to Quincy largely for the purpose of visiting this church.

He was also instrumental in having placed in a position for preservation the hearse which was used at the funeral of President John Quincy Adams.

Mr. Anderson never married and resided on what was formerly known as the Southworth estate on Granite street, together with his sister Mrs. E. S. Bennett and family.

Funeral services will be held at his late home Wednesday afternoon at 2.30, Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson of the First Parish officiating.

Corps 94 W. R. C. will enjoy an outing Thursday, Sept. 10, near the home of one of the members, Mrs. Beals of Holbrook, leaving South Braintree on pointed by Dodge Brothers one of De- the 9.45 A. M. electric.

Dattman Bros., of Quincy have the contract to build Fred Sanford's new house at Five Corners. William Levangie, stone mason, of Franklin street has started the cellar.

Miss Bessie Leonard of Central avenue is the guest of relatives in Taunton over Sunday. Her mother, Mrs. W. H. Leonard has been in Taunton for the past six months caring for a relative who is in failing health.

Miss Harriet C. Taylor of Weymouth Heights, for many years a popular teacher of the fourth grade at the Penniman school, now of the Jonas Perkins school, resides now at 173 Elm street, Braintree.

Last week, Mr. C. A. Bangs of Town street had the pleasure of entertaining his former school teacher, Mr. C. A. Brooks, who is now a resident of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

"GYPSY CAMP" AT SQUANTUM

Enjoyable Day by the Local Women's Club

The "Gypsy camp" held by the Squantum Women's club on the Pratt road grounds Saturday will go down on record as one of the most successful affairs they ever gave.

At 2 o'clock everything was in readiness and the children with their mothers, daintily gowned in bright summer attire, added color to the attractively decorated grounds.

The day seemed to be especially made for the event for the sun and bright moon aided much in the success of the occasion.

Many young ladies were in gay gypsy costume, and sold grabs from large bags slung across their shoulders. The gypsy queens were Miss Elizabeth Zottolli and Jeannie Story, and in their tribe all gowned in gaudy dress were Annie Morrill, Margaret Grady, Mildred Hersey, Helen Loughan, Doris Libby, Ethel Morse, Evelyn Reid and Mr. and Mrs. James Grady.

The tents where the ladies, many in costume, sold their wares were as follows: Home made cakes, Mrs. William Donovan; ice cream, Martha Freiberg; toilet articles, Jeanie Story; groceries, Margaret Grady and Mrs. James Gray; tonic, William A. Reed; aprons, Mrs. George Hersey and Mrs. J. McCarty; Prairie schooner, where potato salad and frankforts were sold, Mr. and Mrs. James Foster; African dodger, Charles Westlake; cake, coffee and fish chowder, Mrs. Charles Purcell and Mrs. E. C. Nilsson; novelty table, Mrs. Charles Westlake; soap and flour, Mrs. Bell. Mrs. G. Adams told fortunes in still another tent.

At 5 and 7 o'clock little children in gypsy garb danced a May pole dance under the direction of Mrs. G. Adams. Those who took part were: Della Richardson, Helen Hanson, Violet Finn, Florence Swanson, Adna Kundsin, Hazel Mason, Alice McCarron, Beda Dahlquist, Carron Dahlquist, Elsie Omberg, Pearl Bigney, Eliazbeth Pinkul, Margaret Blaisdell, Clare Peterson, Lillian Peterson, Gleny Rund, Lillian Swanson.

At 9 o'clock an entertainment in charge of Mrs. Charles Westlake was enjoyed by all, a trio of 'cello, violin and piano won great applause. Bertha Rund played the 'cello, Louise Rund the violin and Mrs. Charles Bostwick was accompanist. A reading by Sturgis Wood, dance by Marie St. John, comedy skit by Charles Westlake, and singing by William Gardner formed an entertaining program.

Mrs. Charles Bostwick had charge of tickets and posters. The success of the affair reflects great credit on Mrs. Sturgis Wood and Mrs. William Donovan.

ATLANTIC FIELD DAY

Improvement Association Goes to Squantum

The first annual field day held by the Atlantic Improvement Association on Labor day at Richards Park, Squantum, was one of the most successful events attempted by the association thus far.

From the time the party arrived in Squantum until dark every moment was filled with something of interest for the members of the association and their families and friends.

Councilman C. E. Carlson had the grounds in first class order with plenty of seats well arranged for those who wanted to watch the sports.

An excellent five piece orchestra led by Clifton Young furnished music.

The committee of arrangements consisting of Henry F. Mosses, Welcome G. Young, F. E. Brooks, Jessie I. Spears, T. J. Peacock and Councilman C. E. Carlson, furnished coffee, ice cream and tonics for the party.

Everybody seemed to have a good time and there were many expressions of appreciation for Mr. Carlson's hospitality and Mr. Mosses work for the association and community.

The afternoon was given over to sports.

Thomas Wilkinson received first prize in the one hundred yard dash for men.

Carl Knapp won first on the potato race for men.

Mrs. Lugene Hayford won first prize in the potato race for women, and Miss Johnson won the mystery race.

Nat McClure and Thomas Wilkinson won first in the three-legged race, and Arthur Hall and J. McClure came in second.

The 50 yard dash for girls under 12 was won by Edith Wood. Miss Green and Miss Ducette won first and second in the egg race.

Miss Palmer came in first in the 50-yard dash for girls, and Miss Green second.

The ladies three-legged race was won by Miss Ducette and Miss Palmer.

Miss Green also won a first on the needle and thread race.

The man's paper bag race was won by Arthur Hall. Mr. Hall also took first on the pipe race.

Malcolm Kennedy won first in the 50-yard dash for boys.

J. Cahill entertained by monologues and Sheriff William A. McDevitt sang several baritone solos.

Several of Quincy's most prominent citizens and officials were present, and Howard Dyer and Mr. Franklin as judges saw that everybody was entertained even to having their pictures taken to keep up interest.

prove it is deserving of praise.

"QUINCY is our home city and we should regard it as the best place on earth. We should be public spirited enough, each one of us, to do something to make it more attractive, for improved conditions in our city mean happiness for every resident. Right now would be a good time for one of our many live organizations to start the campaign. Let the slogan be "A BEAUTIFUL QUINCY," and remember that well written verse:

Little beds of flowers
Little pots of paint
Make a home attractive
Out of one that ain't.

RESULTS COMING.

William T. Donovan, one of the City Square real estate men, said this morning that he was not in his office a great while on Labor Day but that he has already received returns from the advertisement placed in the QUINCY and Boston papers last Friday. Since that day he has had telephone calls from Dorchester, Charlestown, Chelsea and Brockton, making inquiries not only in regard to houses to let but as to real estate for sale and locations for buildings. He also has received some inquiries by letter, and has made appointments with some of the parties who are coming to Quincy in person.

In conversation this morning, Mr. Donovan said that the DAILY LEDGER was doing good work in boosting QUINCY, and that he realized that it should be compensated. He believed that what the real estate men of the city ought to do was when a special edition like that of Friday and Saturday was published was to buy a hundred or more papers each and send them out of town to prospective people who might be induced to come to QUINCY to reside or to build.

Rev. B. A. Willmott returned to his pulpit in Bethany church on Sunday and was welcomed by large audiences At the communion service Mr. and Mrs. Sylvanius G. Diehl formerly of Easton, Penn, and Mrs. Christina Mac Donald formerly of Aberdeen, Scotland, united with the church.

C. S. Henshaw has been appointed by Dodge Brothers one of Detroit's leading automobile manufacturer's, as their Boston dealer. Mr. Henshaw's wide experience in this vicinity should make him a valuable man for the company with which he is now to be connected.

SQUANTUM TO DEDICATE CHURCH

People Proud of Their Edifice Which Has a Community House Attached

Greeting Services Will Be Held Next Sunday

Plans for the dedication of the First Church of Squantum have been completed. Rev. T. W. Davison, pastor of the church, announced today that a special service would be held Sunday at 4 o'clock which will be in the nature of a greeting service, and this will be followed the next Sunday by the dedicatory exercises.

The dedication of Squantum's first place of assembly and its first church is an event of unusual importance and significance to the community. It shows the remarkable progress of this community which has become one of the important residential sections of Quincy. Squantum has long had the spirit which has been so recently manifested by Quincy in boosting itself and showing its own progressiveness and desirability as a place of residence. The fact that in this community of four hundred homes a handsome church has been erected as the first public place of assemblage, shows the spirit of the people of community to make it one of the most desirable places of residence to be found in greater Boston.

Two points of equal interest develop in the dedication of Squantums first church. First the nature of the church work, the public exercises and the plans of dedication and second the church structure itself.

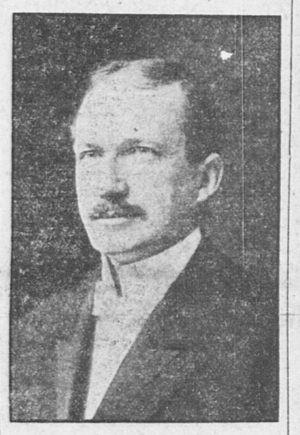
Rev. Mr. Davison hopes to make the church work more important and far reaching than that of the holding a weekly religious service. He hopes to make the First church the community home of Squantum residents. In the handsome structure which has been raised is a parlor and assembly hall which will be devoted to the community life of Squantum. The work of the First church will be broader than that of some churches. It will seek the best interests of the community, religously, morally and socially, and will aim for the highest mark in all these spheres.

For the greeting service at 4 o'clock Sunday, Rev. Mr. Davison will have as his special guests upon the pulpit platform, the Rev. B. F. Willmott of Bethany church, and the Rev. I. S. Sneath, D. D., of Wollaston. There will be a musical program of unusual interest with solos by Mrs. Ethel Frank Brigham and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Leonard. Mrs. Brigham is very well known as a church soloist and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have for a number of years been associated with church musical work in Boston.

Rev. Mr. Davison has not completed his program for the church dedication the following Sunday but an attractive program will be arranged.

The Ledger presents for the first time a description of the First church of Squantum.

The building is located at the corner of Huckins avenue and Bellevue avenue. It was formerly the site of the Richards homestead or the Vacation House, as it was called more recently. This three-story structure was partially destroyed by fire last winter, and the property directly after the fire was purchased of its present owner, Councilman C. E. Carlson. A donation of $2500 was received from the Old South society and the Congregational Church Union of Boston each giving an equal share. The people of Squantum have pledged themselves to raise the remaining $1,500 and a part of this subscription has been paid in.



REV. T. W. DAVISON

Work on the building began in June under the supervision of Thomas Currie, a Squantum resident and a well known contractor. The work proceeded by day labor under the personal supervision of Mr. Currie. It has been remarkable what Mr. Currie has accomplished and he has won high praise from Squantum people for his expert way of utilizing some of the old Vacation House in getting out the new structure.

The building is placed in the centre of spacious grounds well surrounded with shrubbery. The outside is of cement, three coats with a stucco finish. The cement is placed on wire lathing of the finest grade of the Clinton Wire Company. The roof is of slate. So far as the outside construction is concerned it is fireproof.

The main entrance is through a

Paris again faces a crisis in her many sided history. What will the outcome be this time? In 1871 she withstood the German siege for four and a half months. She did not give up until she had been starved into submission—had eaten horses and cats and dogs and even the animals in the zoological gardens. Mrs. Chandler W. Smith Says A Paradise for Women

Yes, Quincy ladies can be boosters, in fact they have been the best boosters that QUINCY has had.

Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, the president of the QUINCY Women's Club,

REV. B. A. WILLMOTT.

when interviewed on advertising QUINCY, said:

"Quincy is a city of refined homes, a city free from saloons and as nearly as may be from drunken men.

"This means that women and children may walk on the streets of Quincy both day and evening unmolested, free from insult and disgusting sights.

"The streets are lined with comfortable homes, in some localities luxurious ones, but in all, the owners vie with each other in the orderliness and attractiveness of their places.

SELFISHNESS MUST YIELD

Christian Influences Will Bring Better Conditions

At the opening service Sunday morning at the Wollaston Congregational church, the pastor, Dr. Sneath, preached upon the topic "Christianity not breaking down." He began by asking the question "Is Christianity meeting its Waterloo?" We might be inclined to believe so from some of the editorials and cartoons which have appeared during the last few months.

"The fatalist is ready to say that calamities and wars are natural and to be desired as they simply help to end the race more speedily. But the Christian believes that the Cause of Christ is moving forward to greater triumphs.

"Temporary defeats due to the selfishness of men are soon overcome and the twentieth century will not be any different from the previous ones in which Christianity has made such mighty strides. Her greatest victories are before her.

"The suggestion that the world is over-populated and that calamities are necessary is a fallacy. All of the German Empire could be placed in the state of Texas and there would be more than fifty thousand square miles to spare.

"It may not be true as the Japanese premier has prophesied, that the end of the present strife in the Eastern continent will be a peace without armor, and many other prophesies, that are being made today may turn out to be mistaken. But we may confidently believe that out of the turmoil Christian influences will bring a better condition for the race. Selfishness must eventually yield to righteousness and the Kingdom of Christ fully triumph."

The midweek service will be held on next Thursday evening at which the pastor will speak upon "Faith as revealed in the Lord's Supper."

VAUGHN CASE ARGUMENTS

Were Not Heard Today, Because Counsel Was Absent

A mistaken entry in the diary of Attorney J. J. McAnarney caused an indefinite postponement in the final chapter of the Vaughn case, the arguments of which were to have been heard by Judge Avery this morning.

The hearing of testimony closed several weeks ago and today was assigned for arguments. When Mr. McAnarney, counsel for Mr. Vaughn, failed to appear, Court Officer Hultman phoned his office and learned he was at Dedham. Shortly after Charles Wilkes, his associate informed the court that the diary entry had been made for Sept. 10 instead of today.

City Solicitor Pinkham who has represented the city in the case was present and ready. Judge Avery under the circumstances indefinitely postponed the arguments.

ENTERTAINMENT AND DRILL

About $75 Raised at Post Island for Floating Hospital

The Sunshine Club, Post Island, held a very successful exhibition and sale on the lawn of Messrs. Perry and Jackson, Labor day afternoon. The sale of useful and fancy articles was held from 2 to 4, followed by Japanese fan and parasol drill by girls in costume. This proved a very pleasant feature for the closing of the season.

The piano solos by Miss Bannister and Misses Perry and Bates, with violin solo by Miss Marion Floyd, were well received.

Mrs. Ellen J. Phippen, who organized the class and instructed them at the meetings held once a week, deserves a great amount of praise for her earnest efforts, and the success of the fair was due to her untiring efforts, and the co-operation of all the girls of the club.

The exhibition of the girls' sewing and crochet work was certainly a great surprise, and showed that the girls were handy with the needle when given proper instruction.

The proceeds of the sale will be donated to the Boston Floating Hospital and the total amount will be in the neighborhood of $75.00. The members are: Mrs. Ellen Jean Phippen, Laura Bailey, Marion Foy, Marguerite Bannister, Virginia Greene, Eleanor Bates, Virginia Jackson, Dorothy Blewett, Helen Maclary, Gertrude Fitts, Grace Mitchell, Frances Fitts, Marie Nichols, Marion Floyd, Bessie Perry, Virginia Floyd, Mildred Pinkham, Anna Foy, Elizabeth Shriver.

In England the Poet Laureate still remains hopeless.

Belgium is very much alarmed about her Aunt Werp.

War, like hell, is paved with good intentions.

Uncle Sam has taken in a whole stocking full of toll money from the Panama Canal that has only been open a few days.

Owing to warm weather, the boys have been quitting work in the shady garden and walking several miles in the sun to the swimming hole.

Some of the war correspondents have to consume so much space telling what they did themselves that they have no room to tell what the armies are doing.

The fact that Turkey remains out of conflict raises doubt as to whether her boasted progress in civilization hasn't been exaggerated.

Some of the Congressmen will remain several weeks in Washington, in spite of the fact that this is a gross neglect of their private business.

If Dickens and Scott had wanted the present generation of young folks to read their books, they should have put in something about automobiles and aeroplanes.

If the war were to stop now, militarism in Europe would be worse than ever, but probably they would allow the men three months of the year in which to support their families.

The Mexicans claim to be civilized, although they are 300 years behind Europe in ability to kill each other off.

THE TAX RATE.

It is doubtful if the majority of the tax payers when they receive their bills will feel much elated over the reduction in the rate this year for it will not be apt to make their bills smaller and if it does they will necessarily be increased next year, for increased valuation means an increased state tax.

Suppose a place was assessed last year for $5000 and the same this year the taxpayer could rejoice in saving $7.50 but on the other hand if $500 or $1000 was added to the valuation there would be a material increase over last year.

If the increased valuation has been placed on old buildings and renting property it will be a hardship, not on the owner but on the tenant for it will mean increased rents. It is claimed that rents are high in Quincy yet we doubt if the owners of property except in few instances are receiving the 10 percent necessary to make their investment a paying one, while many barely get rent enough to pay running expenses on the property.

High valuation and a high tax rate combined with lack of civic pride, no permanent sidewalks, etc., is enough to kill any city no matter how hard its people cry "Boom Quincy." Who is to blame because Quincy is almost blacklisted by Boston real estate men who say it is almost impossible to sell property here on account of the valuation and taxes?

We believe the taxpayers of Quincy would prefer a fair valuation with a high tax rate if necessary, to an inflated one with what looks to be a moderate rate. There should be a halt on city expenses and care taken not to burden the city by over valuation. Possibly this year's increase is justified by a more equal assessment on property.

INVADERS ARE BEATEN BACK BY ALLIES

Lose Ten Miles of French Ground They Had Gained

DEFENDERS CONTINUE OFFENSIVE MOVEMENT

General Retreat by Germans, but Resistance Is Becoming More Stubborn—Weakened by Transference of Troops to Prevent Russian Advance Into Prussia—Invasion of German Territory May Soon Begin—Courage of Kaiser's Troops Not Affected Despite Steady Reverses—Charge After Charge Fails to Demoralize Them as They Fall Back—Allies' Lines Remain Firm at Critical Stage of Battle Along 175-Mile Front

London, Sept. 9.—The German invaders of France are ten miles further away from Paris than they were Monday.

All day Tuesday the battle raged along the long battle line, 175 miles in length, and nowhere have the French and British given way.

The Germans, however, while retaining their positions about Verdun and Nancy, have been steadily driven back in the neighborhood of Paris until they are north of the Petit Morin river.

More important is the retreat of the invaders in the vicinity of Vity-le-Francois, where the heavy German centre has been smashing ahead relentlessly until this sudden offensive taken by the allies on Saturday. The Germans have been forced back in the direction of Rheims, the great fortified key to the inner defense, which they captured so easily that they supposed the allies were unwilling to risk a battle.

In the meantime Russian troops are steadily advancing through terrorized Galicia, a movement that is coupled with a vigorous offensive in Russian Poland which is clearing that province of its Austrian and German uninvited guests.

Result of Lemberg Battle

The sudden turn in the fortunes of war that has been brought about since Saturday may presumably be dated back to the tremendous defeat of the Austrians at Lemberg.

The unexpected inability of the Austrian infantry to hold the Russians has brought about a great weakening of the German armies operating against France. It is necessary to Germany's future that Russia be stopped in Galicia before its troops cross the Vistula into Prussia. Reenforcements have been hurried east by thousands, chiefly from Alsace.

Already weakened by the transference of thousands of soldiers from the forces that had marched through Belgium, the moment was opportune for the British and French to take the offensive, especially as they could never have a finer battleground, with Paris and Verdun on their flanks.

The attack, thus far successful in the western theatre of war about Paris, has been unexpectedly fortunate in the eastern part of the nation, where not even the presence of the kaiser, near Nancy, has enabled the German troops to batter through the staunch French lines. Now the French, through the withdrawal of the Germans through Alsace, are in a position to strike a telling blow here which may retrieve the early disastrous attempt to capture the coveted provinces of Alsace and Lorraine.

Germans In Tighat Place

Tuesday a forward movement of the French was noticeable southeast of St. Die, in the Vosges mountains. The crest of Mandry and the peak of Fourneaux were seized, and if the Germans continue their retreat in the west, a formidable offensive into German territory may begin within a few hours. With all forces that can be called to the colors engaged in warfare, Germany is now in far from a favorable position to oppose this advance.

Every report from the battlefields near Paris indicates that the victorious advance of Monday was even more mortal a wound to German prospects than had at first been supposed. Not only have the invaders been forced back in place after place, but they have suffered terribly in the series of battles, with losses of thousands in killed, wounded and prisoners.

But the morale of the German troops is superb. Beaten back steadily by a foe that they had had little difficulty in hurling back day after day, the surprise and the might of the allies has not affected their courage. Tuesday, after steady reverses for many hours, they fought every foot of ground more viciously than ever and their retreat was less pronouced than it was on Monday.

Great Strength of Allies

The strength of the British and French colmns could not, however, be withstood. So confident were the allies that the great garrison of Paris was summoned out of the forts and placed in the fighting line. Eastward from the river Ourcq pressed the British and French; ahead of them—bitterly resisting, but unmistakably giving ground—marched the Germans. Now and then they halted, and volleys from rifles and artillery checked the advancing allies. But never were the Germans allowed to take the offensive.

The long line of German soldiers between Meaux and Sezanne drew back toward the Marne river into the region of Montmirail. So rapid was the retirement that for the first time in the campaign in the east, guns and gun carriages in considerable quantities were abandoned by the Germans.

The bitterest fighting in this region came after the Germans, despite charge after charge, refused to be demoralized and fell back in safety across the Petit Morin river. To protect their communications the Germans launched a sudden and unexpected attack upon the allied lines, which were massed on the right bank of the Ourcq. The charge failed and the Germans in this section are ten miles behind their positions of Monday.

Germans Closely Pressed

To the east of this region of battling, and further removed from Paris, the Germans were able to maintain their ground, although they were pressed so closely that only enormous sacrifices of men averted a retreat.

Between Fere Champenois and Vitry le Francois, where some of the picked corps of the invading troops had been massed for the sledge hammer blow that was to smash wide open a great hole between the armies of the allies, the Germans forced the most violent fighting, and it was here that the allies gained the most decisive advantage of the day.

Since Saturday the only retreat of the invaders had been that of the right wing. The centre had stood firm. From Rheims reinforcements had been rushed to this sphere of the fighting, where the most herculean effort to shatter forever the advance of the allies was to be made. It was tried, and it failed. Whether it can be successful again, with reverses toward the west and without apparent hope from the corps guided by the kaiser at Nancy, is more than doubtful.

Conflicting Views

In the present tremendous struggle the French war office, which claims an advantage for the troops of the allies, sees evidence of a great triumph.

Berlin, on the other hand, characterizes the offensive operations of the allies as a "last desperate stand," and asserts supreme confidence in the power of German arms.

Whatever may be the outcome, the battle now under way is critical for both sides. So far as the German plans are concerned, much appears to depend on the work of two much-killed persons, the crown prince and General von Buelow.

These men, though reported dead on innumerable occasions, are much in the limelight just now—the crown prince by reason of the fact that his army occupies a key position in the battle line, and von Buelow because upon what aid his re-enforcements can give may determine the outcome of the slaughter.

SUNK IN NEUTRAL WATERS

German Claim Concerning Armored Liner Is Confirmed

Capain Makepeace, skipper of the British steamer Kaipara, which was sunk by the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, confirms the German assertion that the British cruiser Highflyer in turn sank the armored German liner in neutral waters off the west coast of Africa on Aug. 27.

"But," said Makepeace, "the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse had been ordered out of Las Palmas, Canary islands, by the Spanish consul and her captain refused to budge her for nine days. This was an international offense and for that offense the British cruiser was right in sinking her."

While the sinking of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse was officially announced in the house of commons Aug. 27, the statement of Makepeace is the first information received in London that the Kaipara had been sent to the bottom by the German steamer.

SPANISH STEAMER SEIZED

Reservists Aboard Ship Taken to Halifax by British Cruiser

The British cruiser Glory arrived at Halifax with the Spanish steamer Montserrat, on which were 150 men said to be Austrian and German reservists, in tow. The Montserrat sailed from New York Sept. 6 for Barcelona, Cadiz and Genoa.

The Glory, which has been engaged in patrol duty off the coast of the United States for some weeks past, is supposed to have picked up the Montserrat soon after she left New York harbor.

Under the right of search, it is claimed by the authorities, the commander of the Glory had power to bring the vessel to Halifax and detain her until the nationality of the men suspected of being reservists can be determined.

BREAK WITH THE KAISER

His Chief Statesmen Blamed For Rupture of Diplomacy

The Berlin correspondent of the Rome newspaper Messaggero wires that the kaiser has broken with Imperial Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg and Minister of Foreign Affairs Von Jagow.

The correspondent says the kaiser blames them for England's participation in the war, which came as a complete surprise to him, and also for Italy's failure to live up to her treaty obligations. The kaiser is declared to have told them that when it was most needed German diplomacy had failed the German people. The correspondent adds that both statesmen have tendered their resignations.

SITUATION IN TURKEY

Reservists Unwilling to Fight Except on the Defensive

A dispatch to the London Times from Constantinople, commenting on conditions there, says:

"Although there is still a large section of influential Turks clamoring for intervention in the present European war, the situation seems to be improving, owing to the precarious economic situation and the unwillingness of the reservists to take part in any except a defensive war.

"The total number of German officers now in Turkey is estimated at 600. All British merchantmen in the Black sea have been ordered home."

PEACE PRAYER DAY

President Wilson Designates Oct. 4 as Day of Supplication

Washington, Sept. 9.—President Wilson designated Sunday, Oct. 4, as the day of prayer in the United States for peace in Europe.

The proclamation requests all God-fearing persons "to repair on that day to their places of worship, there to unite their petitions to Almighty God that, overruling the counsel of the men, setting straight the things they cannot govern or alter, taking pity on the nations now in the throes of conflict, in His mercy and goodness showing the way where men can see none, He vouchsafe His children healing peace again and restore once more that concord among men and nations without which there can be neither happiness nor true friendship nor any wholesome fruit of toil or thought in the world; praying also to this end that He forgive us our sins, our ignorance of His will, our wilfulness and many errors and lead in the paths of obedience to places of vision and to thoughts and counsels that purge and make wise."

"WAR IS CRUELTY"

What Sherman Really Said to Non-Combatants In Georgia

"War is hell" as a saying is credited to General Sherman, so it may be a pleasing surprise to many to learn that Sherman never said those words. What Sherman did say was: "War is cruelty, and you cannot refine it."

In reply to the protest of non-combatants in Georgia, who did not want to leave the city of Atlanta, Sherman said to Mayor Hood:

"You cannot qualify war in harsher terms than I will. War is crulty, and you cannot refine it. * * * You might as well appeal against the thunder storm as against these terrible hardships of war. They are inevitable."

MERCY SHIP DELAYED

Protests Against Germans Being In Crew of the Red Cross

The Red Cross, the American ship of mercy which will carry relief to the wounded on European battlefields, will steam from New York tomorrow. Her crew will be made up of Americans or Spanish—men of neutral nations.

The Red Cross was to have begun her voyage yesterday, but those employed on board included a number of Germans, and her departure was delayed after the British and French governments had protested against persons of that nationality being among the crew.

TO DEDICATE CHURCH

tower prettily nestled in the junction of the main auditorium and the annex. The tower is 15 feet square. Entering the main door there is an attractive vestibule from which lead entrances to the main auditorium, the ladies' parlor and stairs to the ground floor.

Entering the main auditorium one is at once delightfully soothed by its soft, harmonious tones. The walls are tinted in water colors of a mellow brown which blend into soft tones upon the wood work of the big girders overhead and the interior finish throughout the room.

The main floor is 30 by 42 feet with the pulpit platform projecting beyond the auditorium floor from the south end of the room. The pulpit is 8 by 20 feet and with windows on each side throws a mellow light at this end of the room. The choir at the left side of the pulpit occupies a space in the main auditorium. The main auditorium will seat 150 comfortably.

Connecting with the main auditorium by large folding doors is the ladies' parlor or church vestry. This room is 18 by 26 feet. Here the decorator has again showed the expertness of his art. Mission tones prevail. The decorating of the building was under the personal supervision of Charles Swanson assisted by John Gran. Both are expert decorators and have worked upon some of the finest churches in the country in carrying out interior decoration. Great credit is due them for their excellent work for the Squantum church.

From the ladies' parlor there is a separate exit to a small hallway leading to the ground floor.

The ground floor of the church consists of a hall, 30 by 42 feet, a kitchen 11 by 7, two dressing rooms and a large passage way connecting with the main tower, the exit to the ladies' parlor and a separate exit to the east side of the uilding. Thus the building is connected at all points for convenience in using any or all parts of the building separately or collectively with the utmost convenience.

The main hall will be known as Community Hall. It is expected that this will go far to meet the needs of the community as a place of assemblage. Here suppers can be held, metings of organizations or clubs, and such social assemblages as church committee deems in the proper and best interest of the community. It is the plan of Rev. Mr. Davison to make this hall serve the best interest of the community. Squantum is without a hall of any kind. Its social activities and community life have been stunted for this very reason. The fact that Community Hall is separated from the church proper and its religious work will tend to make Community Hall available for such affairs as the church committee feels will be for the best interests of Squantum.

The hall is ideally arranged for banquets. The kitchen is fitted with an instantaneous water heater, and a large gas range and sink. Two slides and a door lead to the main hall. It is arranged that one slide can be used for serving food and the other for the reception of used dishes. This will avoid all confusion in the kitchen and will make those using the hall able to serve large numbers of people with ease.

The auditorium and hall will be heated by a furnace located in one corner of Community Hall. Heating experts have found that for quick service this arrangement is the most effective that could be placed in the Squantum church. The plumbing and heating arrangements have been very carefully carried out by John Holmes, a well known plumbing contractor.

The church is lighted throughout by electricity, handsome cluster chandeliers being hung in the main auditorium.

Squantum people are keenly interested in the First Church of Squantum and a large congregation is expected at the greeting service on Sunday afternoon.

WHY ADVERTISE NOW?

ASKS THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

We are asked to advise if, under present conditions, advertising should be curtailed.

But each line has its own unique "present conditions." Such a question involves several forms of advice.

These are BOOM TIMES in some lines. Many factories are overwhelmed with orders. Some face a demand far beyond their capacity.

Some cater largely to farmers and farmers in general seem this year to be getting rather more than their share of prosperity. The farmer with full pockets finds nothing too good for him. He's a magnificent spender.

These fortunate advertisers who are oversold can very wisely cut down on their advertising. There is no virtue in selling more than one can deliver.

There are other lines imported, or requiring imported materials, on which there is stoppage of supplies.

There are lines which for these, or other transient reasons, sell now at abnormal prices. There are lines sold at fixed prices, on which advancing costs have decimated profits for a time. On all such lines one might advise curtailment in all forms of salesmanship.

But "present conditions" in general mean a degree of depression, a shade of uncertainty. And the query is, if in such situations advertising should be curtailed or stopped.

BY ALL MEANS, NO. Should a runner stop for a rising grade, or a swimmer for an adverse tide? If they did, where might their rivals in the race be when they started up?

Advertising ought to be the cheapest salesmanship. Also the most efficient. If it is that, then it is the last force to reduce. If it isn't, then it needs, in good or bad times, rehabilitation.

In national advertising OUR MOST PROSPEROUS TIMES come during business depression. Then is when men who are on the right lines fight hardest. Then is when waste is eliminated, and the cheapest and best methods are used to the limit. And then is when the weak and inefficient abandon the field to the stronger.

There may be less business to get in dull times, but there are also less men who use the best ways to get it. Some of the greatest harvests ever gathered in advertising have been garnered in times of depression.

We find that GOOD ADVERTISING IS RARELY STOPPED by misfortune. It is ten times as often stopped by overdemand. The chief clients of this house are today pressing advertising harder than ever before.

But is this in reality any time to feel blue? Doesn't it look as though we might be on the verge of UNPRECEDENTED BUSINESS PROSPERITY?

Home prospects look better than usual. Big crops at high prices bring smiles to the faces of nearly one-half of our people. The railroads got a little encouragement. Our new banking system will ward off some dangers.

Then what NEW BOONS MAY COME TO US—like gifts from the dead—as a result of this pitiful war? Reason tells us they must come if we reach out to get them. Life still flows on amid that devastation. People must be clothed and fed. And the markets abandoned by the nations which held them should be supplied by us.

When millions desert the arts of peace, those who abide, well-equipped and ready, surely ought to prosper.

As for war news affecting the value of ads, it certainly doesn't detract from them. It is giving to advertisers INCREASED CIRCULATION with no present advance in cost.

The argument that it makes NEWSPAPERS TOO INTERESTING is a new one in advertising. The most interesting magazines have always been the best patronized. Why should we seek for dull newspapers?

In any event, the average woman is not a great reader of war news. Her favorite pages in the newspaper remain about as ever. She is the household buyer. And the majority of advertising—even on men's things—depends on its appeal to her.

NO THESE ARE NOT TIMES TO CEASE ADVERTISING, save under rare conditions. The harder the fight the more one needs his best weapons. The more quitters there are the more there is for the rest of us. And we who keep ready and active and fit—who keep in the thick of things, dull times and good—will hold immeasurable advantage when the tide comes in.

LORD & THOMAS,

S. E. Corner Wabash and Madison, Chicago.

Pact of Allies Will Bring Germany to Her Knees

VIEW OF PARIS NEWSPAPERS

Certain of Ultimate Victory Over "Formidable Machine of Tyranny and Massacre"—London Declaration Believed to Sound Death Knell of the Enemy—Will Silence Pessimists

Paris, Sept. 9.—Few of the papers here comment on the tripartite agreement signed in London between representatives of Great Britain, France and Russia, by which it was mutually agreed that no treaty of peace would be negotiated by any single country, without some reference to the description by Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German imperial chancellor, of the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium as a "scrap of paper."

The papers ask if the German chancellor will apply the same term to the new pact of the allies, which is considered to be of far greater importance for German than for the signatories of the new agreement, whose understanding is so close that a signed treaty was really unnecessary.

The Figaro notes that the convention was signed in London and published when German cannon were approaching Paris and says this action was taken on a most suitable date. The Figaro adds:

"Long, bloodstained days will yet be needed before a durable peace is won. Such a formidable machine of tyranny and massacre is not easily smashed, but we are sure of final victory."

Le Journal says: "The declaration consecrates the new triple alliance. The question is no longer a Slavic, French or English one, but a struggle against Germanic hegemony. Should France be exhausted and Russia too all Germany's forces will break against Albion's untiring tenacity which wore down Napoleon. The declaration of London sounds the death knell of the enemy."

The Petit Parisian says: "The declaration will silence the clamor of the incorrigible pessimists who are already wagging their heads with a mysterious air and allowing apprehensions to escape them which are an insult to Russian constancy, French tenacity and British fidelity.'"

TWO NEW CARDINALS

Red Hat Is Bestowed on Six Others Created by Pope Pius

Rome, Sept. 9.—Two new cardinals were created by Pope Benedict XV. and the red hat bestowed on six foreign cardinals previously created by Pope Pius X.

The new cardinals are Mgr. Boggiani, secretary of the recent conclave, and Mgr. Scapinelli de Leguigno, papal nunzio of Vienna. It was the latter who was sent to Vienna by the late Pope Pius bearing a personal letter from the pontiff to Emperor Francis Joseph, begging that the aged monarch of Austria avert war.

For ten days Francis Joseph delayed receiving the pope's messenger. In the meantime war was declared and Europe was plunged into the conflict which broke the pope's heart and hastened his death.

There has developed a movement in favor of nominating C. W. Gates of Franklin. Gates has declined to contest for the nomination, but has said he would serve if nominated.

CHARGED WITH MURDER

Arrest of Man Accused of Crime Twenty-Two Years Ago

Chicago, Sept. 9.—After the lapse of almost a quarter of a century, during which time he has worked in various places, Frank J. Clark was arrested here on the charge of murder. He swears that a mistake has been made, and that his name really is Frank J. Clark.

Two men, however, have identified him as Joseph Gantt. He was arrested on an old warrant that charged him with murdering his brother, Frank Gantt, in Pittsburg on Sept. 17, 1892.

Last week, carpenters moving an old desk in the district attorney's office in Pittsburg accidentally broke open a locker, from which tumbled a mass of dusty papers. Among them were the verdict and minutes of a coroner's inquest and an indictment for murder.

panorama of which one never tires.

"The fine schools, the churches of all denominations, the philanthropic organizations and above all the Women's Clubs make QUINCY a paradise for women. A woman may find the work, study or service which most appeals to her and when her work is done she may find amusement and pleasures to suit the most fastidious."

CHURCHES SUPPORTED.

Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, the popular pastor of Bethany Congregational church, has been interviewed, and he says:

"A city can prosper when her citizens are loyal and actuated by devotion to the public good; when her children and those who become residents are earnest in their praise of that which is good and persistent in their efforts to correct that which is evil in the city.

"QUINCY has much to praise, some things to correct. She has great tradition and noble ancestry, but neither of these valuable assets will suffice for present needs and future duties; the people of QUINCY are united to to uphold the great traditions and to be worthier of their good ancestry.

"This makes QUINCY a very desirable city for any who wish to establish homes. She is free from the great enemy of every good home—the saloon; she is strong in the institution which supports and inspires the home—the church.

"In no city of this good Commonwealth are the churches better attended nor more generously supported. The forces which make for righteousness are united and enjoy a most delightful fellowship.

"The clergy of the city are united, and through the QUINCY Ministers' Association make their influence felt for the moral uplift of the city. In all the churches there is a cordial greeting for strangers.

"QUINCY is a friendly city to every stranger who shows himself friendly."

REAL ESTATE EXCHANGE.

As the outcome of the boom QUINCY idea inaugurated last week, it is among the possibilities that a real estate exchange, to be known as the South Shore Real Estate Exchange may be organized. Several real estate men have had the idea of forming some such an association for some time, but nothing definite has ever been done. Now it is said that the recent activity among the real estate men of the city will result in the formation of the new association.

NEW HYDROPLANE TESTED.

A newly designed hydroplane, built at the hangar at the Squantum aviation field, took its first flight on Labor Day, and responded to its tests gracefully and practically. The plane while only in an experimental stage promises great results. It is operated by Fred Schumaker of Dorchester.

It is equipped with an 80 horse power Sturtevant engine and an eager spectator of its trial was one of former Governor Foss's sons.

The plane rides a square nosed, sharp sterned boat, of delicate pattern. The planking is but 3-16th of an inch in thickness and last week split around the bow when the plane failed to take the air high enough to escape dipping its nose.

On the holiday its success assures its recognition. When launched it floated evenly and ran about the bay at a speed close to 40 knots. The plane lifted while beating into a stiff southwest breeze. Further tests will follow.

NEW OFFICERS.

The fall program and the semi-annual election of officers occupied the members of the Young Women's Hebrew Association who met at the home of Miss Mollie Scherad on Water street Tuesday evening. Among the social affairs voted was a dance to be held in Alpha hall on Oct. 6. The officers chosen were: President,—Miss Rose Schwartz; Vice President,—Miss Etta R. Grossman; Secretary,—Miss Reba Kauffman; Treasurer,—Miss Sadie Cohen.

A YANKEE TAR

And the Many Deaths That Hung Over Him In Mexico

By JOHN Y. LARNED

Jack Scarborough was a bright fellow, but inclined to be wild—that is, he was one of those boys who have a passion for adventure. His father sent him to college, and since he could get his lessons without much study he devoted his spare time to mischief. Before the close of his sophomore year he was caught laying a fuse to set off a cannon cracker under the chair of one of the professors and expelled.

Going home under such circumstances was not to Jack's taste. So he enlisted in the United States navy. But, exciting the antagonism of a petty officer, his life on shipboard was not a happy one. One evening when the officer was giving him a tongue lashing Jack knocked him down and jumped into the water. The ship was lying at anchor at Vera Cruz, and under cover of the darkness that was coming on Jack swam ashore, and, although a posse was sent after him, he was not found, and his ship sailed without him.

This was at the time when Madero was deposed from the presidency of Mexico and General Felix Diaz was making himself prominent in the affairs of that country, famous for its revolutions. Jack enlisted under Diaz, was captured in arms and with a number of others set apart to be shot. Being an American citizen, he would have had an excellent chance for his life by applying to the American consul to interfere in his behalf. But by this course he would be turned over to the United States navy to be punished for mutiny and desertion, either one of which was a pretty serious offense. But Jack, who seemed born for trouble, made more for himself. Just before the prisoners were to be shot they were given an opportunity to enlist in the federal army in the service of Huerta, and Jack availed himself of it, thereby again becoming a deserter.

The new recruits soon found themselves in the City of Mexico, where Jack lived the life of an inactive soldier. During this time he picked up enough knowledge of the Spanish language to be able to converse in it. His disposition for hairbreadth escapes rendered his stay at the capital irksome, and he persuaded himself that the Constitutionalists were the true friends of good government, and their activity also attracted him.

Fortunately, as he considered it, he was sent out with his regiment to oppose General Villa and at the first opportunity deserted to join the forces of that chief, adding one more to his offenses punishable with death. This was Jack's last desertion, for he was captured with a number of others in arms against the Huerta forces and again ordered to execution.

Jack, now being in the interior, thought he might claim to be an American citizen without being turned over to the navy, so he sent in a protest against being executed on that ground. An order came for him to be taken to the commander of the force that captured him, and he appeared before that officer for examination. During the questioning Jack incidentally referred to his having been a student at a university in the United States. At this the officer pricked up his ears and asked if he was competent to prepare a boy for college. Jack said that he was. The officer asked him to repeat something in the Latin language, and Jack gave him the first few lines of Vergil's "Aeneid." This appeared to satisfy the officer, who said to the guard who had brought the prisoner to him:

"Leave him with me. He is a United States citizen."

When the guard had departed the general told Jack that he had a son sixteen years old who desired to enter one of the United States universities and if Jack could get him ready to do so within a year his life would be spared; if not he would be turned over to the Mexican army officials to be shot for desertion.

Jack, who had not been so far from death since he deserted from the United States navy, accepted the terms gladly. Besides, a year was a long while for Mexico to remain under one government, and quite likely Huerta would within the period give place to another.

The general turned Jack over to his orderly, who was ordered to take him to his hacienda, not far distant. On reaching the hacienda the prisoner-tutor was received by the major domo, Ramon Casio, a crafty looking man, of half Spanish, half Indian, blood. He introduced Jack to the family, including his pupil.

There was no need to watch the tutor for fear he would add another to his many desertions. The moment he set eyes on the general's daughter, Rosa, two years older than her brother, Alfonso, the candidate for college, he was perfectly satisfied to stay where he was. Rosa was a dark eyed beauty, with an olive complexion tinged with red and a mellifluous voice. It was not long before she learned just how many executions the tutor had hanging over him, and she loved him for every one of them separately. Indeed, she loved him so well that before he had been under the same roof with her very long she added another desertion to his record.

Jack sized up the pupil, whose name was Alfonso, and was not so well pleased with the condition on which his life hung as he had been. The boy's physiognomy did not indicate a brain capable of taking in the studies in which the better grade of American universities require a candidate for matriculation to be proficient.

Rosa was as bright as Alfonso was dull. Knowing what Jack had to do to save his life, she turned in and helped him. When Jack had given him a coaching Rosa would take hold of her brother and give him another—that is, when she could make him take the dose.

Jack soon proved that Alfonso was so stupid that he could not be prepared for college in three times the period granted for the purpose. If the tutor were to be turned over to be executed because he could not fit his pupil for college in one year death was sure to follow. Alfonso was not only stupid; he would not try to learn. Rosa, who knew her father to be uncompromising when his word had been passed, begged her brother to apply himself to his studies, but to no purpose.

Every one who has any knowledge of lovers knows that the longer they are opposed in their love the more determined they become not to be balked in it, and if there is a penalty for loving the more reckless they are in incurring it. Moreover, the greater the penalty the more sure they are to render themselves liable to it. As for Dick, who had already incurred as many deaths as could be counted on the fingers of one of his hands, it is not to be expected that he would refrain from adding one more for the thumb.

But danger to oneself is very different from danger to a loved one. Dick knew that if caught making love to Senorita Rosa he would be put out of existence at once. This was nothing compared with the vengeance of an angry father on his daughter.

What would have been the outcome of this story had not the United States forces landed at Vera Cruz no one can tell. It put the idea of flight into Jack's head—not flight alone, but flight with the girl he loved. But he had no sooner conceived the idea of taking her within the American lines when up came the remembrance that a naval court martial awaited him to try him for the double offense of mutiny and desertion.

To make for Vera Cruz was not to be considered. But how about going either to General Carranza or General Villa? He had not deserted from Villa, though he had deserted to him. The move might be expedient if he were to go alone. But if he took Rosa with him, granting that they reached Villa's lines in saftey, how would the general look upon a gringo taking away a fair daughter of Mexico?

The only route open to the couple seemed to be to the Texas border. That was a long distance, and capture was almost certain. Vera Cruz even with the court martial would afford a better chance. And might he not enter Vera Cruz and pass out of it on a merchant steamer without falling into the hands of the naval authorities?

Jack and Rosa determined that they would better not live at all than live apart. They determined to break for Vera Cruz. They laid their plans accordingly, and one dark night Rosa stepped down from her room, passed through the patio and met Jack on the walk leading to the gate. The lovers were passing between the two huge brick pillars when a light was flashed in their faces.

"Senorita," said Ramon Casio, "I would advise you to return to your room. Signor, you will please come with me."

Had Jack not been encumbered by the girl he would have made a dash for liberty. He could not go with her, and he would not go without her. The three went quietly to the house. Rosa shut herself up in her room, while Jack was locked in his, though there was no necessity for this, for he would not have departed if left free to do so.

A few days after this the door of Jack's room was opened by the major domo and Jack was directed to follow him. He was taken to the library, where he found Rosa's father, the general. To Jack's surprise the general addressed him in a not unkind tone, asked him a great many questions about himself, including his family, his father's occupation and fortune.

"I have to choose between yielding to my daughter," said the general at last, "in this affair between you and losing her. I can kill you, but by doing so I will kill her as well. I can send you out of the country, but I would wreck her life. I am forced to consent to a marriage between you and her, but so long as I must do so I will do so with a good grace."

He offered Jack his hand, and at the same moment a door opened and Rosa came in. She threw herself into the arms of her father, then turned to Jack.

"Would you prefer," asked the general of Jack, "to return to America or remain in Mexico?"

"Neither are safe for me, general," Jack replied. "I think we had better go to Europe for a bridal trip and remain till a different government is established here. Then I will return and make you a dutiful son-in-law."

Jack married Rosa and without being required to fit Alfonso for college. When Huerta left Mexico it made a great alteration in Mexico. Jack's father-in-law changed sides just in time, and since he was considered a very fine man and had the confidence of the people he remained on top. He found himself enabled not only to take care of himself, but of Jack also, who became a Mexican citizen and is already looming into prominence on his own account and is to be provided for as an officeholder.

GALICIA TAKEN OVER BY CZAR

Signs Proclamation Declaring It a Russian Province

AUSTRIANS CLOSELY PRESSED

Their Armies Almost Completely Surrounded by Superior Russian Force and Surrender Is Expected—Epidemic of Disease Adds to Other Heavy Losses—Vienna Fears Worst

Petrograd, Sept. 9.—Galicia is now a Russian province. An official proclamation signed by Czar Nicholas, making this announcement, emphasizing the extent of the great Russian victory over Austria.

All of eastern Galicia as far as the river San is now declared to be held by the Russians, and they are reported to have crossed the San in great force south of Przemysl and to be marching northward to attack that city and Jaroslav in both front and rear. It is the intention of the Russian general staff to take these positions as soon as possible so that a general movement northward against the remnants of the Austrian army can be begun.

The Austrian armies of General Auffenberg, former Austrian minister of war, and General Dankl are reported as almost completely surrounded by a vastly superior Russian force.

Their surrender is looked for. Already they have suffered terrible losses. They are now penned in northern Galicia and in Russian Poland near Krasnik and Zamosc, being attacked from the front by a Russian army totalling nearly 400,000 men with more than 1000 guns. In addition, another strong Russian army is advancing from the southeast to attack the Austrians and their German re-enforcements from the flank.

But it is not alone the Russian army that the Austrians are fighting. Their sanitary arrangements have been very bad and an epidemic of disease is reported among the troops. Thousands of Austrians have died of dysentery and already many of the Austrian prisoners are suffering from the dread disease. Because of this all of the Austrian prisoners, including the wounded, have been isolated.

That the Vienna government realizes the seriousness of the situation is shown by reports from the Russian secret agents that Vienna is being prepared for a siege. Thousands of men have been put to work strengthening the Vienna defenses and a complete new line of entrenchments is being constructed around the city. Heavy guns are being mounted and the natural advantages of the city are being utilized to every possible extent.

The Russians are advancing through the entire territory between the Vistula and the Bug rivers. In addition, the Russians, as the result of the extreme mobility of the Cossack cavalry, have been able to command the passes through the Carpathian mountains. This will open the way for an advance into Hungary along the direct road to Budapest.

UNDESIRABLE ALIENS?

"Sir" James and "Lady" Carlton Are Under Arrest at Boston

Boston, Sept. 9.—"Lady" Carlton, who was entertained by Mayor Curley at the expense of the city, does not know whether she is married or not to "Sir" James Carlton, who was also feted by the mayor as a guest of the citizens of this supposedly wide-awake town.

In the absence of all proof of marriage, her "ladyship" was placed under arrest by immigrant inspectors, who also caused the arrest of "Sir" James.

Until the question of their marriage is definitely determined, both have been classed as undesirable aliens.

CUT OFF WATER SUPPLY

Mexican Capital Suffers From Activity of the Southern Rebels

Washington, Sept. 9.—Official dispatches telling of the cutting of Mexico City's water supply for three days, presumably by Zapatista bands, concerned administration officials because they reflected the relentless activity of the southern leader following the recent parleys with Carranza representatives.

It is considered practically certain that if Carranza and Villa unite in forming a strong central government recognition by the United States will follow, and the new administration will have sufficient military force to quell the Zapatista movement.

JOLY—RADLEY.

Miss Annie Gertrude Radley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Radley of 64 Old Colony avenue, was united in marriage Tuesday evening to Alfred Elezar Joly of Whitman. The wedding was a quiet affair the ceremony being performed by Rev. J. P. Cuffe of the Sacred Heart church. The bridal couple left later in the evening for a wedding trip. A somewhat remarkable thing about the wedding is that both the bride and groom are deaf and dumb.

BIDS FOR STREET WORK

Three Firms Would Like to Build Wollaston Park Streets

Bids were open by Commissioner Brown this morning for building Phillips and Green streets. These are two of the streets accepted last June by the City Council. Three bids were received as follows:

Thomas Whelan & Co.	$2,512.70
William F. Loud & Son	3,240.55
William Shea & Son	6,729.55

The bids were taken under advisement and the contract will be awarded later.

The appropriation for these two streets was $4,900 which would make the bid seem extremely low. The difference however is explained by the fact that bidders were requested to bid on estimated amount of certain material to be used. That is each bidder put in a bid for so much per foot for this or that part of the work, the amount as noted above being estimated. When the streets are built the amount may be less than estimated but the chances are that the amounts named will be greatly increased.

It is expected that the Commissioner will advertise for bids in a few days for the paving of Penn street and the widening and rebuilding of Hancock street. The season is so late now that it would be impossible for the Commissioner to do all the street work contemplated by the orders passed and for this reason many of them will be let by contract. The cause of the delay in commencing work was due to the inability of the treasurer to place the loans.

AUTO ACCIDENT HOUGHS NECK

Three people had a narrow escape from serious injury this morning when the auto in which they were riding struck a pole on Sea street, near the Willows, Houghs Neck.

The machine was operated by John Rooney of Hyde Park and carried as passengers John Monahan, 10 years and Miss Mary McCaffery, both of that town. All were thrown out of the machine, the only one sustaiing injury being Miss McCaffery who escaped with bruises and contusions about the right knee.

As far as is known the accident occured when Mr. Rooney, in turning to speak with the passengers in the rear seat lost control of his machine and it brought up against the pole.

The accident was witnessed by several who ran to their assistance and secured medical attendance. All three returned to their summer home. The machine was somewhat damaged.

MEN WORK ON CHURCH GROUNDS

About 20 of the men of the Hall Place M. E. church did a very creditable piece of work on the holiday, which greatly improved the appearance of the church property, and will be appreciated by church people for some time.

The driveway leading to the church was excavated and filled with stone chips contributed by F. Wesley Fuller. This was covered with granite dust contributed by Charles LeClair. The teaming was done by Henry Trask and A. L. Johnson. Then the driveway was rolled. Robert Newcomb superintended the improvement, and Charles S. Jose and others assisted. The church is fortunate in having so many willing workers.

SQUANTUM BREEZES.

Dock Commissioner F. F. Crane spoke to the members of the Squantum improvement association at their regular meeting Tuesday at the Squantum Inn on inland waterways. His address was largely statistics, and is familiar to many Quincy people. He was accompanied by John O. Hall, secretary of the Quincy Board of Trade, who talked briefly.

A request was made that the 10.35 P. M. car from Neponset bridge on Sunday nights wait at the Atlantic station for the 10.44 train out of Boston. It was found however that as the 11.17 train from Atlantic is the last one into Boston that the car could be held at Atlantic and get to Squantum and back in time to connect with the 11.17 outgoing train.

President John R Nelson presided at the meeting and presented a petition in regard to the purchase of a schoolhouse site.

The banquet committee reported a surplus of $1.85 which it was voted be placed in the hands of the entertainment committee.

Complaints were made of thefts of fruits and vegetables from orchards and gardens in Squantum and Chairman Loughan of the police committee said he would take the matter up with the Chief of Police.

Miss Mildred Huston, the stenographer of the Quincy Court, returned this morning from a month's visit in Montana, satisfied that Quincy is the best place on earth. RETURNS FROM FRANCE

Miss Corrine La Brecque Reached Home on Tuesday

Among the American refugees from Europe who arrived on the French liner Rochambeau at New York on Tuesday was Miss Corinne LeBrecque, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Achilles LaBrecque of Adams shore. Miss LaBrecque immediately came to this city and reached home during the evening.

The trip over was marked by many discomforts. The supply of matches on the ship gave out three days before reaching port, also the cigars and fresh water supply. Distilled water was used for drinking purposes and patent lighters were used.

Miss Jane Fortier who landed in New York has reached Quincy, and is now at the City Hospital for a rest.

The arrival of Mrs. Joseph L. Whiton, Mrs. Harry L. Whiton and Miss Ruth Whiton has not yet been reported, but they are daily expected on the S. S. Creole at New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Duggan of Atlantic returned Tuesday in splendid health, from their extended visit in Ireland.

Miss Jane Fortier, of Atlantic, a teacher at the New England Conservatory of Music, who was in Europe when war was declared, is now a patient at the Quincy City Hospital where she is recovering from the effects of her trying experiences.

Miss Fortier is a resident of Norfolk Downs, and on her trip was accompanied by a Boston young lady. Both reached a sea port and obtained passage home under difficulties. Their baggage was seized by the authorities and with it a great deal of clothing so that both suffered extremely from the frequently changing temperature.

Miss Fortier this morning confirmed that she had been twice arrested on suspicion of being a spy, but her physical condition is such that she was unable to grant an extensive interview. She is thought to be suffering from what is known as the Italian fever and may be obliged to remain at the hospital for several weeks.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

HIS FIFTIETH MILESTONE

Louis Grossman Is Observing His Anniversary

Louis Grossman, one of the best known of the Jewish residents of this city, and a successful business man, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends on the attainment of the 50th anniversary of his birth on Sunday.

On Monday evening at a reception tendered him at his home on Federal avenue, by the immediate family, he was presented with a diamond ring, the presentation being made by Rubin A. Grossman, the oldest of a family of nine children.

Mr. Grossman has been married 29 years, and has made his home in this city 23 years. His position in the business world today is the result of hard, energetic work.

One of his sons, Joseph B. Grossman, is a member of the Board of Registrars of Quincy. Several are married and are parents of 10 grandchildren.

WILL TEACH JEWISH HISTORY

Israel Resnick of New York and Samuel Pollock of Boston, in their lectures at the synagogue on School street Sunday evening, advocated the erection of a school to teach the history of the Jewish race. They spoke of the fine progress being made in this city by the younger residents, and recommended more time be devoted to the study of history.

The campaign which will eventually close with the dedication of a building for school purposes was launched, and the committee appointed includes B. Julius, Joseph Szathmary, Jacob Grossman and Benjamin Rappaport.

BROUGHT HERE FROM PLYMOUTH

Walter C. Ela and Arthur Harris, who were injured near Plymouth on Labor Day when their automobile turned turtle, were brought back to Quincy on Tuesday and are now resting comfortable at their homes. Mrs. Ela, who is thought to have fractured two ribs, is also a little more comfortable. In order to learn the extent of the injuries X ray pictures will be taken of them this afternoon.

It appears that it was not Mr. Ela's car to which the acident happened but the car of Mr. Harris, who was driving it at the time. Although the accident was of a serious nature all of those concerned are congratulating themselves that it was not worse, for when an automobile turns turtle while in motion serious results are likely to follow.

QUINCY SUITS AT DEDHAM

Two Quincy suits were filed in the clerk's office at the Norfolk Superior court at Dedham on Tuesday.

One was that of Robert A. Neil, who sues Thomas A. Ferguson for $5,000 charging that the latter slandered him to his employer Francis A. Krasue, causing him to lose his positon.

The second is that of Hattie L. Nash against Mabel Pfaffmann, for injuries alleged to have been received when a piazza on the house where she lived fell to the ground while she was standing on it.

Annie Russo of Weymouth has also filed suit against the Old Colony Gas Co. for $5,000 claiming that she was made ill by escaping gas while employed in a house in Weymouth.

RECEPTION TO EX-COMMODORE ADAMS

Happy Feature of the Annual Cup Night of the Quincy Yacht Club

Presentation of Trophies Won By the Yachts

It was a very flattering reception which the members and guests at the annual cup night celebration of the Quincy Yacht club bestowed upon ex-Commodore Charles F. Adams, 2d, Wednesday evening, and he was referred to by several speakers as the greatest man in the racing line the club ever had.

The banquet was served in the main hall of the clubhouse at 7 o'clock by Caterer Whittemore and a jolly party assembled.

At the head table which was laid across the bay end of the hall was Commodore Harry S. Crane. At his right sat ex-Commodore Adams, while on his left was Commodore W. L. Barnard of the Hingham yacht club. Others at the head table were Hon. Eugene R. Stone, an ex-commodore of the Town River Yacht club, and ex-Commodore Thompson P. Crane of the same club; T. H. Campbell, secretary, and Howard Gannett, treasurer of the Interclub association; Commodore C. A. Blazo of the Winthrop Yacht club; W. L. Carleton, chairman of the regatta committee of the Corinthian Yacht club; Commodore F. N. Taylor of the Wollaston Yacht club; Commodore E. F. Drew of the Squantum Yacht club; ex-Commodores Frank Fessenden Crane, Ira M. Whittemore and Herbert W. Robbins of the Quincy Yacht club; and Vice Commodore Edgar W. Emery, Rear Commodore C. W. Laing, Fleet Captain W. S. Hibbard, and Treasurer George S. Morse. Others at the head table were Joshua Holbrook, F. W. Esterbrook and Myron Turner.

At one table on the northerly side of the hall, sat the famous Quincy Yacht club chorus, who to the accompaniment of an orchestra rendered a number of popular selections during the dinner. Particularly strong were they on the choruses of "Get out and get under, "Sit down you're rocking the boat," "He's a devil in his own home town," "I love the ladies," etc. Some of the choruses were so pleasing that there were repeated calls for another rendering. Every now and then the Quincy Yacht Club yell would resound through the hall with a vim that almost shook the rafters.

COMMODORE CRANE.

Commodore Crane was in an especially happy frame of mind and he presided over the deliberations in a manner that immediately set aside all formality, informing the guests and members at the opening that he was very glad to welcome so many, and for them to get busy. Before the eats were commenced, Ira M. Whittemore the cheer leader jumped to his feet and proposed three cheers for Commodore Crane which were given with enthusiasm.

EX-COMMODORE ADAMS.

Ex-Commodore Adams was the first of the after-dinner speakers and he was given an exceedingly warm welcome. He said that it was really a great pleasure to be present and see so many familiar faces. He should like to talk of some of the events of the yachting season. In New York he said there was a yacht club whose members were sometimes looked upon as a little haughty, but he could as-

KEMP--NORRIE WEDDING

Ceremony at Presbyterian Church Followed by Reception

Miss Jennie Shephard Norrie of 49 Newcomb place, a very popular resident of this city, and Irving Leslie Kemp, a mail clerk on the U. S. S. Torpedo boat Burroughs which is now at Newport, R. I., were married in this city Wednesday evening. The ceremony was performed in the auditorium of the First Presbyterian church by Rev. James A. Matheson, and was followed by a reception in the vestry.

Miss Ardelle McDonald, a neice of the bride, was her attendant, and Wallace Kemp, a brother of the groom, as the best man. The bride was dressed in white crepe de chine over white messaline, and wore a veil caught up with orange blossoms. She carried bride roses. The bridesmaid was dressed in pink crepe de chine and carried pink roses. Owing to the indisposition of her father she was given away by her older brother, James Norrie.

As the bridal party entered the church the bridal chorus of Lohengren was played, and as they were leaving John Preston, the organist, rendered the Mendelssohn wedding march.

In the receiving line were the newly married couple, and their attendants. The ushers were George Russell, William Troupe, Wendell and Everett Clark. Assisting the guests were the Misses Lillian and Isabelle McIntosh and Edith and Helen Elrick.

The decorations at the church were palms and asters, and the vestry was similarly decorated. The receiving party was under an arbor of green and white crepe paper, from the centre of which was suspended a wedding bell.

The decorations were in charge of Misses Jessie and Margaret Shirley, assisted by a corps of young ladies of the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Kemp are now on a wedding trip to New York, Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., and on their return will live at 45 Goddard street, this city. The bride is a faithful member of the First Presbyterian church and has always been prominent in its affairs. The groom was born in this city and has many friends in the South Quincy section.

The funeral of Luther S. Anderson was held Wednesday afternoon at 2,30 from his late residence on Granite street, and in accordance with the wish of the family were of a simple nature. The services were conducted by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson, of the First Parish church and were largely attended, for aside from his many business associates the employees at the Granite Railway plant were present in a body, having marched from West Quincy.

There was a profusion of beautiful flowers including a large set piece from the employees of the Granite Railway Co. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

THOUSAND PUPILS SOON AT HIGH SCHOOL

Quincy Public Schools Show an Increased Enrollment of 398, Total 6,207.

Opening of the Industrial School on Full Time

At the general teachers' meeting held Wednesday afternoon at the Coddington school hall, the masters of the several school districts of the city furnished the Superintendent of Schools with their enrolment up to the close of school that afternoon. As similar figures have been presented each year for the corresponding date they furnish material for comparisou and give a line on the growth of the city as well as the increase in school population.

All told the school enrolment is 398 greater than last year and this increase is the largest annual gain in the history of the city.

The enrolment in the grade schools is 5295, and in the High school 926, while the Industrial school furnishes 86 to the list. Before the close of the month these numbers will be largely increased, and the High school numbers will rise above 1,000, as none of the post graduates have yet been registered.

The variations in the several districts from the figures of last year are of some interest. Only two buildings show a decreased attendance; the Gridley Bryant school falls off 21 children and has lost steadily over a long series of years. The Adams school for the second year in succession shows a slight loss, dropping 6 to 321.

The increase in the other schools fortunately is pretty well distributed those increasing to the greatest extent being the High School with 58; the Coddington with 36; the Lincoln with 48, the Quincy with 57, and the Wollaston with 48.

The total gain excluding the enrolment at the Industrial school, is equivalent to the enrolment of nine full school rooms, and has required a considerable increase in teaching force and number of assistants. It is interesting to observe that the Willard school, after a number of years in which the school population remained nearly stationary, or showed even a slight decrease, has now begun to increase steadily in number.

Just how much of this increase is due to the growth of the city and how much to other agencies, as for

THE INCOME TAX.

The government guesed very correctly as to the yield of the so-called "normal income tax." But in the higher scales of payment, the results proved disappointing. About $12,000,000 was expected on incomes ranging from $20,000 to $50,000. But the government actually got less than $3,000,000 from this class.

Have our millionaires dodged the tax? It would hardly seem a safe game, considering the indifference that internal revenue collectors show to local sentiment.

There seems to be one very wide loop-hole. And that is in the general understanding, as the law is interpreted, that losses in investments can be deducted from income. There was, during the last calendar year, a large shrinkage in the stock market. A great many millionares sold stocks at a loss. These shrinkages were probably deducted from income, so that nothing taxable was left.

Also, if in making returns, people have been permitted to value their present holdings at the market quotations prevailing last December, thousands of persons of great wealth would be able to say that they had no taxable income.

This is of course a perfectly fair way of making these returns, provided that when the market rises, the advance in values is treated in just the same way. It is quite possible that the tax-payer will not then be so ready to base his return on market prices.

The treatment of such shrinkages and accretions of value is very difficult. It would seem at first sight that such changes in value should be calculated only when an actual sale of a stock has been made. Yet that would bear hard on people who have permanently invested in certain securities, and whose capital has shrunk for good, as the result of the fall in values.

ELECTING A NEW POPE.

The election of a new Pope would have taken far more attention had not the black headlines in the newspapers been taken by the war. The Italians predominate in the conclave. Hence as an expression of world thought, it is not so cosmopolitan as it would be were all the powers equally represented. But the Italian element is not so strong as formerly.

The election of Pope Pius represented the tendency of the times toward democratic feeling. Previous Popes have largely been men from the upper orders of Italian society. They may have been democratic in their feeling, but at least they were more or less aristocratic in blood and environment. The election of Pope Pius, coming from an obscure family, was in striking contrast.

The choice of Benedict XV is held to represent in a measure the reversion to the older type of diplomatic Popes. The intense racial and national antagonisms now excited, call for this mastery in strategy. The Italian temperament is keen, acute, penetrating, seeing with uncanny swiftness into human motives.

Without armies or navies to back them, the Popes have usually foiled the most consummate politicians of Europe.

As is provided the election of a Pope has no counterpart. The general purpose is to dignify the ceremonial and to shut off the electing cardinals from outside influence. In old times, the impatient populace would tolerate no delay. The cardinals were starved out, as juries are forced to an issue in this country. If the election was delayed eight days, these mighty churchmen were reduced to bread and water. For many years these rigors have been relaxed, but in most respects the event still has the austere and lofty dignity of medieval monastic life.

DRIVEN BACK BY BULLETS OF BRITISH

London Hears That Germans Are Preparing to Retreat

MAUBEUGE FALLS INTO HANDS OF INVADERS

French Loss of Forty Thousand Prisoners and Four Hundred Guns the Only Disturbing Factor From Allies' Standpoint—German Pace Has Been Too Speedy and Troops Are Fatigued—Abrupt Stoppage of Equipment and Hurling Back of Advance Has Thrown German Lines Into Confusion—Frenzied Attempts to Check Allies Are Met With Attack After Attack Along the Centre

London, Sept. 10.—The Germans are preparing to retreat. This is the stirring report that has reached London.

The official French report, issued at Bordeaux, states that appearances seem to indicate that the Germans are preparing for such an unlooked for and inglorious anti-climax to their relentless sweep into French territory.

From unofficial sources it is learned that the conservative estimate of the French government is based upon apparently unmistakeable evidences of activity extending along practically the whole rear of the German armies.

Observers from aeroplanes, which have been hovering by scores over the German lines, have brought back the tidings that a general retirement has begun and that the roads to the north are being scoured by cavalry and watched from above by airmen.

It is too early to prophesy that the German armies, a week ago so confident of victory, will now seek refuge from the bullets of the allies in flight toward the German, the Luxemburg and the Belgian boundaries. But every official and unofficial message received in London confirms the possibility.

Maubeuge In German Hands

The fall of Maubeuge, reported officially from Berlin and generally accepted as true, despite the fact that no confirmation has come from Paris or Bordeaux, has been the only disturbing factor in the news from the standpoint of the allies. The loss of 40,000 prisoners and 400 guns, even if the German reports do not later prove to have been exaggerated, cannot dampen the ardor that has been aroused in London by the news of greater successes by the British and French troops on the long battle line from Paris to Verdun.

Each hour Wednesday, largely due to the unceasing courage and the deadly fire of the British soldiers, the positions of the allies were improved. The British, who had been driven back over the Marne by the advancing German army under General von Kluck, recrossed the river, drove the enemy before them and they are now twenty-five miles in advance of the positions that they held Tuesday.

The tremendous distance gained indicates that the German resistance, although bitter at first, relaxed greatly during the progress of the fighting, and that in the later hours was hardly felt at all.

Germans Nearly Worn Out

Fatigue and the unprecedented speed of the German movement from the north appear to have wrecked the invaders' chances, just as keen military observers prophesied ten days or more ago.

As long as they were marching forward, the ammunition and provisions, in trains and hundreds of motor vans, were able to keep the German force well equipped. But with the sudden check, which has developed into a retreat in the region of Paris, the abrupt stoppage and hurling back of the advance has caused a confusion on the long lines of communication that threatens to grow into a chaos.

The same thing was apparent in the early days of the war when Liege so surprisingly halted the German onset. For a few days stories of hardships due to lack of food were constantly heard. Then the tangle was straightened out and since that time the provisioning has moved like clockwork.

But Liege was so near the German boundary that the problem there was comparatively easy in contrast to that which is presented today. The long railroad lines, almost choked with trains even when the advance was moving, are now rumored to be almost at a standstill owing to the inability of the Germans to rearrange their schedules on such sudden and such unexpected notice.

Must Hold Lines to Benefit

Ammunition is said to be coming to the front even more slowly than food. The capture of Maubeuge will prove an inestimable benefit to the Germans if they can hold their lines in front of the long beleaguered city, for through it passes the best line of railroad into that part of France controlled by the Germans. But if the retreat proves to be a fact, Maubeuge will have held out too long to be of advantage to the invaders.

GENERAL JOFFRE.

Stated Transfer of Paris Government Part of His Plans.

Fatigue, too, has done its part. The Germans who have been driving back the British and French have been spurred forward at a pace that now threatens to impair their usefulness as a fighting machine.

This was evidenced Wednesday in the battling along the Ourcq and Marne rivers, where the conflict raged more severely than elsewhere. This division has evidently been weakened to strengthen the German centre, where a desperate attempt has been made to pierce the lines of the allies. The French and British drove back the enemy as swiftly as they had themselves been hurled back in that headlong pursuit out of Belgium toward Paris.

Early in the day the Germans made frenzied attempts to beat back the allies who were stationed on the right bank of the Ourcq. Just as in all the fighting that has gone on here since Saturday, the assaults failed, and later the charges of the British and French could not be withstood. The allies gave no mercy to the retreating Germans. Word had gone out that the supplies of ammunition in the hostile ranks were failing and attack after attack was delivered as they fell back.

No Impression Upon Allies' Lines

In the centre, where the German hope for ultimate triumph rests in a desperate attempt to mass their strength and to batter into halves the armies opposing them, the invaders failed to make any impression upon the strong lines of the allies.

General Joffre's wisdom in choosing his battlefield was apparent. The reenforcements sent to the centre from the retreating right wing of the Germans were compelled to struggle through a region of swamps and then over barren uplands swept by the effective French artillery.

Renewed efforts will probably be made by the Germans to strike here with such terrific strength that the lines of the allies will have to bend and finally break. But the high ground held by the French artillery will be able, it is confidently predicted in Paris, to hold this movement in check until the British and French from the neighborhood of Paris will be in a position to strike at the flank of this formidable German centre.

The fact that General Pau is now believed to be in command of the French in the centre means much to the French capital. If he can add to his laurels here by checking the German assaults, even his earlier triumphs at Mulhausen and at Guise will be forgotten in the paean of praise that will chronicle his stand at Vitry-le-Francois.

Great Battle Is Looked For

A battle of greater moment than those of the last four days is expected now in the centre of the embattled lines. The French appear to hold such a superior position that it seems improbable that the Germans can batter their way through and sunder the armies of the allies.

The Germans are hurrying re-enforcements to Fer Champenoise, Sommessous and Sompuis, but they must occupy inferior positions. Whatever hope the Germans have of winning in the centre must come from reinforcements driven in from the northeast. The cessation of battling about Nancy points to a hurried rush to strengthen the centre.

Here, or nowhere, it appears from the dispatches, the Germans must win. If they fail, they can hardly wage another decisive battle south of Belgium.

SAVES CITY FROM PILLAGE

Burgomaster of Ghent "Makes Good" With German Commander

The danger of serious reprisals at the hands of the German army as the result of the killing of one officer and the wounding of another by a machine gun contingent at Ghent after the burgomaster had arranged to prevent the occupation of the town in force has been averated.

The burgomaster went in person to the German commander. He explained to him that the shooting had been done by a Belgian military force over which neither he nor the city had any jurisdiction.

When he returned to Ghent the burgomaster explained that the Germans accepted his statement as satisfactory and promised to adhere to the original agreement. They agreed that the attack on the officers was a legitimate act of war and that there was no need of reprisals on Ghent.

The original agreement will be carried out. The Ghent civil guard will be disarmed. Only a small body of Germans will enter the city and the city will furnish the Germans needed supplies for the main body of their troops.

OCEANIC WRECKED

Merchant Cruiser Was Taken Over by the British Government

The official press bureau at London issued the following announcement:

"The merchant cruiser Oceanic of the White Star line was wrecked near the north coast of Scotland and has become a total loss. All the officers and crew were saved."

The fact that the Oceanic was wrecked off the north coast of Scotland indicates that she has been used to transport Russian troops from Archangel for use in the campaign in France.

The Oceanic was taken over by the British government at the opening of the war. She formerly was in the Ney York service.

KAISER CABLES TO WILSON

Protests Use of Dum-Dum Bullets and Activity of Belgian Citizens

President Wilson received a personal cablegram from Emperor William of Germany protesting against the use by the allied army of dum-dum bullets and the participation in the war by civilians of Belgium.

The message expressed also the emperor's deep regret at the destruction of the Belgian city of Louvain. He declared, however, that the population of Belgium had offered such resistance that his generals had in many cases found it necessary to administer severe punishment. The contents of the message were closely guarded.

BRINGS 1570 REFUGEES

Cunarder Disguised as a Warship Arrives at Boston

Crowded with 1570 refugees from the European war zone, the Cunard liner Laconia docked in Boston. She was the most completely disguised steamship that has reached Boston since the war began.

The upper half of the liner was painted gray and at a short distance she looked like a United States warship.

She brought more cabin passengers than any steamship that ever docked in Boston. There were 661 in the first and 487 in the second cabin. When the Laconia was one day out she met a French cruiser, with which she exchanged signals. The passengers had the usual crop of hard luck stories to tell.

FORTUNES FOR FARMERS

Five Leading Crops This Year Valued at More Than $4,000,000,000

Chicago, Sept. 10.—This is the golden year for the American farmer. His five leading crops for 1914 were worth $4,352,000,000 on Sept. 1, leading grain men estimate, using the government's crop report as a basis.

This is $682,000,000 more than the farmer received last year for the same five crops—wheat, corn, oats, barley and hay—and forecasts the richest returns to the soil tillers in the history of the United States.

Eventually, the grain men point out, this more than $4,000,000,000 in "farm prosperity" must trickle through until general business conditions reflect the increase in crop values.

CHELSEA ONE OF HIGHEST

Tax Rate of $24 Reported, Increase of $2.20

The tax rate of Chelsea as announced by the Assessors on Wednesday is $24. per $1,000 an increase of $2.20 over the rate of 1913. Mayor Willard recommended that the rate be $23.90 but the Assessors raised it 10 cents on account of overlays. The valuation is given as $29,000,000, the increase in real and personal estate being $530,000. The number of assessed polls in 10,007. The increase in rate is attributed to increased amounts needed for the schools. Only one city has a higher rate than Chelsea.

The tax rate of Revere which wants to become a city is $22.60.

Here is a list of the city rates both in 1913 and 1914, as far as reporting, showing the increases and decreases:

"LET US GET SHIPS WITHOUT DELAY---START BUILDING THEM."

"We are in the presence of the greatest opportunity in the history of this country," said Daniel Guggenheim. "It is up to the press and public spirited men to emphasize this. It is a public duty.

"Ordinarily I do not advocate paternalism in the central government, but I believe this the exception that proves the rule. Let everyone push and pull to get started.

"Washington should pass laws and speedily to develop our finance and commerce, ship subsidies, special bills---anything necessary to get THINGS GOING.

"For the first time the world's marts lie at our feet uncontested. Our European competitors are hopelessly handicapped for the time being.

"Let us get ships without delay, start building them; let the government buy private ocean-going pleasure yachts, any kind of ships that can be used for transportation. Europe wants our products and manufactures, and in a short time will be desperately in need of them.

"The outlook. In six months. even less, I expect to see this country FAIRLY BOILING with activity."

WRITES OF VISIT TO IRELAND

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius M. Duggan Saw Something of War

Cornelius M. Duggan of Atlantic, who returned with his wife this wek from a two months' visit to Ireland, wrote the following interesting letter to the Daily Ledger on Tuesday as the R. M. S. Laconia was entering Boston harbor. He saw something of the preparations for war:

The traveller, or tourist, never realizes the full import of those beautiful lines, "Home Sweet Home," so well as when the prow of the gallant ship bearing him across the ocean is pointed towards the harbor beyond which lies the home and loved ones, expectantly and fondly awaiting the wanderers' return.

We have been told by officers of the ship, that we may reach the lower harbor of Boston, late this evening, and consequently all are eager to see the dear old Hub, while I am anxious to get a glimpse of Houghs Neck, Squantum head, Quincy bay and to see if the grey turret standpipe is still performing duty on the Appenine heights of Third hill, Wollaston.

Since leaving Atlantic on the 7th of July we have had a most enjoyable trip going direct to Liverpool and crossing over to Belfast, the manufacturing centre of Ireland at the present time. We visited by easy stages, all the principal cities and towns from the north to the south of the island. The advancement in the agricultural districts is altogether beyond the conception of those who have not seen the country within the past twenty-five years.

The Land Purchase Act, whereby the farmer becomes absolute owner of his holding, after paying a reduced semi-annual rent for a period of about 68 years, is responsible in a great measure for the improvement evident on every hand. The Irish farmer, no longer the victim of the whims and caprices of an unjust, heartless, rack-renting system of landlordism, today challenges the attention of the world, by the manner in which he is adapting himself to the new condition of his surroundings.

Fostered and encouraged by a native Parliament, in College Green, Dublin, Ireland will obtain in the future, as she has had in her glorious past, a most important place in the history of Europe.

We have seen much of the excitement attendant on the present European war; husbands parting with their wives and families at a moment's notice; young men kissing their widowed mothers, many for the last time on this earth, when the toc-sin of war awoke the martial legions of Britain. We have seen troopships, and trains, filled with sturdy, athletic buoyant, rollicking Irish youth, singing and laughing, on their way to the front, with the proverbial spirit of his race in the face of danger.

Horse and cattle fairs were held on Sundays, to provide proper equipment for the army and navy. Every tunnel, railroad and street bridge in Ireland is now guarded by armed policemen, while every foreigner is closely watched. American tourists of wealth and influence are steerage passengers on this ship, glad to escape the "shindy."

British cruisers were in touch with us four days out from Queenstown. Emerging from all this turmoil and clamor, it is glorious to feel that we will soon again tread "the land of peace and plenty."

THOUSAND PUPILS

instance the new child labor law and the industrial depression, it is difficult to determine, but, in all probability the latter named are important factors in the increased school attendance.

While both the Washington and the Atherton Hough schools show gains, in neither case is the gain as large as had been anticipated, which under the circumstances is a fortunate happening.

CHANGE OF TEACHERS.

The most important change of teachers this year comes in the departure of Mr. Ray from the High school and Mr. Greene from the Gridley Bryant—Montclair district. Mr. Ray had built up and made the manual arts department what it now is ,a very popular and very efficient part of the High school. At the time he came to the High school, four years ago, there were only about a dozen pupils studying mechanical drawing.

In three years that number had increased to 244, due entirely to the very evident worth of the courses he organized and taught. His selection by the State Board of Education, to head the mechanical drawing department in the Massachusetts Normal Art schoo is proof of the attention that his work in Quincy has attracted. He was a tireless and inventive worker in the interests of the High school.

Austin W. Greene had been in the school system 17 years and had organized and carried on the work from the beginning at both the Gridley Bryant and the Montclair schools. At both schools he will long be remembered for his faithful work and keen professional spirit. His call to Lynn at an increased salary was a recognition of his work in Quincy. Apparently the increase of masters' salaries last spring came at the right time to prevent further losses. While it was not sufficient to keep Mr. Greene, it proved effective in other cases. At least three of the remaining grammar masters were approached in regard to accepting positions in other cities, but the slight difference in salary proved insufficient to tempt them away.

The calling of two of the grade teachers to Normal school positions, one to Bridgewater and the other to North Adams, is an inspiration to the teaching force. Both Miss Pope and Miss Gurdy were young teachers, only two years from normal graduation themselves. Their rapid promotion in so short a time will encourage others who are working with the true professional spirit.

COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT.

The increased numbers in the commercial department at the High school together with the new schedule which provides more opportunity for practice has required the addition of eight more machines for typewriting. This department has increased in efficiency to a marked degree the past year and the headmaster of the school receives a steadily increasing number of calls for its graduates for business employment.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOI

The Industrial school opened with the full attendance expected and is rapidly being worked into shape. The machines are all connected for work, and such alterations as are needed will be made by the pupils of the school themselves. In this connection it should be stated that all the belting necssary to connect the machinery, no small item, was furnished as a gift to the school, by the firm of L. Grossman and Sons of South Quincy.

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL.

Approximately 500 pupils are enrolled in the St. Johns parish school which started its third year on Tuesday. The pupils are about evenly divided, the boys being slightly in the majority.

As in former years the teaching will be carried on under the direction of Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor of the Parish who caused the school be erected. He will be assisted by members of the Sisterhood of St. Joseph.

The graduates were allowed to enter High school without examination, and in their respective classes have continued to attain high marks. Many of them aside from being holders of school diplomas also have diocesan diplomas awarded for unusual excellence. The graduates for this year according to Father Coan show singular promise and may be the banner

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

One of the most practical and useful of books on the subject of personal hygiene, is that by W. H. Tolman and H. G. Guthrie entitled "Hygiene for the worker, and edited by C. W. Crampton, director of physical training, department of education in New York city.

As stated in the preface, the two purposes of this book are "to equip the worker to care for himself under actual working conditions as they exist today, and to add to his happiness and efficiency."

The book is based on actual shop conditions, and the attitude taken by the editor is that the "teaching of hygiene should deal with the establishing of good habits, not with the learning of abstruse facts."

Besides giving simple hygienic formulas, easy to follow in everyday life, there are several chapters devoted to occupational dangers and injuries, which deal with preventive methods as well as with the cure.

The last chapter is on the much dreaded and widely spreading disease of tuberculosis. It tells what the disease is, how it is caused, means of prevention, and if contracted the treatment for cure.

Everything is told in such plain language that it is easy to understand, and much help may be derived from following daily the rules here given.

The estate on Goffe street purchased last spring by Herbert E. Drake for his own occupancy is undergoing extensive alterations, additions being made to the house and the grounds enlarged.

BODY FOUND.

Medical Examiner McGrath of Boston phoned local police headquarters Wednesday that the body of a man thought to be Laurie Hissila of 24 Kent street, Quincy, had been found in the freight yard near Lewis wharf, Boston, Tuesday night.

While the man was probably killed by being struck by a train, the police see in the wound in his head and an empty pay envelope, a possibility of murder. A decision as to the cause of death has been reserved and an autopsy performed.

Friends will today claim the body and it will be brought to this city for burial. In the meantime a rigid police investigation is being made.

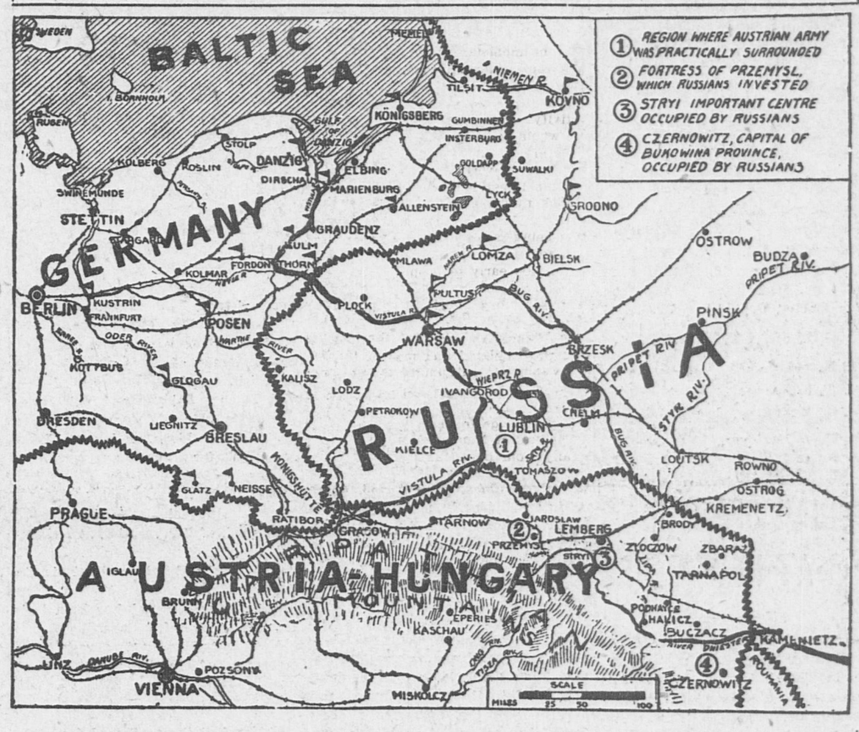
New Map Showing Russian Successes In Advance Into Germany With Berlin as Objective Point.



Increased interest centers in the advance of the Russian troops into Germany. This map shows the first step in their invasion indicating where they defeated the Austrians, driving them from Lemberg back upon their last forts in the Carpathian mountains. The Russian plan of invasion calls for the left wing resting on the Carpathians and the right resting on the Baltic sea, with the re-enforced center advancing toward Posen.

WARD ONE REPUBLICANS.

State politics will be set forth tonight by some of the Republican candidates for state offices who will come before the voters at the primaries Sept. 22, at the second annual outing of the Ward One Republicans at Norteman's Houghs Neck. Special cars for the party will leave City Square at 5.40, and on their arrival there will be a social half hour in which opportunity will be had to meet some of the candidates. At 6.30 Norteman will serve one of his famous shore dinners. It is distinctly understood that tonights gathering has nothing whatever to do with municipal politics, as it is rather early for them to start in.

Plymouth had another serious automobile accident on Wednesday, when Mrs. Henry E. Urann of Dorchester was killed and her husband badly injured.

WAR AND THE WORKINGMAN

Views of James Duncan the Labor Leader

James Duncan of this city who is secretary of the International Granite Cutters Union, and also first vice president of the American Federation of Labor, contributes to the Globe symposium on "War and the Workingmen." He writes:

"Workingmen generally are opposed to war. Organized workmen go further, for they are not only officially opposed to war, but they protest against the governments of their respective countries resorting to war in the settlement of international disputes.

"There are other ways of displaying real patriotism than in the glorification of an opportunity to shed human blood, and especially when it comes to the workingmen in one country shedding the blood of workingmen of another country when between the workers involved there is no quarrel. It is depressing to witness the whole of it. When the turmoil is over workingmen will not have gained anything and monarchs will have fastened their shackles on their subjects with an extra rivet. We hoped that the war cloud would not turn out so bad as it looked, that men's passions would subside, that they might return to the peaceful pursuits for which they are better fitted and which would make their respective countries greater than ever can happen through slaughter of their fellow-men. But our hopes were vain.

"It now appears that the European quarrel is a subject of alleged insult between monarchs. The insult (?) was so infinitesimal that the wonder is that even kings would involve their people in a ghastly dispute. Being a contention between monarchs it would have been comparatively humane if instead the monarchs with their courtly equipages had arranged themselves in combat each sides with the other and to have left out those neither individually nor collectively involved, thus to end the contention, perhaps by cleaning out the whole of them and thereby to rid an otherwise pacific continent from the scourge of being subject to the avarice and empty pride of monarchical intrigue.

"No subdivision of society suffers so much because of war as working people. They mainly have to do the fighting, they bear the loss of men, and have to pay the unwarranted cost from labor power. Among the unorganized collective opposition to recurrence of war is not possible, but since organized workers have secured the advantages of education, they have been protesting much and earnestly against war, and have been memorializing other institutions to join with them in favor of peace. In some instances their remonstrances have been so strong that political and capitalistic intrigue has had to pause lest it would be without sufficient men to form its armies.

"We have nearly a million immigrants coming to our shores per annum. It is the duty of the labor movement to teach a great portion of them the concepts of American Government and of forbearance, and tolerance toward others. It is a stupendous undertaking, but is being wonderfully accomplished in a pacific and humanitarian manner. Sometimes there are outbreaks, because of industrial oppression, but that happens where the benign influences of organized labor have not been permitted to perform its functions, and where instead war upon both sides is the result. This is more of a disgrace to the great corporations than to the victims of their intolerant greed.

"As citizens of the United States we have our own troubles to meet, and which considered by themselves appear to be momentous, but very small when compared with the monarchical disputes of older countries. Let us all in unison appeal and pray to the God of the universe that our country and all others henceforth and for aye shall be relieved of the scourge of war industrially, Nationally or internationally."

MRS. SAMUEL P. HAYDEN.

Louise Hayden, widow of Samuel P. Hayden, a long time resident of Quincy Point, died Wednesday at the Home for aged Women at East Braintree, aged about 80 years. Mrs. Hayden is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Frank Tilden, and five sons, William, Bradford, Herbert, Charles, and Walter Hayden. Her funeral will be held from the home of her son, Herbert, Cleverly court, on Friday afternon.

FOOD SALE.

Friday last the postponed food sale of the Auxiliary to Camp 36 S. of V. was held at Charles Pratt's cottage, King Cove with forty present. Dinner and supper were served on the European plan, a tidy sum being realized. The donations were all sold at an early hour. An enjoyable feature was when Mrs. Jacob Loud summoned Mrs. Charles Abbott and told the assembled company of the fame Mrs. Abbott had attained for always donating twice the number of pies or cakes solicited and of the many bags and baskets worn out in conveying the same. So on behalf of her friends and in honor of the 16th (?) birthday of the recipient Mrs. Loud presented a handsomely fitted traveling bag to Mrs. Abbott, with the stipulation that she must either make a speech or tell her age. Mrs. Abbott chose the former alternative and in a few words accepted the gift which although a surprise, was none the less pleasing. At a late hour the company dispersed.

REFUGEES FILL THE HIGHWAYS

Parisians Following Government Officials to Bordeaux

THE EXODUS IS ENCOURAGED

Fifty Percent of Non-Combatants Expected to Leave City, Their Numbers at New French Capital Being Increased by People Who Fled From North Before Germans

Bordeaux, Sept. 10.—This city, the temporary capital of France, is filled with refugees from the north, whose care is seriously troubling the government. The department of the interior, which is in general charge of all relief work, is so congested that there is much suffering among the refugees and little chance of speedy relief. The influx continues.

Every Parisian who has been compelled to leave his home insists on accompanying the government here. The result has been that all buildings are crowded, the university buildings and other public structures have been fitted up as lodging houses and even then there is not enough room.

According to official reports the military census showed that already the population of Paris has decreased 30 percent. It is expected that before the movement ends 50 percent of the Parisians will have moved into the south. The government is encouraging the exodus. It is naturally to the advantage of the government to get all non-combatants out of the direct war zone.

The railroads have been unable to carry all who wanted to leave the city and hundreds of families are moving along the main highways. All of the larger towns on the main road directly south of Paris are reported filled with refugees. Not only do they come from Paris, but there are many thousands who fled from the north in front of the advancing German hosts.

The result is that travel on the main roads is very slow and thousands of women and children, who left most of their belongings behind when they fled from the theatre of battle, are forced to take refuge in barns or to sleep in the open fields, depending on the authorities in the towns along the route for food, which is freely given.

There has been real suffering among these refugees. Frail women stagger along, carrying their babies, with other children, many of them hardly able to walk, tugging at their skirts. There is a general feeling of comradeship and every vehicle moving along the roads is jammed with the women and the babies.

One sad feature of the exodus is the fact that many families have become separated in the flight and up to the present it has been impossible to reunite them. The government is establishing bureaus of information at the various towns south of Paris and a general list of all refugees is being compiled.

Foreign Minister Delcasse declared that he had confidential information showing beyond question that the internal situation in Germany is serious. He said:

"Despite all of the efforts of the German government to stimulate enthusiasm by the news of victories the people of Berlin and Germany generally are plunged in grief. Mourning is universal. Business is completely prostrated and the cost of living throughout all Germany rises daily. The prices of refrigerated supplies and canned goods continue to advance as well as those for fresh food."

GATES FOR GOVERNOR

Nominated by Vermont Republicans on the Second Ballot

Montpelier, Vt., Sept. 10.—State Highway Commissioner Charles W. Gates was nominated for governor by the Republicans at the state convention. Gates won on the second ballot, when he obtained six more than a majority of the votes.

The convention adopted a platform which indorsed the Republican policy of tariff legislation and favored direct primaries, the extension of state highways and woman suffrage.

COMPLETE ROUT OF AUSTRIANS

Russians Closely Pursue Remnants of Enemy's Forces

SLAV SOLDIERS DESERTING

Austria Endangered by Internal Dissension—Offensive Movements of Russians In East Prussia Resumed—Czar Says Nothing Will Prevent Capture of the Prussian Capital

Petrograd, Sept. 10.—That the Austrian armies of General von Auffenberg and General Dankl have been completely crushed by the Russians under General Ruzsky is the declaration at the war office.

It is stated that not only have the Austrians been completely routed, but that among the prisoners are many Germans, indicating the German reenforcements sent to aid the Austrians actually participated in the battle.

The main Russian attack was delivered from Rawa-Ruska, thirty-two miles northwest of Lemberg, where Ruzsky's army that had been sent from Warsaw attacked from the rear. The fighting, which began on Saturday, lasted until Wednesday. The remnants of the Austrian forces are declared to be retiring, hotly pursued by the Russians.

News that Austria-Hungary is on the verge of a financial panic and that already there have been serious anti-war riots in a number of important centres has reached the Russian foreign office. While actual information is withheld, it is confirmed that the internal situation in the dual empire is working in such a way as to promise materially to aid the Russian cause. In addition the Slav troops in the Austrian service are admitted to be surrendering at every opportunity, and this is having a bad effect on the morale of the entire Austrian army.

The fighting in northern Galicia and in Russian Poland continues, with the Austrians in full retreat. They are being greatly harried by the Russian cavalry, which is decimating their rear guard. In addition the army of Ruzsky has attacked them on their right flank and is inflicting enormous damage. The Russian forces have attacked the strongly fortified position at Grodsk, directly west of Lemberg and on the direct railroad route to Przemysl, which is also invested.

During the last three days' fighting the army of von Auffenberg has suffered heavy losses. One entire regiment of infantry was surrounded by a Cossack column and cut off. It surrendered with all equipment. The Russians continued to capture the enemy's guns by a series of brilliant attacks which have completely terrorized the enemy.

It is confiremd that Austrians have been defeated in a series of battles in the passes of the Carpathian mountains. The Russian cavalry has penetrated to the summits of the Carpathians and the army now moving through Bukowina province is reported already to have moved to the entrance of the Borge pass.

It is admitted at the war office that the Austrians are showing a better spirit and are contesting the line of retreat with the utmost vigor. It is stated, however, that the character of the territory over which the armies are contesting is far more favorable for attacking than for defensive purposes.

It is announced that General Rennenkampf, who is in charge of the Russian first army of invasion, now in East Prussia, has resumed the offensive. The gaps in his lines caused by the reverses at Allenstein have now been definitely filled. Already the advance guard is reported as having pushed far into East Prussia in the south, while the army which has isolated Koenigsberg is declared to be bombarding it with heavy siege artillery.

The czar is declared to be so incensed over the reported German excesses in Belgium that he has declared nothing will be left undone to take Berlin. He is understood to have chafed over the delay in starting the invasion of Germany, but finally agreed it was necessary first to break up the Austrian army's strength and render it ineffective in order that it might not later on prove a menace to the Russian rear.

Stories that Austrian officers have been shot in the back by their own men are widely circulated here. The Novoe Vremya prints stories saying these reports have been confirmed by prisoners taken at Lemberg.

IS IT YOUR KIDNEYS?

Don't Mistake the Cause of Your Troubles. A Quincy Citizen Gives a Valuable Hint.

Many people never suspect their kidneys. If suffering from a lame, weak or aching back they think that it is only a muscular weakness; when urinary trouble sets in they think it will soon correct itself. And so it is with all the other symptoms of kidney disorders. That is where danger often lies. You should realize that these troubles often lead to dropsy or Bright's disease. An effective remedy for weak or diseased kidneys is Doan's Kidney Pills. Read the experience of a resident of Quincy who has tested Doan's.

C. P. Russell, 37 Washington street, Quincy, says: "My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I also suffered from pains in my back. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and the first box relieved me. I intend to continue taking this medicine."

The Divorcees

Disappointed Once, They Hoped For Happiness In a Second Marriage

By EDITH V. ROSS

Two ladies met at a western town where there was a divorce colony.

"Why, Margaret!" exclaimed one of them to the other.

"Why, Gertrude!"

"You've not changed in the least since we parted on commencement day ten years ago."

"Nor you."

"But—I am sorry to see you here. I presume you have been unfortunate in marriage, as I have been?"

"I have certainly been unfortunate."

Mrs. Gertrude Smith and Mrs. Margaret Jones were at least fortunate in possessing very common names—in this that they were better able to lose themselves in a place where all transient residents were known to be acquiring citizenship that would enable them to get divorces. The two women compared notes as follows:

Mrs. Smith had soon after leaving college met a man who seemed to her to be perfection. He was affable, intelligent and prominent as a man. He had deferred to her in everything until they were married; then he had changed. Where before he had assured her that her will was law with him, no sooner had they returned from the honeymoon than he opposed her in everything. Unreasonable was no word for it. She had studied his comfort in every way she could think of. If there was any dainty food he liked she had taken pains to provide it for the table. If he came home worn with business she would get him out to a theater.

"I PROPOSE THAT WE MAKE UP AND MARRY AGAIN."

For these attentions she expected some return. Her sister, Mabel, poor girl, had no home, and the wife wished to have her with her. But Mabel irritated the husband, and he had declared that she should not come there again when he was at home. Then there was—

At this point Mrs. Jones broke in. "You have described my husband exactly, only with us it is a case of mother-in-law, and my husband is as unreasonable as yours, though our difficulty is the reverse of yours. He insists on having his mother live with us. True, she has no home and is very lonely, and my husband is her only child living. I will give her credit for being cheerful, and she doesn't interfere with me at all. But I married her son and not her, and I will not be imposed upon by having her with me day in and day out."

Thus did these much abused women pour their troubles into each other's ears, neither of them realizing that she was telling a story as old as the rite of marriage itself. But neither of them confessed the real reason why she had given up trying to get on under the matrimonial yoke. The reasons why that yoke was unpleasant were plentiful, but the one main reason why they had decided to throw it off was not mentioned by either. When Mrs. Smith had asked Mrs. Jones if she thought she would ever marry again after having secured her divorce she had thrown up her hands, exclaiming:

"Heavens, no! Once is enough for me."

And Mrs. Jones declared that if she was ever freed from her present husband she would never take another.

But as time passed a constant companionship brought confidences. Mrs. Smith one day, while cataloguing her husband's different methods of making her miserable, incidentally spoke of a man who was his very opposite in his treatment of women. She had been thrown with him intimately and had always found him ready to give way to her in all those little matters in which a woman expects a man to humor her. Indeed, though this gentleman was middle aged, he was as deferential as one of twenty, and when an older man gave way to a woman it was to be assumed that he would keep up his deference in the married state.

"It is singular," said Mrs. Jones, "how our cases agree. I, too, have met just such a man as you describe—not one of those men whose deference is accompanied by a flourish that reveals its insincerity, but there is something genuine that speaks for itself. You have asked me, dear, if I will marry again in case I get my divorce. I will make one exception among all the men of the world. If the one I speak of should ask me I will not say that I would refuse him."

Upon this confession Mrs. Smith let out a little more that she had not yet revealed. She confessed that her own particular friend had dared to make love to her before her separation and that she had repelled him, whereupon he seemed broken hearted. If her present bonds were severed and she could listen to this other love without shame she was not sure but that she might yield.

Beyond this the confidence did not extend. Perhaps had the ladies been a dozen years younger each might have told the other the name and home of her admirer and as much else about him as she could call up. But at thirty-two one is not so confidential as at twenty. Besides, there was a special reason why neither cared to tell too much. Each of these men, so deferential to the wishes of the woman he admired, had a wife of whom he was trying to get rid, or, if this is stating the case too strongly, his wife was trying to get rid of him.

There was one comfort in this heart matter which pertained to both of these ladies. Neither had any children. There were no innocents to be wrung by parental infelicities. The law being elastic, each was on the way to prove that she had married a bad man and had been made unhappy and she would be able to marry a good man, who would be a blessing to her. What was to become of these two unworthy men neither wife considered.

It is a long road that has no end, and both these ladies at last found themselves free from one matrimonial yoke and delighted at the prospect of taking on another. Mrs. Smith's residence in the west became unnecessary a month earlier than Mrs. Jones', and she departed for the east. By this time the bosom friendship of their younger days had blossomed again, and each had admitted to the other that as soon as the knot was untied she proposed to have a clergyman—if one could be found—to tie another one. Before Mrs. Smith's departure it had been agreed between the two that she should wait for her friend and that they should be married at the same time.

During the next month's separation letters passed between them. Mrs. Smith writing of the subjection of her fiance to her slightest whim and Mrs. Jones chafing under the delay in her own coming to the same happiness. And it is worthy of mention that the two men who were casting off their partners to step into a blessed felicity with these two women were also looking forward to their own weddings.

A few days after Mrs. Jones obtained her decree she arrived in the city of New York and the same evening met her friend Mrs. Smith in a private room at a fashionable restaurant. The ladies met for the purpose of dining together, and each had invited her fiance to be of the party.

The ladies met some time before the dinner hour and had a good, long chat, each congratulating the other on her freedom from a brute and her approaching marriage with a prince of chivalry. The princes arrived simultaneously, were taken up to the dinner room in the same elevator and were ushered into the presence of their fiancees at the same moment, the attendant announcing:

"Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones!"

There was consternation on the face of each and every one of the four. Mrs. Smith's fiance was Mr. Jones, and Mrs. Jones' fiance was Mr. Smith. It seemed for a time that the embarrassment would be unconquerable and that the only way out of the contretemps was for the party to scatter. Mr. Smith, addressing his recent wife, finally said:

"My dear, please explain."

Mrs. Smith pointed to Mrs. Jones for the desired explanation, but Mrs. Jones was unequal to the task. Mr. Jones came to the front.

"My friends," he said, "it is evident that we men have swapped wives and you wives have swapped husbands. Mr. Smith, I have heard what a terrible fellow you are to live with, and I have no doubt you have heard what a terrible fellow I am to live with. My opinion is that none of us are going to better ourselves by the change. Madge, I propose that we make up and get married again."

"I concur," said Mr. Smith, "with the gentleman's statement, and I make you, Gertrude, a similar offer."

The two divorced women looked at each other. A suspicion of a smile came upon Mrs. Jones' lips. Mrs. Smith's lips caught it, and it broadened into a laugh.

"Come, ladies," said Mr. Jones; "let us have dinner. I have been hungry for a new love. I am now hungry for lobster."

"And I," said Mr. Smith, "for terrapin."

The party sat down to dinner and consumed many choice viands, washed down with several bottles of champagne. At the end of it a clergyman was called in, who remarried each woman to her own husband, and each couple departed for its own home, satisfied that all is not gold that glitters and that it is better to bear the ills we have than to fly to others we know not of.

BLUE OSTRICH BOA.

Ostrich is to be one of the fashionable trimmings for hats. Likewise it will be used in the fall for many other decorative purposes. One of these ways is suggested by the illustration which shows a dainty little boa of blue ostrich with blue ribbon shaped ornaments and streamers at the ends. This little boa is secured by concealed snap fasteners.

CONVENIENT DARNING OUTFITS

Three Tiered Bag and Well Fitted Basket For the Mender or Fancy Worker.

It is not too early to begin planning for Christmas. The two useful little articles illustrated here would make splendid gifts for the thrifty housewife who has mending to do or for the maid or matron who loves fancy work. The bag shown above is fashioned of squares of cretonne. Two of the squares are lined with plain material and stitched together at the edges. Three of these sections are then fastened together by cutting out the centers, fastening them there and attaching a ribbon covered embroidery hoop to the top opening. Little pockets may be attached to the compartments inside the bag for the accommodation of sewing or fancy work materials. There is of course a ribbon hanger attached to the bag, by means of which it may be conveniently carried about.

CRETONNE BAG AND BASKET.

The little basket shown is an imported darning basket, which is lined with flowered cretonne and provided with all the implements required for darning successfully. These include a darning egg and emory pincushion, reels of darning silk and cotton and wool and a pocket for needles. The basket might be duplicated in raffia or by any one who has skill in basket making, or it may be purchased ready made and, after being lined with cretonne, fitted up with the required articles.

Restoring Colors In Carpets.

If a carpet is almost all wool the color may be brightened or wholly restored if washed with a pail of water containing three gills of ox gall. If necessary to use fresh ox gall procure it at the butcher's, cut it into small pieces, cover with warm water and allow it to soak for several hours. Dilute the liquid and wipe the carpet off with it. It makes a lather and should be rinsed off with clear water.

Neutralizing a Shock.

If you know that you are going to hear a loud sound it is well to open the mouth, as the shock will then be neutralized. Noises in the ears are most annoying and sometimes resist all treatment. They are often associated with deafness and should therefore receive due attention.

When Preparing Eggs For Cooking.

Often when separating the white from the yolk of an egg the yolk becomes broken and falls into the white. Dip a cloth in warm water, wring it dry and touch the yolk with a corner of it, when the latter will adhere to the cloth and may easily be removed.

The Mark Master degree was exemplified by the officers of St. Stephens chapter, music during the exemplification being by the Beethoven quartette.

CHARLES F. ADAMS 2d.
An Ex-Commodore.

RECEPTION

sure his hearers that it was a warm blooded institution. Its victories began with the old "America" and since that time its flag has been carried around the world and in every sea, and on every expedition of the United States, and its members are real seamen. It stood for the defense of the American cup in the most successful and honorable way. He could assure his hearers that its attitude had always been just and honorable, although some times perhaps they do not tell all the things that actuate them. It is just because they do not wish to rush into newspapers with a lot of explanations. This year some half a dozen members built a boat and paid for it out of their own pockets, and it is fair to say that no six men ever before undertook such an enterprise. It was a very fine spirit that they had shown and never was any one backed by better friends than they have been. Of course there were some things about the Resolute which he could not tell.

Continuing, he said that he had been looking over the Quincy club book and was surprised to see he was getting to be the old man of the club. It was rather interesting to look back forty years and recall the happy memories of those days. It is those old days that made the club worth while. Its history has been most creditable and honorable. We have carried our flag honorably and decently and the club has prospered. It is because the Quincy Yacht club has stood for decency, sportsmanship and good fellowship that we are here tonight.

COMMODORE BARNARD.

Commodore Barnard of the Hingham club was introduced as the commodore of the only floating club in the bay. He said that wherever the English language was spoken there was never a fairer sportsman than Charlie Adams. He was a little sad that the weather the past season had not been as he would have had it, but he considered all good sportsmen optimists. A yachtsman has to know a great deal about spars and finance and that is what makes it interesting. The great secret is the efforts that yachtsmen are always making to do a little better the next year. Yachting broadens and enlightens us and we are better men because of our experience in the yachting game.

IRA M. WHITTEMORE,

W. L. Carleton said that he had always admired the Cat class of the Quincy club and had wondered how the club maintained the interest in the class which it did. It hardly seemed possible that the racing season had closed and that the annual rendezvous comes next Sunday.

COMMODORE TAYLOR.

Commodore Taylor brought the greetings of the Wollaston club and Commodore Drew of the Squantum club told how he had captured the Bermuda cup.

SECRETARY CAMPBELL.

Secretary H. W. Campbell said he was sorry that President Harland was not present. The racing season had been a very successful one and the Quincy club as usual had come to the front with a good race. This was the second time that the Bermuda cup had come to a Quincy club and he was always pleased to see the cup change hands as it kept up the interest.

PRIZES PRESENTED.

Ex-Commodore Robbins was then presented with the cock-of-the-walk pennant of the Quincy club for the season and said there had been a lot of fun the past season. It had been clean racing and good sport.

When ex-Commodore Frank E. Dawes of the Wollaston club was presented with a thermos bottle as the special prize he said that it was not his fault that the Thordis had won. He had offered to sell her to any member of the club but no one seemed to want her so he supposed that he would have to keep on winning the prizes.

When ex-Commodore Frank F. Crane of the Iris was presented with two white flags meaning he had won third position in two races he said that he did not expect to get anything this year. He could however tell Mr. Carleton the secret of the continued interest in the cat class. It was because they raced all summer in Quincy bay and raced all winter in his back office and in this winter's racing he would get some firsts.

A. W. Findlay of the Dorchen II, when presented with his trophy said he wondered if the members appreciated the honor that had been bestowed upon the Quincy club when ex-Commodore dams was selected to sail the Resolute. He was the truest sportsman that ever sailed in Massachusetts bay or any other bay. He knew that the example that he had set for true sportsmanship had helped him and he believed that many others had been benefitted by the manly quality he had shown. Capt. Findlay also spoke of the races in the Great Lakes where the Dorchin II had won the pennant in the 18-foot class.

Ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore made a few rambling remarks in receiving his bunch of flags but when asked how he did it, knowingly shook his head and said nothing.

All of the skippers were supposed to make some reply on receiving their pennants and most of them did briefly reply.

COMPLIMENTS.

At the close of the presentation of the season's trophies Commodore Crane thanked the members for their attendance and for the many kindnesses they had shown him during the past season. He also spoke of the fine board of judges which he had the past season whom he could not thank enough. He had been particularly fortunate in securing such a board as it was no easy position, and he fully appreciated their work. He also expressed his thanks to the chorus.

This closed the evening's program and as the gathering were about to separate a vote of thanks and three cheers loud and long were given ex-Commodore Adams.

The complete list of prizes awarded were as follows:

SPECIAL PRIZES.

Binnacle—Rear Commodore C. W. Laing.

Thermos bottle—Frank E. Dawes.

Ships clock—Fleet Captain W. S. Hibbard.

Life preserver—G. P. Rupert

Life preserver—Prince H. Tirrell.

These were the prizes for the Marblehead run.

Th club pennants of blue, red and white for first, second and third positions were awarded to the following captains. Some received an assortment of colors while others only received one color, but in every case the captain received more than one pennant.

Ex-Commodore Frank F. Crane, Vice Commodore Edgar W. Emery, ex-Commodore Herbert W. Robbins ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore, C. V Nickerson, A. W. Findlay, Ralph Winslow, Frank E. Dawes, A. J. Shay, Jr., G. W. Sargent, A. H. Acorn, E. M. Morse, John Kitson, W. W. Arnold, W. S. Hibbard, G. B. Brannan, C. W. Laing, G. P. Rupert and Hollis Burgess.

TWO HUNDRED DOLLAR FINE

Autoists in Accidents Should Not Run Away

Wilfred G. Shrigley of 224 Marlboro street, Boston was fined $200 on two complaints in the District court by Judge Avery this morning.

Shrigley was arraigned for operating a machine so as to endanger the lives and safety of the public, and also for causing injury to persons and property and going away without making himself known. He withdrew pleas of not guilty and entered pleas of guilty in each case.

Shrigley's arrest followed an auto accident on Bridge street, North Weymouth, about midnight, July 10, when the machine of John Kenworthy of Cohasset was tipped over in a collision with another auto. The members of that party ran away, and according to Kenworthy took the number plates with them. He lifted the seat and found the registration card tacked underneath. The Massachusetts Highway Commission was represented by A. L. Olsson, its attorney, and the defendant by former Senator George L. Barnes of Weymouth.

The Sue Rice studio in the new Kincaide block, formally opened to the public on Wednesday, is conducted by one of the best known photographers in New England, and incidently, a former resident of this city.

During a ramble about this morning, the Daily Ledger reporter, attracted by the inviting display of high class photos in the studio window, acted solely on impulse and entered to receive a warm welcome from Miss Rice. At the time she was seated at a writing table examing a choice assortment of new mounts and a short distance away, Miss Irene Potterton of Wollaston, her assistant was arranging articles in the Womens exchange to be conducted in connection with the studio work.

Miss Rice has been a photographer for nearly 15 years and during that time has been associated with Sarony and Marcelle, recognized peers in the photographic world.

Her choice of Quincy was at the instigation of friends who were aware of her strong personality and genius and unusual success in the taking childrens photos. Her studio, just in the rear of her office, she has arranged so that the lights can be manipulated and instantaneous photos taken. Just to the right is the developing room and between both is the "dark room" where a photographers secrets are concealed from the gaze of the uninitated.

Miss Rice will make her home in this city and has been accorded a warm reception since her arrival. Not the least of her interesting work is her window display, the artistic arrangement of which is most inviting.

BRIDGE FIRE.

The alarm from Box 61 at 1.17 this noon was for a fire on the under side of the bridge over the railroad tracks on Squantum street. The fire probably started from sparks from a passing locomotive. The loss will not be heavy.

All Confident That This Is a Republican Year

The annual outing of the Ward One Republican committee at Houghs Neck Thursday evening proved to have been one of the best meetings of the kind ever held in this city. Not only was there a large attendance of Republicans, but the occasion was graced by fourteen of the candidates for offices who will come before the voters at the State primaries on Sept. 22.

It was a meting where old political war horses mingled with young warriors, and rival candidates rubbed elbows, just as though all the world was at peace. That there was no war in Europe and that a great battle of ballots here in Massachusetts was not near at hand.

William Norteman served the dinner. It was of the shore variety and one of the best any man ever had placed before him. There was of course chowder, steamed and fried clams, fried cod, lobster, chicken salad, with usual dishes of celery, potatoes, tomatoes, lettuce and cucumbers, winding up with frozen pudding and coffee.

John D. Mackay, chairman of the School Committee, was the toastmaster, a position which he filled with dignity.

Grafton D. Cushing, one of the candidates for Lieutenant Governor, was first introduced as he was obliged to leave early to attend another meeting in Brockton. He spoke briefly of some of the potent issues brought on by the war, which had brought out the fact that America was not self-sustaining. This was a deplorable condition. With the Republicans in power the country would be self-sustaining and ready to meet any emergency. It is very clear Protection is needed to develop industries.

A letter expressing his regret at being unable to be present was read from Samuel W. McCall, the candidate for Governor, who is campaigning in Portland, Me.

Col. A. H. Goetting, another candidate for Lieutenant Governor spoke briefly in a witty manner. This was

BURGLARY AT WOLLASTON

The imprint of a rubber sole in the soft lawn is the only clue uncovered so far in the unraveling of the afternoon burglary at the residence of H. R. Terhune, 120 Fenno street, on Thursday. The breaking and entering was done during the absence of the family and was discovered on their return about 10 o'clock. Entrance was gained by forcing a window, seven feet above the ground, presumably by standing on a ladder. The house was not thoroughly ransacked but articles of value were taken in addition to $57 in bills and some silver, cigars and cigarettes. The burglary was reported to police headquarters by Sergt. John T. Larkin.

GILLETT---MONK WEDDING

Bride Was Formerly a School Teacher of Quincy

A quiet home wedding of interest to South Braintree people took place Thursday evening when Miss Louis Carlton Monk, the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Monk of 342 Washington street was united in marriage to Joseph Closson Gillett of Montpelier, Vermont, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George C. Gillett of Rumney, N. H.

The ceremony was performed at the bride's home at 8 o'clock by Rev. Tyler E. Gale, pastor of the South Congregational church, and was witnessed by only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties.

Mr. and Mrs. Gillett will reside at 6 Tracy street, Montpelier, where they will be at home after December first.

Mrs. Gillett is one of the best known and most popular young ladies of South Braintree. She is a graduate of the Bridgewater Normal school, and before her marriage was a teacher in the public schools of Quincy, going later to Dedham where she has been teaching for the past two years.

Mr. Gillett has many friends in Braintree, and is now located in Montpelier where he holds a responsible position with the Lillie Granite Co., of that city.

HAS QUINCY A RUTH AMBROSE?

Wonderful Work of Young Lady in Transforming Dead Town to Live City

Secured Large Subscriptions Which Put Town on the Map

Before the Board of Trade hold their open meeting every member should see the attraction at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston. It is not often that the Daily Ledger gives Boston theatres a complimentary reader, but "Along Came Ruth" is a Board of Trade play, and is in line with the Daily Ledger campaign to boost QUINCY. It shows the wonderful work one person can do to transform a dead town into a live city. The play is sure to encourage people to boost their own town or city, and with 350 boosters or even 100 boosters, QUINCY will boom as never before.

The Ledger would not for a moment compare QUINCY with Oldport, Maine, for QUINCY has been a boom city ever since it obtained a charter in 1888. QUINCY has in this time increased in population from 12,000 to nearly 40,000; in valuation from less than $10,000,000 to over $40,000,000; in voters from 2,7000 to 6,700; in school children, from 3,500 to 7,000; from eight wooden school buildings to 14 up-to-date brick school houses, several with halls. And these comparisons might be extended to churches, stores, places of amusement, fraternal organizations, newspapers, womens clubs, public improvements, etc, etc.

But all the QUINCY people do not realize all that has been accomplished Miss Ruth Ambrose is the representative of the Board of Trade who transformed Oldport. Possibly it is a young lady that the QUINCY Board of Trade needs for a secretary, to make things hum here. Miss Ambrose will show her how to raise a fund to encourage industries to make QUINCY beautiful. Not a few hundred dollars, but several thousand dollars.

"The Girl of the Golden West" has been applied to Miss Mildred Huston since her months visit to Montana and the enthusiasm which she imbibed in the West might make her a second "Ruth Ambrose," and as secretary of the Board of Trade, give the Board a greater impetus.

Pshaw! Let's think about oysters

J. P. Morgan says the financial situation is improving, and he knows.

Canada has joined the millions for defense but not one cent for tribute propaganda.

Now they're going to call a boycott on eggs so's to keep the price down to 30 cents. That's what some of them look like.

Every special war correspondent has been supplied with an inexhaustible armory of personal pronouns.

You have noticed, of course, that a battle doesn't always go the way you want it to go.

FRUIT TRANSPORTATION.

One of the common sights at this time of year in rural sections, is the large amount of fruits and vegetables that go to waste nearly every year. In apple producing neighborhoods, in particular, it is common to see the ground strewed with fruit that has very considerable value. Similarly in other products, if there is a large crop or if the quality is a little off, it proves unprofitable to market the whole supply.

It seems pitiful to see a barrel of apples beginning to rot under a tree in the country, while only a hundred miles away there are poor people who can afford no fruit to brighten up their meager table.

Sometimes the trouble is the lack of farm help. More often it is simply a breakdown of our over-elaborate methods of distribution. Yet middlemen's charges are not ordinarily a very heavy percentage. And not many retail provision dealers are getting rich fast.

The splitting up of retail trade into too many small units increases the cost of distribution. If there are 20 provision stores in a town of 10,000 people, many of them must be small affairs, in which overhead charges and clerk hire are relatively large. Having but a narrow income, the smaller merchants often lack the courage to spend enough in advertising so that the public can know what they have to sell. Supplying 20 small stores involves an enormous amount of work, for the wholesalers to solicit and fill all these little orders.

The barrel of second grade apples that is worth nothing as it lies under the trees in the country, is probably worth from one to two dollars in the city. Whether through the parcel post, open air markets, supply depots, or other methods, American enterprise must find some more direct access from producer to consumer.

GERMANS NOT GIVEN TIME FOR A HALT

Driven Back Thirty-Seven Miles Since Great Battle Begun

BRITISH MAIN FORCE CROSSES THE MARNE

Invaders Fail to Dislodge French Gunners—Kaiser's Troops Steadily Forced Over Ground They Had Won After Desperate Battling—Retreat of Right Wing Approaching Perilously Near Centre—French Slowly Throwing Troops Forward Toward Alsace—What May Prove to Be Decisive Battle Is Still Raging—Belgians Assume Offensive and Drive Germans Back to Louvain

London, Sept. 11.—Further out of range of the great guns of Paris retreated the German right Thursday.

No time to halt and gather breath was given the exhausted enemy. The Germans are now twelve miles behind their positions of Wednesday, thirty-seven miles in the rear of the places that they held when the great battle that is still raging was begun.

The British main force had no trouble in crossing the Marne, an indication that the German right was either too weakened for effective resistance or that the lines of communication were so demoralized by the retreat that it was impossible for the army to halt. It is probable that both reasons may have had something to do with the speed of the kaiser's columns.

In the centre of the great battle lines the violent and persistent charges of the enemy were unable to dislodge the French gunners from the heights where they had so placed their artillery that the charges seemed almost suicidal.

Prussian Guard Repulsed

It is here that the Germans have massed their greatest strength, summoning to their aid thousands of troops from the severely harassed right wing, the cavalry of which enjoyed a fleeting but irritating glimpse of the suburbs of Paris.

The famous Prussian Guard, eager to retrieve the laurels lost by the invaders during the past four days, charged brilliantly, but even this force, the flower of the German army, was unable to pierce the French lines.

The only place where the Germans made any gains were on the road leading to Nancy, where the kaiser is personally spurring on his troops. This advantage was neutralized by a corresponding French advance into the forest of Champenoux.

French Again In Alsace

Further south, the withdrawal of German and Austrian troops to try to hold back the great Russian tidal wave resulted in a movement of the French into Alsatian territory, from which they were dislodged early in the war. It now seems probable that Mulhausen may again fly the tricolor, the third time within little more than a month.

The fighting Thursday between the French and British on the left wing of the allies against the much depleted ranks of the enemy was not so intensely bitter as it has been in the last few days. The French were able to move ahead without much opposition, and the British, although the Germans turned again and again in their retreat, drove on more rapidly even than they retreated last week.

Nowhere is the feeling among the allies so cheerful as on this left wing. The troops, although realizing that they had been beaten back by superior numbers, never relished the constant necessity of holding positions only long enough to protect a further retreat. Now that they have the Germans in the same position they can hardly be restrained by their officers. Fatigue seems to have been banished and the men are eager to charge all day long.

Gain of Twelve Miles

Thursday the British dashed ahead after the retreating Germans until they had gained twelve miles over Wednesday's battleground. Places that figured in the news of last week are beginning to come back into the dispatches as the Germans are forced back over the ground that they had won after such desperate battling. The British reached La Ferte-sous-Jouarre, Charly and Chateau Thierry.

The invaders, in this part of the great battleground, appear to be making almost frantic efforts to reach Rheims and Epernay. The German centre is also, but much more slowly, moving toward Rheims, so that it seems possible that the contraction of the lines may result in a massing of hundreds of thousands of soldiers at Rheims. Here the Germans will hold a far better position for battling, although the advantage in higher ground will hardly compensate for the demoralization that appears to be creeping insidiously into the German right wing.

Germans Sacrifice Thousands

The battle raged about Vitry-le-Francois Thursday, in the centre of the battleground, almost without any appreciable change in the situation.

MINISTER VON JAGOW.

Split With Kaiser Is Said to Have Given Rise To Resignation Rumors.

In this it must be regarded as a French success, as the Germans have sacrificed thousands of men in trying to drive the French from the commanding heights. The retreat of the German right wing is now approaching perilously near the centre, and if it continues the invading forces about Vitry must fall back to Rheims to protect their flank from attack.

The Germans were able to hold their positions in the heavily wooded Argonne forest. From Vitry to Chateau Thierry the fighting was almost continuous along a battle line of nearly fifty miles. The heaviest charges, however, were witnessed between Vitry and Mailly, an extent of less than twenty miles. Here, it is believed, the Prussian Guard made their charges. But the thunderous assault which has been so spectacular a feature of German maneuvers during times of peace did not prove so effective against French guns.

French Lines Broken

Driving ahead out of Cheateau Salins, in German Lorraine, the forces that have hitherto been unable to make headway, even under the eye of the kaiser, succeeded in breaking through the French lines and came nearer to the unfortified city of Nancy, where the French resistance has been surprisingly sturdy. An unofficial report, however, stated that the Germans had evacuated Luneville Sept. 6. It is possible that the movement of Thursday succeeded in recapturing the town, which is fifteen miles away from Nancy.

A few miles further south, however, the French retaliated by gaining practically the same advantage in the forest of Shampenoux, so that the German movement in this district is still believed to be checked.

The French official statement concludes with the remark that the situation in the Vosges and Alsace remains unchanged, but from unofficial sources that are believed to be credible, it is inferred that the French are slowly throwing forward a considerable force of troops.

Invaders' Forces Withdrawn

The Austrian and German forces held opposite the great French forts from Epinal to Belfort are thought to have been sent in great numbers to aid the Austrians and Germans in the east. Only garrisons, left to hold a French advance, are supposed to be in the German fortified places near the frontier. A French offensive against Alsace is not expected until the battle is fully decided in France, but it is probable that small bodies will be sent forward in order to revive the drooping spirits of the Alsatians, who sympathize with the French.

Reports are current that the Germans have been sending men by thousands to the east from all of their western armies, but the official statements do not bear out the inference except in the region of Alsace and the Vosges.

The German right wing has been weakened, but merely, it appears, to strengthen the centre. From the north of France, overrun with Germans a week ago, and from Belgium, many thousands of troops are reported to have been sent to Rheims and Chalons-sur-Marne and thence to the front near Vitry.

Fighting In Belgium

The weakening of the forces of the invaders in Belgium has again caused renewed fighting there. The little army cooped up in Antwerp has been winning back much of its lost territory. Aerschot was occupied, the small German garrison having been driven out.

It is said that the Antwerp forces struck heavily and suddenly at the invaders camped not far from the city and drove them back to ruined Louvain. Further toward the south a Belgian retreat at Cordeghem is officially made known at Berlin.

FAMOUS FOR ITS LINENS

Breslau, Now In Danger, Is Prussia's Second Largest City

Breslau, which late dispatches declare is in imminent danger of capture by Russian troops, is the capital of Silesia, about 190 miles southeast of Berlin. This city is the great emporium for the linens of Silesia and the greatest mart for wool in Germany.

It has extensive railway and other machine shops, iron foundries, spinning mills, and manufactures furniture, shoes, spirits, confectionery and chemicals. After Berlin, this city is the largest in Prussia, having a population of about 450,000.

PRAYERS FOR PEACE

Urged In the First Official Utterance of Pope Benedict

Pope Benedict XV. issued an encyclical on the war which is his first official utterance since his election. The encyclical appeals to all Roman Catholics to join with him in sorrow for the war and in his prayers for the cessation of the scourge of God's anger at the sad spectacle.

The pope exhorts the various governments to set an example of moderation and to strive for the return of peace. The pope says, in conclusion, that this first utterance of his since mounting the papal throne is a repetition of the wish of his predecessor, Pope Pius X.

AGREE TO PEACE PACTS

American Negotiations With Four Great Nations Are Completed

Washington, Sept. 11.—In the midst of the European war, Great Britain, France, Spain and China have agreed to sign peace commission treaties with the United States. One effect of the new convention would be to prevent the United States from being drawn suddenly into the conflict.

Germany, Russia and Japan have signified their acceptance of the principle of these treaties, though negotiations have not advanced to the point of drafting conventions. Similar agreements with Turkey and Greece are almost ready for signature.

Mrs. Carman had been previously indicted for manslaughter.

Mrs. Carman, who had been at liberty under $15,000 bail, was brought to Mineola from Freeport in anticipation that such an indictment would be returned. She was arraigned immediately and committed without bail for trial.

ARGUMENTS IN VAUGHN CASE

Lawyers Pinkham and McAnarney Heard Today

Judge Avery heard the closing arguments in the Vaughn case today and reserved a decision for a few days. He made no comment in connection with this announcement.

The burden of proof being on the petitioners, Mr. Pinkham closed his case first. The attitude of the attorneys were a decided contrast, Mr. Pinkham presenting a quiet but firm review of his case, while J. J. McAnarney, counsel for the deposed warden who seeks reinstatement, bordered on the sensational.

Counsel McAnarney spoke of flim flam methods and sleight of hand performances, pointing out what he claimed was a difference in testimony by witnesses, and denounced the removal by saying it was to pay a political debt under the clothing of the Civil Service statute.

Mr. Pinkham consumed about 35 minutes while Mr. McAnarney addressed the court for nearly two hours. Spectators were conspicuous by their absence.

Mr. Pinkham's argument in brief was as follows:

"The review comes before your honor on petition of Mr. Vaughn under the statute of 1911. The petitioner must show we have acted in bad faith. I submit there was not one iota of evidence to show there was bad faith.

"You have the direct statement of the mayor and overseer that the removal was made at his advice. You will find it was done with the direct approval of Dr. Burke formerly secretary of the Board of Health who knew the circumstances.

"Complaint's were made to the overseer by people outside and at the almshouses. There is not the slightest evidence of political action in the removal.

Mr. Vaughn being a Civil service employee acted within his rights when he didn't resign. It is not Mr. Greens of Mr. Vaughns fault. Court proceeding has nothing to do with good faith. What has happened is only what could have happened."

Judge Avery asked Mr. Pinkham what he thought proper cause was.

Mr. Pinkham said, "Proper cause would be the betterment of the service at the almshouse. The warden is in charge of the unfortunates of the city. It is not a right he himself enjoys, being boarded at the expense of the city, furnished with a home and salary. His position is one which he holds for to maintain the comfort and the discipline of the inmates and the economical administration of the cities poor.

"If he is not doing that as sufficiently as it might be done and ought to be done by others,—that in itself in my judgment is proper cause for having him changed.

"The city of Quincy wants the inmates to be supported in reasonable comfort and so far as possible for people in that situation to have a contended and happy frame of mind and wants that to be a place, not as the people of the city are to look to it as a place of horror to which they may sometime in the future be compelled to resort but as a home to which when misfortune come, the citizens can go and be assured of reasonable comfort and contentment.

"That is my ideal of what the almshouse should be. That is how the officials of the city of Quincy want it to be and that in my judgement is what it has not been under the administration of Mr. Vaughn.

We do not have to show a specific act of cruelty. A man who is temperamentally unfit to hold the position of warden is unfit to hold it.

Our testimony showed a change was necessary, that he himself had engaged and was the aggressor in an actual fight with another employee of the city. Disregarding who was right and wrong, a man who has such temper should not be employed by the city.

"Mr. Pinkham referred to these incidents as a beautiful spectacle, of discipline to put before the inmates, a piteous spectacle for the citizens to observe. In his manner of his address to inmates testified to by people and inmates, he was loud and abusive, profanity not invariably mixed with it, and when in temper which was a usual way of enforcing orders of inmates.

"Mr. Pinkham discussed at length the treatment of the Deady boy, stating he told the truth. Mr. Vaughn denied it, he said, but a child of eleven

UNIVERSALIST CHURCH.

The Universalist church opens on Sunday with afternoon services as last year. Rev. Merrill C. Ward the pastor will speak on" Social Ideals." Mrs. Mary Hastings Slade and John E. Greene will be the soloists. After a long vacation, Sunday should be a joyous reunion day of pastor and people. Sunday school as usual will be at 2 o'clock with the efficient superintendent E. B. Spooner in charge. The Y. P. C. U. will also resume its services on Sunday.

VAUGHN CASE

does not go home crying without knowing what he went for and tell such a story unless it is the truth and he does not appear here and tell your honor a lie. And the mother told the fact as they occurred. That fact is sufficient for having a change in the warden of the almshouse.

"So far as order is concerned we find on direct statement of Mr. Green and Mayor Miller that these peopl said they would not take orders from such a man. I will not use the language they used. It was absolutely a display of ungovernable temper, unsubordination to the superior officer and they would not take orders from him.

"Mr. Pinkham then spoke of the lack of management and characterized the incident where he put the hay out in the weather to get some attention as childish, deliberately trying to make another department do something and spoiling city property in doing it.

"Mr. Vaughn allowed the impression to prevail that Mr. Green was deliberately stealing provisions and that they put up the orders. In his duty he did take samples, the result was a saving to the city.

"The women inmates of the almshouse tell the same story about Mrs. Vaughn. I have no doubt everything was clean and neat but she has a temperament as unfit as her husband. When in temper she talked to the old and unfortunate women obliged to be there and is that a treatment which the city wants to continue?

"The effect of your decision will be is it wise to have Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn put back over the inmates?

"The Civil Service laws never were intended and never should be so construed as to keep a man in a position to the detriment of the department and people over whom he is placed. They are for the protection of the community and not of the individual.

"We have shown him guilty of every one of these five charges. The only thing your honor should do under the statute is to sustain the finding of the officer in the removal unless your honor can find it was bad faith or without proper cause and the burden is entirely on the petitoner."

The arguments of Mr. McAnarney were in brief.

The removal of William J. Vaughn as warden of the Quincy Almshouse is sought by reason of his failure to properly conduct the affairs of that institution as indicated under the following five specifications of charges preferred against him, to wit:

1. "Incompetency and inefficiency on your part in the performance of your duties."
2. "That you have failed to carry out the reasonable orders and directions of the Overseer of the Poor."
3. "That you have not maintained discipline at the almshouse."
4. "That in your dealings with the inmates and others at the almshouse you have used profane and abusive language."
5. "That you have ill-treated inmates."

The statute of 1911 provides that this court "shall review the action of the officer who removed Mr. Vaughn and hear the witnesses and shall affirm said order unless it shall appear that said order was made by said officer without proper cause or in bad faith, in which case said order shall be reversed and the petitioner reinstated in his office."

In connection with the above language it is contended by the petitioner in these proceedings that this court only reviews the act of removal up to the time when the order of removal was given by Mr. Green, the Overseer of the Poor, to Mr . Vaughn, while I claim that on behalf of the respondent that it is incumbent on this court to review beyond the order of removal and to review the hearing that took place at city hall, and all act or acts connected therewith on the question of the "bad faith" as used in the above statute. In this connection I desire to call to your Honor's attention the language of Chief Justice Rugg in the case of Driscoll V. Mayor of Somerville, the decision being given Jan. 29, 1913.

Taking up the specifications in order: 1—"Incompetency and inefficiency on your part in the performance of your duties." There has not been one particle of evidence offered of incompetency or inefficiency, and when it is taken into consideration that these institutions are being closely examined, and the management thereof carefully inspected several times each year by the State atuhorities, and that this investigation has taken a range of nine years, it is indeed significant that on this most important charge not one particle of evidence is offered.

2—"That you have failed to carry out the reasonable orders and directions of the Overseer of the Poor." The only evidence offered under this specification is that Mr. Green told an inmate named Hobart that he wanted the canned goods pushed back to the wall, as they were placed on the shelves. This somewhat garrulous witness testified that the shelves were from six to eight inches deep. He says that Mr. Vaughn wanted him to place the cans along on the centre or front of the shelves, ignoring Mr. Green's request. Now this is the only evidence introduced under the above terrific charge, and this is denied by Mr. Vaughn in that Hobart did not explain to him the request as made by Mr. Green, and a complete answer to the situation would be that Mr. Green should have given his orders to the superintendent Vaughn and not to the inmate Hobart.

3.—"That you have not maintained discipline at the Almshouse." While many witnesses have testified, no witness has said anything that by any stretch of reasoning could be construed as supporting this allegation, in fact, the argument that might be deduced from some evidence was that he maintained too much discipline to suit the somewhat positive ideas of some of the inmates.

4.—"That in your dealings with the inmates and others at the almshouse you have used profane and abusive language." It is under this specification that the prosecution herein has offered substantially all its evidence. In this connection I desire to recall to your Honor that the uncontradicted evidence is that there were about twenty-eight inmates at the almshouse at the time of Mr. Vaughn's removal; that it is fair to assume that all of those inmates who could give evidence against Mr. Vaughn were called by the petitioner. It now appears that eleven inmates have testified before your Honor against Mr. Vaughn. It can therefore be assumed that seventeen inmates at the almshouse are not able to offer any evidence against Mr. Vaughn to support this charge, and of the eleven who are called several while showing by their evidence an effort to exaggerate conditions and alleged grievances, when put to the test state that they never heard Mr. or Mrs. Vaughn use profane language.

Mr. McAnarney then reviews the evidence of the witnesses.

For the time being, I pass over the last specification and deal with the attitude of the administration toward Mr. Vaughn, as bearing on the question of "bad faith." It appears that the first visit by His Honor, the Mayor, to the almshouse, (and he stated that he went down to look around and see what kind of a place they run) was two days after he had notified Mr. Vaughn to vacate and that his services would not be required. In a general way His Honor attempted to show that he had by inquiries made some investigation, but cross examination developed this situation, that the only persons he had talked with about the affair at the almshouse was a person whose name he refused to give, and the only description he did give as to the identity of such person was that, "It wore skirts." It is apparent that no investigation was made by the Chief Executive and that his order of Mr. Vaughn's reomavl without an investigation means simply a disregard of the Civil Service and the payment of a political obligation.

This is no doubt well known about the city. We are all cognizant of the demand made on our Chief of Police, asking that he resign, but the storm of public indignation resulted in dropping any proceedings against Mr. Burrell, against whom not even the breath of suspicion could be pointed. Mr. Vaughn, however, occupies a position where the general public know little or anything about its management or affairs.

Eternal Feminine.

Margaret, aged seven years, was playing housekeeper. As she pretended to wipe the perspiration from her face she turned from the toy washboard upon which was rinsing out a handkerchief, and, addressing her brother, a year younger, said: "There you are sitting at your ease and me breaking my bones doing your washing."

LEADING CANDIDATES

a kind of 16 to 1 campaign, he said, The candidate for Governor was the one and all the others were the sixteen. All candidates were under orders not to scratch or injure each other. Many people all over the country are wondering where we are drifting to. With the Republicans in power business will start up. Today many of us are not able to make as much money as we spend. We have too much legislation on our blue books, and too many useless books are being published by the state. It was up to the state to try and economize. He urged all to attend the primaries and assured his hearers that whoever won out, he would take off his coat and work for their election.

Elmer A. Stevens, the other candidate for Lieutenant Governor, also referred in a joking manner to the other candidates. Republicans this year will be successful if we work for it. People wanted a change last year, and they got it good and plenty. Now they want another change. We have been having a minority government. He paid a glowing tribute to Candidate McCall, who he said was a thorough statesman of the highest order. He knew something about the State finances and he proposed to tell the people the true facts on the stump this fall. Never were they in such a condition as today. He also objected to the piling up of useless laws and said that in many cases now laws conflicted with each other. Much of this freak legislation was proposed and fostered by Democrats. With a Republican majority in the house and senate we can change things.

In closing he said New England had reached its height in radicalism and must cease putting up laws if you do not want Massachusetts and New England wiped off of the map commercially.

Mr. Stevens also promised to tell the people about the sale of the bond issue over the counter. "I will tell the people where the money came from, and it all came from one man, and will open your eyes when you know the true conditions of that bond sale."

Senator Louis F. R. Langelier spoke briefly in regard to the laws, and quoted from a Hyde Park letter saying the Republicans and Progressives had united.

Harry James, representing Edward A. Thurston, chairman of the Republican State Committee, said that this year there was to be no cut and dried committee on resolutions and platform. Last year too many people swallowed the other fellows bait. This year we are putting out our own bait. A new regime has come in this year and great encouragement is seen all along the line. The apathy of last year had passed away. The people now come forward with a decided issue. It is a good sign to have plenty of candidates to pick from, and they were not rainbow chasers. There was to be no dictating from Washington this year to say what the platform will be. A happy condition exists. We have the Democrats on the defensive.

CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATES.

Frank F. Crane, local candidate for Congressman, told of conditions he had found in the Fourteenth district. He believed we should stop persecuting the railroads and stop making new savings bank laws. He shook a dollar bill in his hand and told how far that would carry freight on teams, railroads and by water. He was a firm believer in the merchant marine. Ships with American bottoms American captains and carrying the American flag. Three Republican Presidents had tried to establish a merchant marine and the Democrats had stopped it. He believed it was coming at the next Congress and he wanted to be there and have a hand in it. He would support the man nominated.

Mayor Harry C. Howard of Brockton, another candidate for the same office, said such a gathering as this augured well for the eRpublicans success in Quincy. He believed this the proper spirit. He would support the man nominated. But who ever got the nomination had a fight on his hands and "I am a good fighter." He asked that the three candidates be considered and that the vote be given the man believed to be the strongest man.

Robert L. Raymond the third candidate for congressman said that he enjoyed political oratory. The merchant marine was a subject that all were interested in. The war had brought the stern fact to the front that we had no ships. It was a disgraceful and absurd condition. We must restore the merchant marine. We of New England are seafaring men. We want American ships for foreign trading. The Republican party is coming back because it is a better party than it was. It has issues to meet. A mission to restore faith in the Federal government. The country will prosper under a Republican government. If good and strong men are elected faith will be restored.

Guy Ham, said that hereafter he wanted to be known as "Ham," and he wanted the voters when they took their ballot to look for the name Ham. He had never seen so much enthusiasm as there was in Maine at the present time. Never did the Republican party have better issues. He believed in a protective tariff that would protect American manufacturers against Europe. Factories all over the country are idle today because they are not protected.

Today there is not a New England man in the cabinet. Not a New England man as an ambassador. Not a New England man who is chairman of an important committee. Never before has such a condition existed.

John J. Higgins candidate for Attorney General made an interesting address. He urged that no mud be thrown at the Progressives. They were naturally Republicans and were coming back into the fold. It was a good sign. He urged that when the voter took the ballot to look over the candidates for attorney general they should pick out the man whom they considered had the greatest ability, character, fitness and legal learning, no matter what section of the state he comes from.

County Commissioner Merrill told of his many years as a voter of the Republican ticket. He also spoke for party loyalty. We have seen the result of the independent vote. He believed the best men of the party should be selected. He could not believe the party he had voted with so long was bad as some of the other fellow tried to make it out.

The last speakers on the list were the local candidates for the Representative nomination. Representative Sandberg wished to be excused and was not called upon. Brief remarks however were made by Charles A. Ericson, Otto Gelotte and Albert L. Whitman candidates for the Republican nominations in the Fifth District.

While the dinner was in progress music was furnished by Provost orchestra and at the close of the speaking they rendered several American airs. In order that every man might know who his neighbor was at the table, Dr. Gilson saw to it that each wore a badge held in place by an American flag, while on the bottom of the card was the name of the wearer.

The committee of arrangements were Ira M. Whittemore, Dr. Alfred H. Gilson, John D. Mackay, Charles H. Johnson, John A. Weeden, George Westland, Ernest R. McConnell and Henry P. Kittredge.

BALL PLAYERS REUNION.

The gathering of the boys who will play with Fore River against the Reed streets of Rockland at Weymouth Saturday afternoon will be more or less of a base ball reunion, many not having seen each other since early in the season.

George Barry, the little commodore of the Taunton team of the Colonial league, and Charlie Knight who reached Quincy Wednesday night after a prosperous season in the Provinces will be the battery.

"Link" Elcock, captain of the Newburg team of the Atlantic York state league, will be at second, and "Wes" Ganzel, his team mate, will play first. Ray Nash, captain of the Brown University nine, and coach of Milton High will be in centre and Sid Duggan and Theo Galvin will flank him. Gillis at second and Cain at third will complete the lineup.

SPURIOUS COIN.

Quincy has again been chosen as one of the places in which to circulate spurious coin and on the holiday many accepted counterfeit half dollars in lieu of the government issue.

The coin bears the year 1909. It is a poor imitation and can easily be detected. Its component parts appear to be lead and they fall heavy and dead when sounded.

Most of the coin passed on the holiday was turned into the cashier's office of the Bay State Street Railway where it was detected. It is understood that several local merchants have added theirs to their choice collections.

Several months ago the city was flooded with counterfeit half dollars. Federal officers captured the counterfeiters and confiscated a high class equipment that was buried in the ground.

HOW FRENCH PEOPLE CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

A household remedy of the French peasantry, consisting of pure vegetable oil, and said to possess wonderful merit in the treatment of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles, has been introduced in this country by George H. Mayr, who for twenty years has been one of the leading down town druggists of Chicago and who himself was cured by its use. So quick and effective is its action that a single dose is usually enough to bring pronounced relief in the most stubborn cases, and many people who have tried it declare they never heard of anything to produce such remarkable results in so short a time. It is known as Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and can now be had at almost any drug store. It is now sold here by Clyde T. Cox and druggists everywhere.

HIGH SCHOOL FOOT BALL

Squads at Merrymount Oval For Practice

Three squads of football candidates reported to the High school coaches at the first practice of the season at Merrymount Park Thursday afternoon and a large gallery also assembled to see the first workout.

Capt. Richard Larkin and the available men of last years eleven were on hand. In this group were Arthur, an end; Reardon and Hamlin, tackles; Foy, guard; Crocker, quarter; Jepson, Crosscup and Smith, half backs; and Whet Brown, full back.

While these men on the start are assured of their position, some of the new material is so promising they may be obliged to work for their place on the line before many afternoons.

This season it will be necessary to develop a center. All kinds of material is on hand to draw from, including the tall, small, light and heavy. A fair average of the candidates is between 125 and 135 pounds.

As in former years the men will be without the services of a professional coach, the work falling back on Messrs. Mansur and French of the faculty. On Thursday they only allowed the men to fall on the ball and trotted them around the field for condition.

MILTON HIGH FOOTBALL.

Coach "Reggie" Nash of the High school expects to develop a very fast, snappy, football team this season. The first preliminary practice was held Thursday afternoon on the Brook road playground. There were 25 men out to practice, and a few punts, starts, tackles, etc., were run through. The majority of the candidates are either freshmen or sophomores. Eight of the men are former players: Capt. "Dutch" Reiser, "Red" Robertson, "Bobbie" Adams, "Porkie" Field, "Mayor" White, "Ken" Hecker, Corbett and "Louis" Sprague. "Mayor" White is back for a post-graduate course and some good playing is expected from him. "Red" Robertson, a star of last year's team, has developed largely the last year and he ought to show some snappy ball.

Soldiers and Money to Help England In Her Fight

WILL SEND FORCE OF 70,000

Government Contribution of $5,000,000 to War Fund Besides Large Personal Gifts of Princes—Gaekwar of Baroda Expresses the Desire to Go to the Front

London, Sept. 11.—The heart of imperial Britain bounded when the colonial office proclaimed in the house of commons India's whole-souled cooperation in the war.

It was a blow at the kaiser's calculation that in such a crisis India would be in rebellion against the mother country. Instead, India, down to the last of her nearly 700 states, has come to the aid of the home government.

The commons cheered itself hoarse and wrung its hands in patriotic joy as the government unfolded the catalog of men and munitions and transports, comprising a contingent of 70,000 soldiers, offered by the 700 princes of India for the support of the empire.

Then came pledges of mounts and money, even of personal jewels, and offers of individual service from the princes of the east.

Among these was the demand of the Gaekwar of Baroda, though 70 years old, of his right to take the field and to bring with him his grandson, aged 16.

The Dalai Lama of Thibet offered 1000 men. Out of his private purse the Maharaja of Mysore placed $1,600,000 at the disposal of the empire to equip and transport India's expeditionary force.

The Maharaja of Repa offered all the troops and treasure of his state, and his vast private collection of jewels. Some of the native princes are equipping also a hospital ship from their own resources.

The message of Viceroy of India Hardinge announces that many of the native rulers are coming at the head of their contingents.

The expeditionary force includes the crack regiments of imperial service troops maintained in the larger states of India. From twelve of these states the viceroy accepted contingents of cavalry, infantry, sappers and transports, besides a camel corps from Bikanir.

Besides the private gifts enumerated, the Indian government is contributing $5,000,000 toward the expenses of the expeditionary force in the field.

These demonstrations were not confined to the Indian princes. Everywhere throughout India the people are declared to be equally united and enthusiastic, and so eager are the native troops to go to the front that those unavoidably left behind have to be placated with all manner of diplomatic apologies. These were the troops on whose indirect support the kaiser's advisers had taught him to reckon.

The Gaekwar of Baroda is known widely in America. He has visited the United States several times and spoken often in public on the problems of his country. His son was educated at Harvard and his daughter, Princess Indria, has been entertained at Newport.

Union of South Africa Will War Upon German Possessions

In a stirring speech to the assemby of the Union of South Africa at Cape Town, Premier Botha promised the whole-hearted support of the union to the imperial government in the present war and declared that the racial hatchet had been buried.

As a proof of the union's determination to assist in maintaining the integrity of the empire, he announced that the government had undertaken to carry through military operations in German's Southwest Africa.

"The empire is at war," the premier declared, "and consequently the Union of South Africa is at war with the common enemy. This assembly must realize that South Africa's future is being decided on the battlefields of Europe, and although there may be many here who in the past have been hostile to the British flag, they would today ten times rather be under the British than the German flag."

SPITBALL SEEMS FATAL TO ARMS OF PITCHERS.

Fewer Twirlers Are Using the Moist Delivery Each Year.

The spitball is falling into disuse. Very few of the twirlers in the big leagues are using it today, and those who do are using it sparingly. The wise pitchers have cast it aside, knowing that even though the use of the moist thing may add to their string of victories it will mean the shortening of their careers.

Jack Chesbro used it back in 1904 when he almost pitched the Yankees into the leadership of the league. But the use of the spitball practically ruined Chesbro as a star performer. Ed Walsh used the spitball for several years, and his success was phenomenal. But the price was high, for Walsh's arm today is in such condition that he never knows whether it will serve him the full route or whether a kink will appear and force him to surrender the hurling job to a relief pitcher.

Jeff Tesreau used the spitball to a great extent when he first landed on major league soil. But he isn't doing it with such reckless abandon as of yore. Jeff soon learned that the spitball "kinked" the arm if used freely, and now he throws it only in emergencies.

There are several other pitchers in the big leagues who still throw the spitball, but they are throwing it just about a half dozen times during the game. Some of the fans believe they throw it oftener because of the deception practiced by the pitcher—of putting the ball up near the mouth and seeming to lubricate it. Batters aren't fond of spitballs. They hate to see them coming. So the pitchers who have discarded the use of the dampened twister very often bluff at pitching one.

The passing of the spitball comes as good news to the infielders. In the years when the spitball was generally used errors were frequent on account of the spitball. A pitcher would gloss the ball freely with saliva and slippery elm or tobacco juice; a batter would hammer it to the infield; the infielder would grab it and start to throw only to find that the slippery ball had glided from his fingers. Quite often when the infielder was able to get the ball away in the direction of the base the ball would take a wild slant and result in a horrible error.

him very much. He wants to see how far the ball will go, and he swings at it with all his might. Once he gets to first Williams has an ambition to continue moving, and he is one of the ten best base stealers in the American league.

VARDON USES SMALL KIT.

Great English Golfer Carries Only a Few Clubs.

Harry Vardon, the great English golf expert, in describing his equipment, says: "In addition to my midiron I carry a driver and two brassies. Of the latter one is straight faced, while the other is lofted so as to help in cuppy lies. I have a cleek and a driving iron. The former makes the greater distance, but the driving iron is useful when the shot is of a length which does not demand the use of a cleek.

"There are the two mashies which I have already recommended the golfer to use, the one for ordinary approaches and the other for odd jobs, especially in long grass or against the wind, and a niblick and a putter complete the armament.

"I think it is just about sufficient for anybody. An undue profusion of implements leads to hesitation in the selection of a club for a particular shot and a general state of confusion."

FRED MOIR RETURNING.

Fred Moir of Norfolk Downs, who was thought to have been held in either Russia or Germany on account of the war, is expected to be in the United States by Sept. 24. He is now on the high seas, having sailed from Yokohama for Seattle, according to cards received Thursday.

Mr. Moir is returning after five years service in the Civil Service bureau in the Philippine Islands. He resigned to come home to engage in business. Having planned to cross Russia by rail and pass through Germany to LeHavre, he evidently was obliged to change his plans. It is possible that he reached the German border to find conditions so turbulent that he returned over the same route and made for Japan, avoiding passing through the war zone.

SLIGHT FIRE.

AUSTRIA LOOKS TOWARD PEACE

Has Already Lost a Fourth of Effective Strength of Army

INTERNAL SITUATION GRAVE

All Efforts to Float War Loan Have Failed—Disposition to Blame Germans For Delay In Giving Aid—Russian Capture of Breslau Imminent—Archduke Leads Troops

London, Sept. 11.—The Russian foreign office at Petrograd is quoted as professing to expect that Austria will sue for peace independently of Germany within the next ten days. If she does not, the Russian foreign office is said to believe, a revolution is certain. Austria is bankrupt and all efforts to float a war loan have failed.

All Austria was plunged into gloom when official admission was made at Vienna that the recent operations against the Russians have cost the dual empire one-fourth of her first line of effective fighting men. Simultaneously it became known for the first time that the operations in Galicia and Russian Poland have been under the personal direction of Archduke Francis Ferdinand.

The announcement at the Austrian war office stated that since the operations against Russia began the total losses in killed, wounded and missing of the Austrian first line army totals the enormous number of 120,000 men. In addition, by reason of the attack by an overwhelming number of Russians who have outnumbered the Austrians at all times, large quantities of military stores, ammunition and cannon have been lost.

The economic situation is admittedly very grave. All efforts on the part of the government to float a war loan have failed and this is causing as much worry as the reverse on the front.

There is a disposition to blame the Germans for having failed to come to the assistance of the Austrians before the invasion was begun by Russia. Urgent appeals were sent to Berlin asking that troops be sent to Lemberg so that the city could be defended. It was not a fortified position, and when the German help failed to arrive there was nothing for the general staff to do but to order the troops to retreat from the city in order to prevent its being destroyed by a general bombardment.

Dispatches from Vienna state that the advance guards of the Russian centre are marching toward Berlin. The Russian troops have invaded Silesia and the capture of Breslau is imminent.

Another dispatch from Petrograd says the Austrians have begun evacuating Cracow, regarded as the stronghold of Austrian and German forces in Galicia.

A dispatch from Rome says the Germans are marching south toward Poland to assist the Austrians, but before this aid can be given they must cross the Vistula river, where the Russians are preparing to check them.

Fighting with the Austrian armies of Generals von Auffenberg and Dankl has again been resumed. Following their decisive defeat at Rawa Ruska, they have been heavily re-enforced by German troops and they are now fighting along a line west of Rawa Ruska extending southwest through Sadowa to a point near the Dneister river.

The brunt of the fighting is reported at Petrograd to have been borne by the Fourteenth Austrian army corps, which was brought from Alsace to re-enforce the main Austrian army. The official reports from General Ruzsky say this corps lost heavily in Wednesday's fighting and that one of its battle standards, two cannon and 500 prisoners were taken.

According to the chiefs at the Russian war office the Austrians have lost fully one-quarter of their effective strength in the fighting which resulted in their being driven from Russian Poland. The plan to round them up and capture or annihilate them failed through the arrival of strong German re-enforcements from the western theatre of fighting, supported by a large number of rapid-firers and field artillery.

It is stated, however, that the Austrans are constantly retreatng and that additional Russian re-enforcements are being sent to Ruzsky to enable him to continue his offensive. The army of General Brussaloff, which is moving westward from Lemberg, is co-operating with that of Ruzsky, according to the latest information obtainable from the war office.

A dispatch from Rome declares he has captured 12,000 Austrians with thirty-one guns and 150 officers, including the general commanding the Austrian Fifteenth division, in the fighting at Rawa Ruska. Troops captured were a part of the Sixth army corps.

The Russian investment of Przemsyl continues. The Russians are shelling the fortified Austrian position from the eastward, but up to the present no attempt has been made to take the Austrian position by storm, and the bombardment will continue until re-enforcements now en route reach the scene.

AMUSEMENTS

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

A packed house last night and a big audience yesterday afternoon enjoyed the mid-week change of program at Quincy's Popular Playhouse and pronounced the show O. K. Waring, billed as the piano wizard, is certainly that. His playing was received with tremendous applause which was well merited.

Fred St. Onge Co., in their sensational cycle stunts were well received. Churchill & Adair proved pleasing entertainers, singing several selections very sweetly and playing piano and violin selections also. Ed. Eustis the equilibrist, perormed many daring and difficult feats with apparent ease and was watched with interest and warmly applauded.

The Million Dollar Mystery was mighty interesting and the Pathe News Pictures presented many timely events, including several scenes of the European War. Other real good pictures, and music by the regular orchestra completed the splendid program.

Attractions engaged to appear beginning next Monday include, Theo and her Dandies, a great Baloon Novelty Act introducing special scenery; Narin & Perkins, class and music; Colton & Miles, singing and talking comedians introducing their funny dog. There will be other acts also. A thrilling three reel photo drama "When a Woman Loves" is the feature picture and several others are on the program.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

"High Jinks" which has proved to be one of the biggest musical comedy hits in Boston for many years, opened its second week at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, Monday. "High Jinks" hit was an immediate one, and despite the fact it could remain in Boston for many months, the engagement is limited to four weeks more. The music of "High Jinks" has caught on and fully a dozen of its score of numbers are heard, hummed and whistled everywhere. Principal among those is "Something Seems Tingle-ingleing," which has created a genuine furor. A few of the other musical numbers that have met with instantaneous success are "Love's Own Kiss," "The Bubble," "When Sammy Sings the Marseillaise," "Not Now, But Later," "I'm Through with Roaming Romeos," "High Jinks Tango" and "The Dixiana Rise."

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

"Wild Oats" has, during the present week, garnered a huge harvest of laughter at the Majestic. There is an amusing horse in the play, but her presence has nothing to do with the title. Rittenhouse Kip, whom the host would call an "unwhipped cub of condition," a ne'er-do-well of New York, sows his wild oats, and in doing so reaps a bumper crop of laughter. But this is one case where the harvest is not a disappointment. It is surprising, too, that when young Kip escapes from his environment, he discovers that the sort of oats which he has been cultivating are not worth the planting. So, here is a highly commendable moral. The hero of the comedy is impersonated by Homer B. Mason, a light comedian who, like many others who have won success, learned his trade in vaudeville. He has a captivating personality, and never, with every opportunity at hand flops over. In less expert hands, the character of Rittenhouse Kip might easily be overplayed. The second successful week at the Majestic Theatre begins next Monday evening, with the usual matine performances given on Wednesday and Saturday.

WILBUR THEATRE.

William Hodge scored a new "Man from Home" hit at the Wilbur Theatre Boston, this week in his latest big play success, "The Road to Happiness." Large and enthusiastic audiences are being nightly delighted with the droll originality and native humor of his character of Jim Whitman in his cheerful comedy of optimism. All the Boston critics are unanimous in their praise of his unique interpreation of this part. E. F. Harkins, of the Journal, rhapsodizes in the following words: "William Hodge is as thoroughly American as the baseball or the circus. He has taken the place of James A. Herne and of Denman Thompson behind the footlights." He also praises the piece as being "American through and through, like 'Shore Acres' and 'The Old Homestead.'" He says that Hodge's "cool-drawl and dry humor keep the temperature down on one side of the footlights and the laughter up on the other." The Transcript says: "Nobody can do this style of humor as well as Mr. Hodge." The meaning of the title, "The Road to Happiness," appears to be that courage—meaning confidence in truth—is the quality of character that leads to real happiness in life.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

Monday "Along Came Ruth" starts the third week of its engagement at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston. The refreshing charm of the play together with its quaint New England characters has fascinated playgoers to such an extent that, were it possible, Ruth might easily and happily remain in their midst for a long time. This, however, is absolutely impossible because of the pre-arranged bookings at the theatre. Therefore, if you would witness this unusual and delightful comedy of New England and its people you had better avail yourself of the present opportunity. The piece is written by Holman Day, recognized as one of the most versatile writers of New England life and frequently called the "Kipling of New England." Mr. Day has instilled into his life-like characters plenty of good, wholesome comedy, with the result that from the beginning to end the play goes with a bang.

The piece opens in Israel Putnam Hubbard's "furniture emporium" which is really an old curiosity shop. Ruth has her way to make in the world. She has spent her small fortune in getting a practical education in the Normal School, and now she walks into Israel's "emporium" looking for a job. Israel knows business can't be made any worse, so he takes her on. From that moment his fortunes rise. In Ruth's encounters with the characters of the town, the author has shown types familiar to New Englanders in many amusing situations. Israel himself is one of the most original and diverting stage creations that has been discovered in years.

CORT THEATRE.

Duplicating its phenomenal triumphs in other cities, "Peg O' My Heart" the famous comedy of youth and laughter by J. Hartley Manners, has taken Boston by storm and has played to absolute capacity at the Cort Theatre there since its opening on Labor Day. The vogue of this famous comedy in New York where it was played two solid years by Miss Laurette Taylor establishing a world's record run, had insured it an auspicious Boston opening, so its success in the New England metropolis with winsome Florence Martin playing the vivacious Irish heroine was not entirely unexpected, but even the most optimistic of managers did not believe that the piece would swing into such instant favor that standing room has been the rule at the Cort at every performance since the opening. Oliver Morosco, owner of "Peg O' My Heart" has announced that he intends to keep his big success in Boston for a full year and the members of the company are so sure that his promise will be made good that they have embarked on a general hunt for apartments to settle down for their long stay. Matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday during the Boston engagement.

BOSTON THEATRE.

The magnificent personal triumph of Dustin Farnum in his sensational popular-priced engagement at the Bostson Theatre the past two weeks has induced Manager Leahy to retain him for the coming week. That the standard of these popular-priced star attractions may be increased from week to week Mr. Leahy has also secured Dustin Farnum's brother, William Farnum, and together the brothers will present a mammoth revival of the most stirring of all war plays, "The Littlest Rebel." This means, of course, that there will be two stars next week as both Dustin and William Farnum have long since occupied a leading position among American dramatic stars. It was in "The Littlest Rebel" that the two Farnum brothers scored their greatest Boston success at this same theatre two years ago. No play produced in years is possessed of the human interest and the stirring punch of "The Littlest Rebel." From the rise to the fall of the curtain there is never a dull moment. It is grippingly human and repleto with humor and pathos. No more opportune time could have been selected for the staging of this typical war play. Presenting, as it does, a graphic picture of our own Civil War and the horrible conditions this caused, it will give a very vivid idea of what may be expected from the titanic European struggle now in progress.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Belasco's "Girl of the Golden West," with Mary Young as "the girl" continues to attract big houses at Castle Square, where the Craig Players are giving it twice a day all this week. John Craig himself appears as "Jack Rance," the gambling sheriff of Cloudy Mountain, who is handsome Dick Johnson's rival for the love of "the girl," and who finds himself, just as all the winning cards seem to be in his hands, outwitted by a woman's resourcefulness and pluck. Mr. Craig's acting is a fine bit of character, and yet somehow he manages to show us the human side of the saturnine poker player. "The Girl" will take its place among many well remembered roles that Mary Young has played, and will haunt the memories of Castle Square playgoers. The part fits like a glove. Its golden opportunities for great acting and comedy alike, are realized to the full. Minnie is by turns winsome to her stanch miner friends—womanly in her self surrender to her lover—and heroic when the great moment for action arrives. Miss Young has done nothing better.

Next week George Cohan's New York triumph, "Broadway Jones" comes to Castle Square, with Dudley Hawley as the lovable and amusing spendthrift. How "Broadway" started to burn up New York and nearly got burnt up himself—how his friend Wallace saved him from marrying a wealthy and middle aged widow for her money—his final reformation by the smart little secretary of the Jonesville Chewing Gum Company—all make up the plot of one of the cleverest comedies that has even been put upon the American stage.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

The widely heralded photo spectacle "Cabiria" from a scenario by Gabriele d'Annunzio, Italy's foremost poet and dramatist, which opens at the Tremont Temple, Boston, Monday evening, Sept. 14th, is one of the most interesting novelties of the times. This picture was made by the Itala Film Company of Turin and the American tour is under the personal direction of Louis F. Werba and Mark A. Luescher, who heretofore have directed and produced high class musical comedies exclusively. "Cabiria" is said to have been staged in five countries at an outlay of $250,000 with a cast of five thousand, and it will demonstrate a new and important function of the camera. For the presentation of "Cabiria" an orchestra of twenty-five solo musicians and a chorus of thirty will be introduced. And altogether it promises to be the most brilliant and pretentious motion picture presentation ever offered. Matinees are announced daily at 2.30 P. M.

THREE WOMEN AND ONE MAN

Granted Divorces in Norfolk Court on Thursday

Judge Hugo A. Dubuque, presiding at the jury waived session of the Norfolk Superior Court at Dedham, on Thursday directed the legal separation of 15 couples, including well known Quincy residents. The list follows:

Mrs. Luella C. Nutting of Cotuit, from Shirley F. Nutting of Quincy, was granted a decree nisi for desertion. They have been married since Nov. 4, 1897.

Mrs. Edna B. Holyoke of Quincy from Thomas E. Holyoke of Long Beach, Calif., for desertion. She was also allowed to resume her maiden name of Bird. They were married at Providence July 9, 1909.

Mrs. I. Isabella Gardner of Quincy from Edward S. Gardner of Quincy, decree nisi for cruel and abusive treatment.

Edgar H. Field of Quincy from Elizabeth Orr Field of parts unknown, decree nisi for desertion, and care of two minor children.

In designing and producing the 1914 fall models, Lamson & Hubbard were careful not to follow precedents but rather to make precedents. This must surely create in all lovers of clever, correct hats a desire to inspect their latest models. There now awaits your consideration many new and interesting designs, some extreme, some otherwise but all correct. There is as wide a difference in hats as in anything else and their models show that correctness in design which at once distinguishes them. The proper effects, correct fitments, superb finish show the result of years' service to a large clientele. These models may all be seen at your local hatters. Note their advertisement in this issue.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society's annual free dahlia exhibition is to be given from noon to 6 P. M. at Horticultural Hall, Boston Saturday, and on Sunday from 2 to 6 o'clock.

W. S. HOBART VETERAN FIREMAN

William S. Hobart, better known as Stephen Hobart, one of the oldest residents of South Quincy, died at his home on High street this morning of ailments incident to old age, aged 89 years. Mr. Hobart was born in Quincy and has always resided here. In his younger days he did a little at shoemaking, and later helped his father who was a butcher. For many years however farming on a small scale has been his main occupation.

He was a veteran fireman of the red shirt days, being a member for many years of the old Tiger company, with which he remained until that old hand tub went out of commission. According to his idea there was no tub like the Tiger, and but for its work the old town would have been burnt up many times. His last public appearance was during the September parade of the department under Chief Litchfield when he rode on one of the pieces of apparatus togged out in his red fire shirt and hat. Mr. Hobart never married.

YOUNG MEN TO FORM CLUB

The young voters of Ward One will hold a meeting at an early date to arrange for the formation of a Young Mens Republican Club, to work for and support the Republican candidates at the State Election and follow with an active campaign in the interest of Charles H. Johnson for mayor.

FRIENDS CLAIM THE BODY.

Friends came from Bar Harbor on Thursday and claimed the body of Alfred Anderson, the young man who was killed in an automobile accident at Milton on Labor Day. As far as could be learned the young man had no relatives in this country, but had friends in Bar Harbor, Me. These parties were communicated with and came to Quincy and arranged for the funeral. The services will be held Saturday at 2 o'clock from Hall's undertaking rooms and the burial will be at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

GRANITE BUSINESS REPORTED GOOD

The Quincy correspondents in the Granite Cutters' Journal report that business in Quincy is good with everybody working. The correspondent for the Quincy polishers follows and says "there are few machine polishers idle, but they are fitting in here and there for men who are sick or taking a few days off." On the whole trade is very good."

DISTRICT COURT.

George M. Rosen was fined $10 and Fred R. Campbell $10 for exceeding the automobile speed limit on a Milton parkway.

Andrew Murphy was fined $ 10 and John Donovan sentenced to the state farm for drunkenness at Quincy.

John W. Day was fined $15 for trespass at Milton.

John J. Kelly and Fred A. Wise were arraigned for trespass at Weymouth. Cases placed on file on payment of $2.50 each for restitution and $15.98 costs, which will be divided between the two defendants.

ATLANTIC MAN ARRESTED.

Henry P. Lamb, 35, who gave his address as Faxon road, Atlantic, was arrested by Inspector Pierce and Conboy Thursday afternoon, says the Herald, in the Old South building on the charge of passing worthless checks. Several business men in the central part of Boston had complained that they had been victimized by a man who asserted that he was an agent for some distant company.

SQUANTUM BURGLARY.

The gunning stand of the club composed of members of the Exchange Trust Co., of Boston, which is located on the Crabtree estate at Squantum, was burglarized some time this week. The parties carried away a lot of sweaters and other clothing belonging to the members.

After the State primaries are over, people will begin to think about municipal affairs. At present but little has been said, but the chances are that municipal politics will warm up when the tax bills are received.

BRIEFS

The annual rendezvous of the yachts of the Y. R. A. M. will be held Sunday off Hull and promises to be an imposing sight, as the yachts will be decorated with the various flags which they have won this season as well as other season's races. There is hardly a yacht but what can display one or more of these pennants.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

NEWSY BRIEFS

Showers are predicted.

Several new advertisements today, and large enough to be seen.

Joseph W. Stancomb of Hall's Undertaking rooms is in Maine on his annual vacation.

The Misses Lillian and Annie Keddy of Intervale street, accompanied by E. J. Lenihan of East Milton, left today for a visit to Nova Scotia.

The Wollaston Unitarian church will resume services and all its various activities Sunday morning, at 10.45 o'clock. An unusually busy winter is anticipated by this active parish.

Preserving time is at hand. The chances are however that preserving will not be as plentiful this fall as usual on account of the high cost of sugar.

An informal discussion of the seasons plans was held at the meeting of the Riverside Womans club, Wednesday, at which Mrs. George F. Spooner, the president presided. Next Wednesday the club will hold a whist party, and on Sept. 23, will observe guest day.

Good progress has been made during the past few days laying the granolithic walk on the west side of Hancock street. It is expected that the walk for its entire length will be nearly completed by Saturday night, although it will be a couple of days before it has set hard enough to walk on. It will certainly be a great improvement.

The removing of the trees on the easterly side of Hancock street between Granite and School streets, preparatory to the widening, is going to be a good improvement. Heretofore it has been impossible to see much on this side of the street as the view has been obstructed by the trees With them removed the view looking from either School street or Granite street will be clearer.

He Didn't Mind.

"I suppose, Jerry," said the eminent statesman, looking through his pocketbook for a new dollar bill, "like a lot of other people nowadays, you would rather have clean money?" "Oh, that's all right, Senator," said the cabman. "I don't care how you made your money."

See Method Adopted by a Delaware City This Week

One of the best ways to boost QUINCY is to think QUINCY is one of the best places on earth in which to live. To constantly instill into the minds of your friends that QUINCY is one of the most desirable places to reside. That Quincy has many natural advantages as an industrial centre that other Massachusetts cities lack. To talk QUINCY whenever you have an opportunity and never to say to your friends that—"Quincy is a good place to live in—but—"

From the staid old town of Quincy, rich in history we have become a City of Quincy and a thriving metropolitan city of nearly 40,000 people.

Tell your friends that QUINCY has many miles of water front, that it is a most desirable location for business industries to locate. That here in QUINCY have been quarried and cut some of the largest and handsomest granite memorials erected throughout the country. That here in QUINCY there is a shipyard where the largest battleships in the world are being built. That we are on the main line of the railroad with five stations and within twenty minutes ride of Boston. That street car lines for all parts of the city and surrounding towns radiate from City Square. That we have thriving lodges of all the fraternal orders, yacht clubs, business mens clubs, parks and playgrounds, and churches of all denominations, whose pulpits are occupied by some of the most able preachers of the day.

That in QUINCY were born two Presidents of these United States, whose example of patriotism has been so instilled into the minds of the people that there are no more loyal people to the old flag than right here in QUINCY.

The great trouble in the past has been that QUINCY people have been a little sensitive about, what is called blowing one's horn. This is a mistaken idea. If one does not speak well of the city in which he lives, it can hardly be expected that any one else will. Therefore think QUINCY, talk QUINCY, and stand up for QUINCY—first, last and all the time.

There are naturally some things which we would like which we do not have, but they are rapidly coming. Every year many new permanent sidewalks are being built and many new streets are accepted, and many thousands of dollars are being expended in keeping our streets in good condition.

There are few communities with more law-abiding citizens than Quincy. Of course we have some crime but seldom of a serious nature such as might be expected in a large city with a cosmopolitan population. Our police and fire departments are efficient, the fire losses being a minimum compared to the amount of property at risk.

Therefore to those seeking a new location for a home or a site in which to locate a manufacturing industry, few cities can offer so many inducements as can the live city of QUINCY

Now the Daily Ledger will expect all QUINCY people to write a Booster for publication or to parade about the city. The Monitor prints a dispatch from Wilmington, Delaware, which says:

The business men of the city of Wilmington joined in a "Boosters' parade" this week to boom their city, both capital and labor being represented and a majority of the marchers carrying white umbrellas bearing the slogan, "Do It for Wilmington."

The time selected for this parade was on the opening day of the state fair, the main object being to advertise Wilmington to the rural sections of Delaware. Because of the close proximity of larger cities Wilmington feels that it has not enjoyed the trade which is its due.

No effort has been so far-reaching as this parade of 2000 men and women, representing capital and labor, and marching with the Greater Wilmington idea— "For a Better Understanding." The greatly advantageous results can readily be seen when it is realized that not only the merchants and the employers of labor but the carpenters, painters, barbers and even the hodcarriers and shoe polishers now are interested in booming

America's Relief Ship Red Cross Carries Doctors and Nurses on Mission of Mercy to European War Zone.

Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

With thirty American doctors and 120 Red Cross nurses the American relief ship Red Cross was made ready to sail from New York for Europe on its mission of mercy. There was a halt just as the ship was about to sail when formal protests were made by the French and English consuls in New York against the presence of German sailors aboard the Red Cross. About three-fifths of the crew was made up of subjects of countries now at war. The consuls insisted that the crew be entirely of American citizens or those of other neutral countries. Miss Mabel T. Boardman, head of the American Red Cross, readily agreed to this. The top picture shows the Red Cross as she steamed down the Hudson, friends of the nurses and physicians waving goodby on the dock. The lower picture shows some of the nurses waving farewell from the deck of the steamer.

REVERE RATE STILL LARGER

Figures Revised by the State Tax Commissioner

After announcing last week that its tax rate would be $22.60 the Assessors of Revere, the next town which will probably come into the column of cities, have found it necessary to advance the rate. The new rate followed a visit of Supervisor Patten of the Tax Commissioners office. Originally the chairman of the board was opposed to the rate of $22.60, claiming it would not be sufficient, but he was overruled by the other members. The Supervisor said the board was in error, figuring credits in the treasury as an offset to the taxes, and that the rate should be $24. The board met later and announced that the rate would be $24.

RUMNEY—SCHELL.

John Walter Rumney of 113 Sea street and Ruth Dora Schell of Cambridge were married in Brockton on Wednesday by Rev. A. J. Hamilton of that city. The bride was born here, and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Schell. The groom is a chauffeur and has lived at Houghs Neck during the summer season.

The submarine K-6 was placed in commission at the Boston navy yard on Wednesday.

MOVEMENT TO SAVE TREE

Old Sidewalk Discovered Buried on Hancock Street

Tree Warden Stewart in excavating to remove the large elm trees on Hancock street, near Cottage avenue, has discovered about five feet down, another sidewalk with curbing in place. Many will be surprised that we have curbing "to burn," yet here it is buried, and it seems to extend right under the trees. However since the sidewalk was filled in a new set of roots have grown above the sidewalk. It is a difficult job removing these big trees.

Not only the trees along the sidewalk, but those just inside the fence in front of the Col. Packard house are doomed. This morning Rev. A. L. Hudson and others started a movement to save at least one of these trees, a grand old elm which has not suffered from electric wires and moths. As a lower street grade is to be established at this point it will be difficult to save the tree and do a good job on the street.

BETHANY SERVICES.

At the pleasant Sunday evening service at Bethany church, the Sunday evening vested chorus will sing once again, and the pastor will speak to young people. The Brotherhood class will meet at noon also the Makaria Fraternity; all men are welcome.

C. M. DUGGAN TELLS OF TRAVEL

The first fall meeting of the new North Quincy Catholic club was held Friday evening, and was attended by more than seventy-five members. The committee on club quarters reported that quarters would be ready for occupancy the early part of October. Applications for several new members were referred to the board of directors.

After the regular meeting a social session was held and the members were entertained with a talk by Cornelius Duggan of Atlantic who has just returned from an extended tour through the British Isles.

Mr. Duggan was given an ovation by the members of the Club. He recited his experiences of his travels in England and Ireland in connection with the present European War and in connection with the Home Rule problem which was agitating Ireland at the time he arrived there. He traveled through Belfast and Dublin which he described in his unique and humorous manner, which made the evening most pleasing and entertaining to the members.

At the next meeting the members hope to have stereopticon views of travels through the European countries.

The old Boston Bicycle club started yesterday on its 25th annual "Wheel about the Hub," going as far as Mansfield. Today they run via Braintree and Hingham to Nantasket. Capt. W. G. Kendall of Atlantic is with the party as usual.

RICHES FOR QUINCY BOY

His Invention Patented and Worth Big Sum

It is currently reported that Roy Metcalf of 60 Edison street has suddenly come to riches through the invention of an automatic pump. According to the rumor young Metcalf has sold a half interest in his invention for $25,000 cash, and that he will soon receive something like $25,000 more in royalties.

It has been known that the young man has been working on an automatic pump for pumping water out of boats for two or three years. According to the stories success has at last crowned his efforts, and that he has sold his invention to a large pump manufacturing company who will put it on the market.

Metcalf is well known in Quincy Point. He is a machinist by trade and secured a patent on his invention recently.

MRS. CATLIN COMING TUESDAY

Mrs. Claiborne Catlin of California who is touring the state on horseback in the interests of equal suffrage, had to appeal for help in Rockland because her Diana was exhausted from the thousands of miles he had carried his feminine orator.

Mrs. A. W. Donovan of that town, an ardent supporter, furnished her a substitute and in addition provided lodging for the night so she could be handy to the Weymouth Fair on Friday.

On Monday Mrs. Catlin will appear in Braintree and Tuesday she will come to Quincy. Whether she will ride Diana or the substitute horse is not known but Mrs. Catlin, prepared for any emergency, feels that if no one else will offer succor in the event of accident, Dr. Galen V. Bowditch, the fervent Democrat and believer in equal suffrage will lead his Fourth of July "nag" out for her.

It is a mighty pretty sight to see the children flocking to school again, except that the boys look so blue over having to wear new clothes.

The refined European armies do not line up their prisoners against a wall and shoot them like the Mexicans. They merely destroy their crops and buildings and starve them to death.

There is no more interesting illustration of the effect of the European war on the cost of the commodities of life than the jump in the price of sugar. We presume conditions are much the same all over the country but a case in point is the decision of many local housewives not to do any preserving or jelly making this year because the high quotations on sugar strike terror to their economical souls It is rather unfortunate that when fruits are so plentiful the article most necessary for putting them up for winter use should be so expensive. It is another boost in the high cost of living and is exasperating to say the least. Even those who laid in a comparatively large supply of sugar before the rise in price are likely to keep it solely for the more necessary uses of the household and the stock of that famous product, the New England preserve, is sure to be smaller than usual this year.

SCHOOL AGE.

Many parents feel they must turn children over to the first grade of school at the age of five. This leaves the mother free for social life, gives the home a respite from juvenile noise, and is felt to give the youngsters a good start.

Yet doctors and many wise parents are questioning if this early beginning is wise. It seems like harnessing a child up to a permanent job at a very early age.

If a child is not vigorous physically, he will make but slow progress in school. At the ages of five, six, and seven, he can grasp but little of the fundamentals. But if he stays out until he is seven, and by the free outdoor life acquires a strong constitution, he will then make rapid progress. An average child with this strong start should be able to skip a grade or so.

Is is a mistake to think that the child of six or seven is learning nothing even if he is out of school. His eyes are opening wider every day, and outdoor air is providing a wonderful foundation for future advance.

MODERN COURAGE.

The fighting in Europe throws light on the much debated question, whether the alleviation of pain and more comfortable living of this century have made people soft, as so many people believe.

It is certain that the smaller pains of life are not borne as easily as formerly. Most people once thought but little of having a tooth out, and without any anesthetic. The writer knows one of the old timers, who having a sore toe that had bothered him a good deal, went out in the barn one day, and deliberately chopped it off with a hatchet.

Nowadays most people rarely have teeth out without taking gas or ether. They even dread the slighter pains of the ordinary experience of having teeth filled.

The superb courage shown on the European fields of battle, however, seem equal to anything recorded from the old stories of heroism. The soldiers march on to what is practically organized suicide. One line follows another to death, and finally the following ranks win the position, before the defenders have time to operate their weapons.

Probably the capacity for enduring the minor ills of life has diminished, as the pains of the world have been alleviated. There is a growing sensitiveness to pain and alarm at danger. But as the soldier grows more subject to these influences of a refined age, his fear of ridicule and shame becomes keener. He may fear death more. But his dread of disgrace is also stronger. He can see little satisfaction in saving himself, if he must bear the pale badge of cowardice thereafter.

This is the one bright spot out of the orgy of blood across the water. It is the convincing proof that human nature is just as capable of meeting the darker and deeper issues of life as it ever was.

RETIREMENT OF GERMANS CONTINUES

Giving Way Before Terrible Fire of French Artillery

INVADERS' LINES BEND BEFORE DEFENDERS' RUSH

Gradual Falling Back of Centre, Which May Succeed In Steadying Demoralized Right, Thus Forcing Another Great Battle Before It Is Known Whether France Is to Be Freed of Invaders—Germans Suffer Tremendous Losses, While Foremost French Columns Also Lose Heavily—Backward Movement Cannot Be Called Rout—German at Left Centre Still Hold Positions—Demoralization In Right

London, Sept. 12.—The German centre, where the pick of the kaiser's fighting troops have been massed, has begun to give way.

Battered for days by the French artillery the exhausted and shattered ranks of the invaders have begun to retreat to the west of Vitry-le-Francois.

The French, posted on the heights to the north of Sezanne, began their offensive movement as soon as the slackening fire of the German artillery and the longer intervals between the heroic charges proved that the time for defensive tactics had passed.

Sullenly, but unmistakably, the German lines bent when the French rushed their lines. They are retreating in good order, halting now and then to mow down over-zealous detachments of the French. But they are retreating.

Right Near Demoralization

The advance of the British and French on the German right has thrown that section of the invading army into a state that is perilously approaching demoralization. In places they are from forty-five to fifty miles behind the positions that they held four days ago and each hour the retreat becomes more like a rout.

The falling back of the German centre has not been more than gradual. Both the demoralized right and the still firm centre of the invaders appear to be making toward Rheims.

When they meet, attacked from both south and west, the fighting that will ensue will presumably prove the most decisive of the battling in France. If they are pressed closely by the British and French, it is possible that the routed right may unbalance the centre armies, so that they in turn may be driven swiftly toward the north and east. But if the assaults of the allies flag in intensity, the centre may succeed in steadying the right wing and another great battle may be forced at Rheims before it will be known whether France is to be freed of the invading gray host.

Furious Fighting In Centre

The most furious and brilliant fighting of the war has been taking place for days in the centre, to the west and east of Vitry-le-Francois. It was quickly seen that here or nowhere the Germans must conquer. If the French centre could be pierced and the defending armies sundered, the Germans could foresee another Sedan and another Metz with another victorious siege of Paris imminent.

But the united France of 1914 has not proved much like the disorganized France of 1879. The heavy artillery of the Germans failed to dislodge the enemy from the heights, where they had established great guns that swept the plains below the plateau across which the invaders must charge. The French guns constantly searched out the German positions and inflicted tremendous losses. Assault after assault failed to penetrate the French defense.

German Right Weakened

In sheer desperation the German right, already hard pressed by the on-marching British and French, was weakened to send reinforcements to the German armies concentrated between Sezanne and Vitry. The charges of the Germans were as brilliant as those of the Japanese in 1904. They swarmed across the open plain, and, despite terrific losses, drove upward toward the French positions. But the fire was too deadly. Everywhere the defending lines held. The assaults were repeated with fresh forces, who were apparently undismayed by the bodies of their comrades strewn on the plain.

At last the French charged, at the moment when the Germans were most exhausted. From the plateau north of Sezanne they drove down upon the German trenches and were soon in possession. The German retreat had begun.

Retreat In Excellent Order

There was, however, no rout about it. The foremost French columns, believing that they could convert the retreat into a stampede, suffered severely for their mistake. The Germans turned and covered their falling back movement as ably as had the British on the long backward trek from Mons to Paris. It was not so great an achievement, for the forces were more evenly matched at Sezanne and the retreat was a short one, but the Germans behaved admirably. The backward movement is continuing but the Germans are taking their time and retreating in excellent order.

Near Vitry, the Germans at the left centre still hold their positions. Here are massed armies which have been re-enforced by several thousands of troops from the German right, led by General von Kluck, who commanded the forward movement from Brussels that did not halt until the gray army was nearly at the gates of Paris.

Battling on Even Terms

The battling here has been as nearly even as could be possible with forces of such magnitude. Neither the Germans nor the French in this section of the centre lines have been able to make any appreciable impression upon their adversaries. At one moment a German charge has seemed to be beating back the French; an hour later a French assault seems destined to sweep over the German lines.

But all the advantages gained were momentary. Even the Prussian Guard was unable to penetrate deeply into the French defenses. The Algerian soldiers of the French were as unable to beat back the stubborn German lines. The advantage, however, lies with the French here, as the retreat of the Germans between Sezanne and Vitry endangers the positions of the invading armies and exposes them to the possibilities of an attack from the flank.

Allies' Successes Continue

Nearer to Paris, where the allies' successes have been greatest, they were continued yesterday with the most disastrous results that the Germans have yet known in the war. Outnumbered, wearied by their too rapid advance against Paris, the Germans made only the faintest resistance here to the victorious British and French, who harrassed the rear guards with never-ceasing fire.

This is the only part of the German army that appears to be soundly beaten. The official French report of the battle of the Marne, as they have characterized the great engagement which has been going on for nearly a week, shows that the German cavalry penetrated even more deeply into France than had been at first supposed. They swept southward as recklessly and as triumphantly as they had hitherto swept westward into Belgium. After they had failed to outflank the allies, due to the superb retreat of the British, they drove southeastward and did not halt until they were almost at Provins, fully twenty-five miles south of La Ferte Gaucher, where they were reported in the earlier official messages.

Rushing Northward In a Hurry

But the whole force, infantry and artillery as well as cavalry, now seems to be rushing northward as rapidly as they had hastened southward. They are being driven toward the Aisne and the Oise rivers so precipitately that it hardly seems unfair, judging from the British and French reports, to characterize the retreat as a rout.

Rumors of guns lying in the roadside come from unofficial sources, the surest indication of demoralization. From Cirey and Provins and Esternay, the British are hanging upon the rear of the reatreat, ably supported by their French allies.

The disorder of the Germans is insisted upon the London official dispatches more strongly than in those coming out of Paris. The British have again and again come upon scattered detachments of Germans in the woods, strayed from their main forces and utterly bewildered as to their whereabouts. These small bands have surrendered without firing, glad to get a chance to sleep and eat.

Helplessness Betrayed

In some cases, presumably not many, drunken soldiers have been found, and villagers report that their houses have been rifled by the retreating Germans. Almost from the dawn of military history, armies in utter rout, with lines of communications in confusion, have betrayed their helplessness to their pursuers by robbery and drunkenness. The charges are so serious that they might safely be neglected were they not made by the official press bureau in London, which has thus far sent out no details of the war that have not later been substantiated.

The damage done by the Germans in the advance through the north of France has been partially and unwillingly paid for by the abandonment of stores left behind by the routed right wing. Ammunition and food in large quantities have been recovered by the British and French near Compiegne and Soissons. The British alone have taken nearly 1500 prisoners, while it is supposed that the two French armies operating in this section have been as successful.

Three Nationsto Fight Turkey If Sultan Joins Germans

It is stated at Bucharest that an alliance has been entered into between Greece, Bulgaria and Roumania which provides that they will act in concert and attack Turkey should she enter the war under an alliance with Germany and Austria.

The pact is reported to have been made possible through the efforts of the British, Russian and French diplomatic representatives at the various capitals.

No official information on the subject is forthcoming and it is impossible to secure confirmation of the report, although it is accepted as true in diplomatic circles.

PARK AND DOWNS CHURCH.

Sunday evening at the Park and Downs Congregational church, the pastor Rev. William B. Ayers will preach on "War." Following this until further announcement, he will review each Sunday night the progress of the war now raging in Europe and give some salient points of the week's events, pointing out the great religious lessons taught by the world events which we are now witnessing. These lectures promise to be instructive and elevating, being both a review of the greatest period of history in the making and a careful guidance into those supreme principles taught by large human events. Mr. Ayers is a speaker of strong personality—eloquent and powerful in his delivery and his subjects always show much research into actual facts so that this series of lectures will test, (as last season) the seating capacity of the house. Arthur F. Capen will will render solos during the evening.

COMPOSITION OF NINE-YEAR-OLD

Th School Committee resent the thoughtless charge that the schools don't teach English efficiently. They point out that if some of the graduates haven't the ability to express themselves clearly and in proper style, the same thing may be said about lots of college graduates.

They claim that in the Quincy schools particular attention is given this important branch of late years, and that for every graduate who has poor control of the English language, there are three who can speak and write it in creditable manner.

As a sample of what the Quincy schools can do for a child of ordinary aptitude, with reasonable co-operation in the home, there has been sent to the Ledger a composition written without previous preparation or notice by a nine-year old boy in the Coddington School, who has just entered the fifth grade. It is here published without a single change of any kind, except that the writer's name which appears on the original, is on request omitted.

It will be observed that there are only two misspelled words and not a single error in grammar. While the punctuation is faulty in places and some capitals are missing, the composition is evidence of attention on the part of the teachers and diligence on the part of the pupil. The composition follows: The original may be seen at the Ledger office.

"Coddington School,
Grade V.
Sept. 8, 1914.

"One day I was going to go and play baseball, so I went to the field and began. I got up at bat, the first thing I got hit in the head, when I got at first base I stole two bases and had a job to get home, then up at bat again I got hit on the top of my head and after a while got home after the game was over by right the score was 27-7 but our pitcher on purpose gave thirteen pases and we won the game."

Incidentally it should be said that the handwriting is quite legible and fairly firm.

NEW LONDON BY AUTO.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fogg, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Drake, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fogg and Miss Leola Pope made a very joliy party for their trip by auto to New London, Conn., The party left Braintree, Sunday, and at twelve o'clock they were enjoying a dinner as guests of Everett Peterson in South Coventry, Conn. Shortly after dinner the hum of the motor was heard and the happy party started on the remainder of their journey

They arrived at the home of Mrs. George Fogg's sister Mrs. Burton Smith of New London before dark and an evening that will not soon be forgotten passed all to soon. The following day the homeward spin was made without incident. All were very much pleased with the outing. A look at the speedometer showed that the machine had covered three hundred miles in the two days.

WHITON PARTY HAS RETURNED

Interviewed by Daily Ledger Reporter This Noon

Herbert Arnold, one of the faculty of the Cote School for Boys in Munich, Bavaria, reached the home of his mother Mrs. Annie Curtis Arnold of Elm street, on Friday from the war zone. Mr. Arnold has been in Germany for about two years, having gone there directly after attaining his degree at Harvard. Several of his letters just previous to and early in the war pointed out the extensive preparations of the German people for the war. His return was somewhat of a surprise, word of actual dates not being received because mail has been generally held up on the other side.

Five steamships loaded with returning Americans arrived in New York Friday, upon which were several Quincy people. On the Creole, the steamship built at Quincy and especially chartered by the Raymond-Whitcomb Co., were Mrs. Joseph L. Whiton, Mrs. Clara F. Whiton and Miss Ruth Whiton. They were met on the arrival of the steamship by President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council. Mrs. Whiton went abroad primarily to get rid of excitement and to have a quiet rest. The excitement she sought to avoid, however, came in an unexpected form, when war was suddenly declared.

Recent letters from Mrs. Whiton state that her party lost all of their baggage and all the clothing they had was what they had on. Additional clothing it was necessary to purchase as needed but funds were low. That they are glad to be once more on American soil there is no question for in one of the letters to her son Mrs. Whiton said that once she reached America again she would never again step on foreign soil.

Mrs. Whiton is thoroughly tired out by her experiences in Europe during the war scare, and is more than glad to be at her home in Quincy once more. Mrs. Whiton was in Holland when war was declared and immediately after left for Paris where she arrived safely.

In Paris she went to a hotel which was run by a German, but she had not been there long before the Germans were taken away. While there she said the authorities knew that someone was sending news to the Germans about the mobilization and other matters in Paris, but it was some time before the source of the leak was discovered.

One day the bell boy at the hotel going to the roof discovered a German in hiding there who had a wireless outfit and was sending news to the Germans. The bell boy notified the authorities and the officers placed the man under arrest. He was taken back of the hotel. There was one shot and the man was never seen again. He had been shot as a spy.

She was four days in Paris before she was able to go on to London, and knowing that she could not take any baggage they took a few articles of clothing and left the remainder behind.

Coming from Paris the trains were very crowded, and some richly dressed ladies were obliged to ride in the men's toilet room all the way to London.

While in London she says that Mr. Percival the conductor of the Raymond-Whitcomb Co. was more than kind, and that he did all that was possible for man to do for their comfort. He made several trips back to Paris from London, even going as far as Holland to recover baggage of his excursionists. He was successful in obtaining all of Mrs. Whiton and her daughters' baggage. Mrs. Whiton says that too much praise can not be given to Mr. Percival.

While in London her party were all right, although there was a lot of excitement. The Raymond-Whitcomb Co. arranged for the S. S. Creole to take their excursionists back to America, and her coming was anxiously awaited. When at last she arrived the steamship was not allowed to come to the wharf, but had to anchor outside, and all of the passengers were transferred from the wharf to the steamship in small tug boats.

There was some delay in the sailing of the Creole, as she was out of coal, and it was necessary to get a new supply which was obtained with some difficulty.

Mrs. Whiton said that there was no bomb dropping in Paris while she was there, but several bombs were dropped in Paris while she was there, but several bombs were dropped just after she left. These dropped in the street and a number of persons were killed. None of the building however were struck by the bombs. These bombs were dropped by German aviators.

Once the start was made for America, the trip was uneventful, and it was a happy party when the tall buildings of New York came in sight. The steamer docked a little after 10 o'clock Friday, and she was met by her son Joseph L. Whiton who had gone over to New York to meet her. A train was immediately taken for Boston, and they arrived in Quincy about 7 o'clock.

Mrs. Whiton immediately went to her son's home while her daughter went to Quincy Point to the home of her sister, Mrs. Meads, where she is at the present time.

The following Milton people have recently returned from Europe: Rev. Alan M. Taylor, Miss Rose K. Taylor, Mrs. Samuel C. Murfitt, Miss Dorothy Murfitt, Philip Murfitt and Miss Ruth Whittier.

Others to arrive in New York on Friday were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller of 231 Liberty street, who came on the San Giorgio.

Manuel Perry, personal representative of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation to the Italian navy is a passenger on the Canopic, due here next week. Word of the sailing of Mr. Perry was received Friday.

Mr. Perry returns after a stay of nearly two years in Italy, having gone across to direct the assembling of engines built at the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation of Quincy for the torpedo boats of the Italian navy. His return was delayed owing to the experiments of naval architects in trying to overcome a tremendous propeller vibration due to the unusual design of the boats.

Mr. Perry accompanied John F. Paige, chief engineer of the Fore River Corporation, who had charge of the installing of the turbines Mr. Paige was offered a commission in the Italian navy, and although it was currently reported that Mr. Perry had also received a similar offer, this has been denied.

A letter received by Mrs. Lydia C. Hultman this morning from her daughter Mrs. Louis Eckert, from Fiume, Austria-Hungary, dated Aug. 16, says that there is plenty of excitement there at the present time. All the news there is war news, and that is not allowed to be printed. When England declared war against Austria, she says, all the Englishmen were placed under arrest, and will be confined until the war is over. One English friend made an attempt to get away with his family in an automobile by making a dash for Italy, but he was captured on the frontier and brought back under arrest.

Austrian officials visited the factories and placed all Englishmen under arrest, not even allowing them to go, to or send word to their families. It is thought she says that the English prisoners will be sent to Bohemia. She also expresses a hope that America will keep out of this war in which all other nations are now involved.

Work at the plant where her husband is employed is a little quiet, and she says that she may possibly come home, although somewhat afraid to start, as the last passenger steamer from that port struck a mine and was sunk. She says that she is all right, and for her mother not to worry about her.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

FOOT BALL CANDIDATES

Thirty Out for Quincy High Team--Good Schedule

The first practice of the Quincy High school football team brought out thirty three candidates, among them eleven who may be classed as veterans from last years squad. Just what the result of the season will be, however, is hard to predict, as graduation took from the team four good players, White, Young, Jenkins and Page, the first three linemen and the first string quarter back.

It is expected that Reardon who had considerable experience last year may be able to plug up one of the holes left, and Reynolds and Simmons from their weight should develop enough to fill the others. Brundage, Atkins and Lakin also seem to have possibilities. At present Crocker looks like a logical candidate at quarter, although Sanborn and Hunt are also out for the place. The former played several games at end last year.

Because of the splendid showing of last year's team Manager Barstow has had his hands full in arranging a schedule. Every team dated, with the possible exception of Hingham; may be classed as one of the "big" teams of Greater Boston. He has found it practically impossible to book any easy terms for early games. While this, of course, is in a way, a feather in Quincy's cap, it gives the 1914 team a particularly hard problem to solve. The one open date o nthe schedule has now been filled by Boston English High school, will play here on Saturday, Nov. 14.

Those out for the backfield are Crosscup, Crocker, Bogan, Browne, Jepson, Sanborn, Smith, Hunt, O'Connor. The candidates for end are Capt. Larkin, Arthur, Beaton, Brown, Davis, McDonald, Sears, DiSenso, Hildebrand, Whitcher. The line candidates are Brundage, Reardon, Simmons, Hamlin, Lakin, Reynolds, Atkins, Foy, Ela, Herbert, Martell, Anderson, Nixon, Gilliat, Wilson.

CHAMPION AT HOP, STEP JUMP

McLaughlin Equals the Record of 45 ft. 9 in

James F. McLaughlin of West Quincy, who became New England champion of the hop, step and jump at the Rockingham fair games by clearing a distance of 45 ft. 5 1-2 in., created a sensation at the annual junior championship games of the Amateur Athletic Association at Baltimore, Md., on Friday, by adding three and one half inches to that distance, and equaled the record 45 ft., 9 in. for the event.

McLaughlin was chosen to represent the Boston Athletic Association after his splendid showing at the Rockingham fair. He has worn the Unicorn for several years, and although he gave unusual promise as a jumper, it was not until this fall that record holders commenced to look at him with anxiety.

In leaving West Quincy Thursday he promised to do something handsome at the games. He outdistanced the second place man, F. H. Prem of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A. by nearly three feet.

"James" is the third son of a family of athletes. His brother "Jack" is a broad jumper and dash man and "Tom," although he never closely followed athletics, has always been able to make the century in close to 10 seconds time. The boys, and their sister Louise, make their home with their mother, Mrs. Mary McLaughlin on Bates avenue.

their city, all realizing to a fuller extent what their home town means and in what measure their future and the future of coming generations depend upon its success. It is believed here that this demonstration of unity of purpose was one of the first of its kind in America.

The parade was reviewed by Gov. Chas. Miller, Mayor Harrison Howell Congressmen Franklin Brockson and other national, state and city officials, from the grandstand on the Delaware, state fair grounds.

A number of prizes were awarded to the paraders, the prize for the best looking organization in line going to the journeymen barbers.

In the evening a dinner was given at the Hotel duPont by the committee in charge to the Delaware-Maryland peninsula editors.

BOARD OF TRADE.

Many have received invitations to a public meeting of QUINCY Board of Trade next Wednesday evening at Colonial hall, which is called "for the purpose of awakening renewed interest in the board and increasing its membership." The speakers have not yet been announced, but the invitation says—"Speakers will address the meeting, explaining what the board has already done, and the certainty of increased accomplishment with a larger membership."

A Board of Trade is one of the organizations needed in all live communities, and should be well supported by the people generally. Too much stress should not be laid upon obtaining new industries, because today QUINCY has more industries per capita than Boston or any city or town in the Metropolitan district. QUINCY has one industry to every 202 people, and stands high in the list for number of employees and value of product.

Our Board of Trade should direct its efforts to improve the financial condition of the city; the equalization of taxes; a reduction of the debt and interest; a lower tax rate; a loyalty to the Mayor and City Council; and strive to secure representative business men as candidates for the City Council. All these things are vitally important to the business interests of QUINCY.

Certainly, QUINCY should welcome all new industries, as the city has a water front and much land available for manufacturing, but a Board of Trade should also attract wealthy residents and work for a beautiful QUINCY.

NEW VOTERS.

The Registrars of Voters met at City Hall last evening to revise the voting lists. During the session 44 names were added to the lists, as follows: Ward One, 9; Ward Two, 5; Ward Three, 11; Ward Four, 14; Ward Five, 2; Ward Six, 3.

NOT YET TIME TO TALK PEACE

England Determined to Press War to Definite Conclusion

STRAUS' TRIP TO WASHINGTON

Will Be of No Avail In Face of Fact That Destruction of Kaiser's Rule Is Planned—British Peace Advocates Now Giving Hearty Support In the Present Conflict

London, Sept. 12.—The Times prints a Washington cable dispatch which seems to attach importance to peace rumors emanating from the German embassy.

There does not seem to be the slightest peg in London on which to hang even remote possibilities of peace. The Germans had already begun to use the prospects of their taking Paris as an argument for making peace with France, but the quick answer to that is found in the treaty which was signed that day between England, France and Russia that there can be no separate peace.

Since then the Germans, who for several weeks had been forcing the allies back, have suffered a check and now are retreating. Any proposal emanating from Germany is bound to be laughed at.

Surprise is expressed here that Oscar Straus, who has been in London and knows the unalterable resolve of the British nation either to suffer destruction or to destroy the kaiser, should have taken his trip to Washington to arrange a conference between Mr. Bryan and Count von Bernstorff looking to peace proposals. The unanimous opinion here is that it is a waste of breath.

The same sentiment is expressed regarding a report that the new pope is sounding the nations that recognize the holy see with a view to ascertaining their views on an appeal on behalf of peace.

Indeed, it is much doubted whether any Catholic nation except Austria would consider peace at this time, when Germany's star appears to be on the descendant, especially in view of the reports that the Germans are shooting priests, sacking convents and occupying monasteries in Belgium.

The foreign office is without any further communication than the first received from Bryan concerning peace negotiations, and English diplomats are not expecting the United States to take additional steps to negotiate peace at this stage of the conflict. English officials insist that they exerted every effort to avert the war, and, now being in the field, the allies must fight until the issues are definitely settled for all time.

The British government is said to be confident that even the extreme peace advocates of England are giving their hearty support to the army and navy in the present conflict, and are unwilling that the English should give serious thoughts to peace overtures until they are positive there is a genuine desire for peace on the part of their opponents.

AUSTRIANS WANT PEACE

Bitter Feeling Against Germany For Failure to Support Them

There is increasingly bitter feeling in Vienna against Germany and an almost universal demand in popular circles that the government sue for peace. The acknowledgement that the Austrian armies were compelled to meet the Russian assaults alone and unsupported while Germany invaded France, with the result that the Austrian army was crushed by overwhelming numbers, has resulted in a storm of bitter criticism of the government.

The known losses are enormous, and it is believed they have been far greater than the government will admit. So strong and bitter is the feeling that it is not believed the government can hold out much longer against it. Unless Austria sues for peace in the near future it will be hard for the government to prevent stormy scenes.

COSTLY MILITARY POWER

Diplomats Say Nations Are Facing Disarmament or Bankruptcy

That disarmament by all nations must follow the present war is the opinion of many high diplomats at Washington. It is pointed out at the embassies of some of the belligerents that if the military power of the countries continues as strong as it has been in the past it will bankrupt the nations.

At one of the Washington embassies it was declared that if the nations wish to develop great humanitarian and educational schemes they must cease spending the millions of dollars annually for war. It was said that one country, which until the opening of the war had been developing its workmen's insurance system, would find it impossible to spend another cent in this way if armament taxes continued.

KAISER'S ARMY FROM THE WEST

Strengthens Forces Fighting Russians In East Prussia

GREAT BATTLE IS IMPENDING

Vast Force From French Front Causes Czar's Troops to Retire—Attempt to Surround German-Austrians In Russian Poland Fails—Five German Army Corps Aiding Austria

Petrograd, Sept. 12.—The Russian forces in East Prussia are retiring on a new defensive position to meet an attack by a large German army which has just arrived from the west. This force is reported to be made up of several German army corps withdrawn from the French front and more than 200,000 members of the second line.

They are heavily supported with artillery and it is believed here that the great eastern German fortresses have been denuded of their fighting force to increase the forces in a general assault on the Russian columns. The Russians are retiring slowly to positions previously selected and the war office states that a great battle is impending.

The Russian advance guard, made up chiefly of cavalry, finding the Germans in great force in the Lake Mauer region, has withdrawn on the main column. It is stated that Russian re-enforcements have been sent forward and that the Russian right army is to be strengthened immediately. It is stated that this movement will in no way interfere with the campaign against the Austrians, which is being pressed with a great battle now in progress in Galicia.

It is understood the Germans are also sending an army to attempt the relief of Koenigsberg, which is closely invested by the Russian forces. The town has been constantly bombarded for a week and much damage has been done. It is understood the force sent toward Koenigsberg comprises two army corps. The Germans are concentrating along the line of the Alle river.

The movement designed to surround the Austrian-German force that was retreating from Russian Poland failed because the forces sent to cut the line of retreat were outnumbered by the enemy.

That the Austrians have now been very strongly re-enforced by the Germans is admitted. There are reported to be not less than five army corps of first line German troops now fighting with the Austrians along a battle line that extends from Tomaszow, almost on the Russian Poland-Austrian frontier, southward in an irregular line through Rawarusska, then west of Lemberg to the Dniester river country.

This force, which has been on the defensive after the decisive defeats at Lemberg and Rawarusska, has been reorganized by the German general officers, and the fighting, according to the general staff, is developing rapidly into another desperate battle.

There is intense interest here over the report that the German crown prince, with a good part of the veteran army which captured Longwy and overflowed northeastern France, is en route to the East Prussian front. Military experts here believe the report because they say the crown prince is very familiar with the German eastern defenses. It is also reported that Field Marshal von der Goltz, who was recently named governor of the captured Belgian territory, also has been ordered to the east. The field marshal originated the German eastern defenses that are now threatened by the Russian advance.

While there is no confirmation here of either move, both have been expected. The reports that there have been heavy withdrawals of German troops from the active army in France have been confirmed.

BIG SUFFRAGE VOTE

Women of Cook County, Ills., Cast Fourth of Total Primary Ballot

Chicago, Sept. 12.—Size of the suffrage vote in the Illinois primaries was one of the surprises developed when Cook county returns were completed.

Though women were permitted to vote only for sanitary trustees and local offices of comparatively little consequence, they cast 40,000 votes in Cook county, about one-fourth of the total.

With state returns not complete, Roger C. Sullivan's plurality in the fight for the Democratic senatorial nomination is now placed at 60,000. That of Senator Sherman, who was nominated by the Republicans, will exceed 70,000.

Kidnaped

A Story of Venice

By JAMES VOLNEY

Copyright, by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Anne had been bored for two days, and she took no pains to conceal the fact.

Since she had joined them at Milan three days before, after a month in Lucerne, Belle, her newly wed sister, and Jim, her new brother-in-law, had kept an anxious eye upon her, for the family always dreaded those periods when Anne was bored.

Anne did not like Venice.

On the plea of writing a letter she had remained at the hotel, while Belle and John visited the shops in the piazza, promising to meet them in front of the cathedral in time for a ride at sunset.

She was strolling leisurely across the great square when she noticed a tall young American—you can always tell him abroad—gazing up at the bronze horses.

"I WOULDN'T TELL HIM IF I WERE YOU."

He was alone, and as he turned away he met the glance of the bright looking American girl.

"I wish I knew him," sighed Anne "He's the first American I've seen here that doesn't look like a professional tourist. And then he could ride with us this afternoon, and I wouldn't have to feel that I'm the third that makes the crowd when I'm with Belle and John."

Here she caught sight of that couple, Belle enthusiastically feeding dozens of the dirty blue pigeons which infest the square, while a half dozen photographers were clamoring to take her picture as thus engaged to send to her friends at home.

"Let's go to Lido," suggested Belle. "It isn't far, and we will be back in time to meet the train."

There was no dissent, and John aided her to step into the gondola. He stretched out his hand toward Anne to perform a like service for her, but she was gazing intently at a tall young man who was strolling by.

"There's some one from New York," she said to Belle and John. She raised her voice and called just as the young man turned, "Mr. Henderson!" She waved her hand toward him. He hesitated a moment and then came toward them.

"So glad to see you here!" exclaimed Anne enthusiastically. "My sister and new brother-in-law," she introduced briefly as she shook hands with him. "It's fine to meet an American one knows. We're just going out for an hour's ride. Won't you join us?"

The young man accepted the invitation and took the cross seat at the rear of the boat, sitting beside Anne, while the others sat farther toward the front. "Mr. Henderson is a friend of Ella's," Anne explained to the others.

"I was so surprised to see you," she said. "I didn't know you were over here, and I haven't heard from Ella but once since I left New York. Did you know me when I called to you?" she asked pleasantly. "I hardly expected you to, because we had met only that once at Ella's."

"Certainly I knew you," he replied readily. "In fact, I thought I recognized you when you passed me back there near the cathedral, but you glanced at me and didn't give any sign of recognition," he added, glancing at her face, which was slightly flushed.

"I was about in the same state," Anne answered. "I thought I knew you, but I wasn't certain. But now you must tell me all about Ella and what they were doing when you left. I sailed in May just a couple of days after I met you. When did you sail?"

"About the middle of June," he replied. "But I'm afraid I can't tell you of what was going on at that time, as I was so busy getting my business in shape I didn't get around with that crowd much."

"But you have certainly heard from Ella lots of time, haven't you?" she inquired.

"Well, to tell the truth, I haven't heard a word from her since I came over here," he said slowly. "Why did you think I would have heard?"

"From what I heard in New York the little time I was with Ella I certainly thought there was to be a wedding in October, and in the one letter I have received from her since then she said nothing about any change of plans. Of course, however, I don't want to pursue a painful subject."

"I assure you the subject is not so painful," he said after quite a pause.

"By the way, did you hear about Mamie and Kate?" he exclaimed suddenly.

Anne gazed at him with a startled look on her face, then shook her head.

"No. What have they done now?" she asked.

"It nearly prostrated Ella, although she was to blame in the case of Kate. You know Kate was always high tempered, and one morning, I don't know exactly what she did, but Ella gave her a beating, and she ran away. Yes, it was shocking," he said in reply to Anne's exclamation of horror. "Ella really thought a lot of Kate, but of course Mamie was her favorite."

"Did Kate come back?" inquired Anne with considerable interest.

Henderson appeared puzzled. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"Never mind Kate, though," said Anne hurriedly. "Tell me about Mamie."

"It was only the next day that Mamie met with a terrible accident," he said. "Ella had ridden out on Long Island with some friends. They stopped at a florist's garden, leaving Mamie at the gate. A trolley car came along, and Mamie, evidently not seeing it, stepped directly in front. She was terribly hurt. There was no doctor near, and no one could do anything for her while she was suffering. Ella saw that the end was only a question of a few hours, and she borrowed a pistol from the florist and shot Mamie through the head, killing her!"

Anne gasped and turned pale.

"I don't believe it," she exclaimed. "It is horrible!"

"It is true," said Henderson positively.

Anne was silent for a time. Finally she turned to him and asked:

"Were you at the Turners' garden party?"

He shook his head.

"I suppose you heard of what Lily did there?"

Henderson looked surprised.

"No?" she queried. "It was rather shocking, but Ella shouldn't have taken Lily with her. There were lots of people there and—er"— Anne turned her head in embarrassment. "Well, Lily jumped in the lake, just for fun, of course, and swam around it several times."

"I had heard nothing of such a proceeding," said her companion coldly. "I hardly think it could have happened. Even Lily wouldn't do such a thing."

They were nearing the plazza by this time.

"If you are going on to the station I had better get out here," he called to John, and the latter gave the necessary directions to the gondoliers after expressing polite regrets that Henderson had to leave them.

Anne turned toward Henderson.

"You know Lily, of course?" she questioned.

He laughed and then said frankly: "I'll confess that I have been puzzled several times this evening, and one of the puzzles is Lily. Who is she?"

"I'll tell you if you tell me who Kate and Mamie are," replied Anne.

"Agreed. Kate and Mamie are Ella's blue ribbon mares. I thought every one knew them."

"Lily is Ella's Pomeranian that always wins the prizes at the bench shows. Her picture's been in the papers dozens of times, and I thought every one knew her. Do you really know any one of the name of Ella?" she asked her companion abruptly, turning and staring him directly in the face.

He was not confused at all as he laughed and replied:

"I can't recall any Ella among my acquaintances just now. Do you know of any?"

"You are to be congratulated on your imagination and nerve," said Anne angrily. "Ella is one of my dearest friends, and I really thought I knew you when I first called to you. When I discovered my mistake we had already started on the ride, and I didn't like to denounce you then."

"Very kind of you," he said dryly. "But the fact remains that I was kidnaped by you."

Anne laughed.

"You were really heaven sent. I would have bored Belle and her husband, and they would have bored me while we were waiting for the train. We are going on to the station now, but I am rather puzzled as to whether I should tell the one we are to meet about this."

It was a sort of question, and Henderson replied:

"To whom would you confide it? Who is it that is coming?"

"The man I am to marry as soon as I reach home," she said gently.

The gondola had stopped. Henderson shook hands with her.

"I wouldn't tell him if I were you," he said, bending over. "I'm going on to the hotel now to join my wife, and I shan't tell her."

"I knew at once she was trying to make game of me," he muttered as he went along. "I wonder if the little impostor is really engaged to be married, and I wonder if she believes I am married."

"I wonder if he is really married and if he believes I am engaged," smiled Anne as the gondola glided toward the railroad station.

FUNERAL OF MRS. HAYDEN

The funeral of Mrs. Samuel P. Hayden was held at the home of her son, Herbert A. Hayden, 68 Cleverly court, Friday at 2.30 P. M. It was one of the largest attended funerals in many years in Quincy, as the deceased had many church affiliations, also a large family consisting of five sons and one daughter. Many friends associated with her in church work at the Point church were in attendance to pay tribute to a beloved departed member.

Two ministers were in attendance, the Rev. Stephen Lang of the Point church and the Rev. Albert Watson of Braintree. Both pastors spoke feelingly of the departed, who for eight years had suffered as a martyr. Mrs. Hayden was beloved by all who had met her in church or every day life. The Pilgrim male quartett rendered many beautiful selections.

There was a profusion of flowers, among which were the following: A standing wreath from Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hayden, Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Hayden, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hayden; mound from five of her grand children, Mrs. Bertha Hayden McCurdy, Miss Viola Hayden, Forrest E. Hayden, Irving Hayden and Harold Hayden; wreath from Mr. and Mrs. Fred Boyden; pillow from Henry Porter and family; pillow, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Hayden; pillow, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hayden and family.

The Quincy Highway department in due respect to their co-worker William A. Hayden forwarded a magnificent wreath; a beautiful wreath was received from Hose 4 of which Charles Hayden was a member. Sprays from the Misses Sampson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith, Mrs. A. Tilden, Mr. and Mrs. Granville Field; Mrs. A. B. Colburn, Miss Jessie Folsom, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Helquist, Mrs. G. H. BRAINTREE Y. M. C. A.

A largely attended and enthusiastic meeting of the officers and directors of the Braintree Y. M. C. A. was held at the home of Herbert A. Bryant, West street, Wednesday evening. Reports were made by the various committee chairmen and by the treasurer. The latter's report showed that the expenses and salaries incident to conducting the summer camp at Manomet were about eighty-five dollars more than the amounts received from those who attended camp. The committees particularly the educational and social work committee, of which Supt. Ralph L. Wiggin is chairman, are planning for public occasions during the coming winter and a lyceum or similar course is under consideration.

A feature of the meeting was the presence of Camp Superintendent Irving T. Gumb, and the detailed report which he submitted of the season's work. His report was well loaded with suggestions for the future and was greatly appreciated by the directors. It shows Mr. Gumb thoroughly appreciates the field for wider activities of the association in Braintree as well as during the summer camp period. Carl W. Phelps of Wesleyan College, who acted as cook this summer, and Carl P. Leadbetter, assistant superintendent, were also present and spoke briefly of the summer's pleasant experiences. They, as well as Mr. Gumb, are enthusiastic for the future of the summer camp.

IRVING T. GUMB.

Extracts from the superintendent's report are as follows: "For six weeks the boys occupied the camp. A total of seventy-one boys and leaders were members of the camp during this period. The last two weeks of the season were given over to the use of the girls of Braintree. Twenty-five girls and leaders made up the membership of the camp for these two weeks. Many visitors came to camp and the visitors' record book shows a total of one hundred and forty-one signatures. There was an average of nineteen campers every week for eight weeks.

All the work was planned to give the very best of camp life to the boys and girls, and to present to them as far as possible the real ideals and principles of christian life. The activities were all arranged and supervised as carefully and systematically as possible, with due consideration to all from the oldest to the youngest. In the evenings various indoor and even outdoor games were conducted, camp-fire nights, mock-trials, story-telling nights, marshmallow toasts, and visitors' nights were also among the activities. The camp always had a representative base-ball team and many games were played, with only one defeat on the camp's record. A camp newspaper, named the "Camp Log" was published for three editions, but the lack of means to print the paper prevented further work along this line.

For both the girls and boys an honor emblem system was conducted. Much earnest work and real endeavor was shown on the part of many boys and girls who were trying to win the emblem. Thirty-five boys and ten girls were successful in doing the work and feats required to win an emblem.

A log cabin has been started and gives a good opportunity for future work by the boys as well as being of much use when completed.

The religious life of the camp was by no means neglected. The morning chapel services and the devotions in the tents with the two services on Sunday furnished plenty of food for thought, and we hope placed many of the campers on a little higher plane of thinking and living. The camp met with no serious illness or accidents and thoughout the whole summer we fell that the campers were developing themselves physically, mentally, and spiritually.

The camp season has come to a close. Several ideals have been before us. Some have been reached. Others, for lack of time and equipment, have not. It is our wish that the season has been a successful one for the Association and thus for the boys and girls of Braintree."

Many other important features of the report are equally interesting as those quoted. Among the suggestions is one for a name for the camp, other than "Manomet." The tribes of Indians who occupied the Manomet territory were chiefly the Wampanoags and Pokanokets. The Chief of Manomet was Canacum, and some of the boys and girls who did not attend camp this season and have heard the glowing reports from those who did attend may be suspected of ringing a change in the spelling of the old Chief's name (which it is hoped will not disturb him in his Happy Hunting Grounds) from Can-a-cum to Can-I-cum Camp for next season.

"ALONG CAME RUTH" QUINCY NIGHT

Special Honors to Miss Mildred Gray Huston As Quincy's Ruth Ambrose

All the Quincy Boosters Are Invited to Join the Party

Tuesday evening will be QUINCY night at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, as Fred E. Wright, the manager, has reserved nearly the entire orchestra for QUINCY people who have become enthusiastic over "Along Came Ruth," the Board of Trade play now in its third week.

The Daily Ledger of Friday recommended that every member of the QUINCY Board of Trade should see this comedy of exceptional appeal and interest a—mingling of sentiment and humor—before the public meeting of Wednesday evening, believing that they would be enthused over boosting their own city. In Friday's paper Miss Mildred Gray Huston was also suggested as a "Ruth Ambrose" for QUINCY.

The management of the Plymouth theatre evidently appreciated the publicity which the Daily Ledger gave "Along Come Ruth" as will be seen by the following letter, and proposes to put QUINCY on the map also:

Plymouth Theatre,
Boston, Sept. 12, 1914.

Mr. Frank F. Prescott,
Editor QUINCY Daily Ledger:

Dear Sir—I acknowledge receipt of yours enclosing clipping from the "Quincy Daily Ledger." Replying to same, I beg to express sincere thanks for the little "boost" of "Along Came Ruth," and assure you that I do most certainly appreciate such a courtesy.

As I understand it, Miss Huston, is now, or is to be a second "Miss Ambrose." I am sure "Miss Ambrose" will wish her all kinds of success in her undertaking.

In honor to Miss Huston, and in appreciation of your kindness, I am enclosing a box for the performance of Tuesday evening, Sept. 15th.

At that time I would be pleased to meet you, and Miss Huston, and would take pleasure in introducing Miss Huston to the real Miss Ambrose, back of the stage.

Very truly yours,
Fred E. Wright.

On Saturday Miss Ruth Ambrose of the Oldport Board of Trade again visited QUINCY, accompanied by Mr. Davis the publicity man of the Plymouth Theatre, and they saw several of the QUINCY live wires. Many of them have made arrangements to attend the production of "Along Came Ruth" on Tuesday evening. It is hoped that all the QUINCY Boosters will join the party. They will obtain many ideas showing how to boom a town.

Ruth is a wide-awake, unspoiled American girl who is credited with having wakened up Oldport, Maine. Oldport was a shipping city of some importance in the days of sailing vessels, but of no importance since the big trans-Atlantic lines carried all the trade to the big ports. Oldport had resigned itself to its fate. It was a back-number, a memory. And then—"Along Came Ruth."

This is the title of Holman Day's brilliant comedy of little Oldport and how it came to life. Nobody can draw New England "down-east" folks with a more humorous, more appreciative touch than Holman Day. Henry W. Savage offers this comedy, which will touch the heart and the laugh-center of New England, at the Plymouth Theatre. You'll love Ruth. You'll exhaust yourself laughing at the town characters—not the "truly rural" stage types, but real men and women with quaint quirks and a "down east" tang to their talk. The same gifted actors appear in the roles which they created in New York.

Among those in the Quincy party will be Miss Mildred Gray Huston, (the Ruth Ambrose of Quincy,) President John L. Hamilton and Mrs. Hamilton, Editor Frank F. Prescott and Mrs. Prescott who will occupy box C. Also in the orchestra Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane and Mrs. Crane, President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council and Mrs. Whiton, Col. Henry L. Kincaide and Mrs. Kincaide, Mr. and Mrs. Herman F. McIntire, Fred E. Tupper, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Johnson, Secretary John O. Hall of the Board of Trade, W. H. Teasdale, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Elcock, Mr. and Mrs. William Patterson, and others.

The QUINCY Boosters will present Miss Ruth Ambrose, the leading lady, a large floral tribute, which will be a

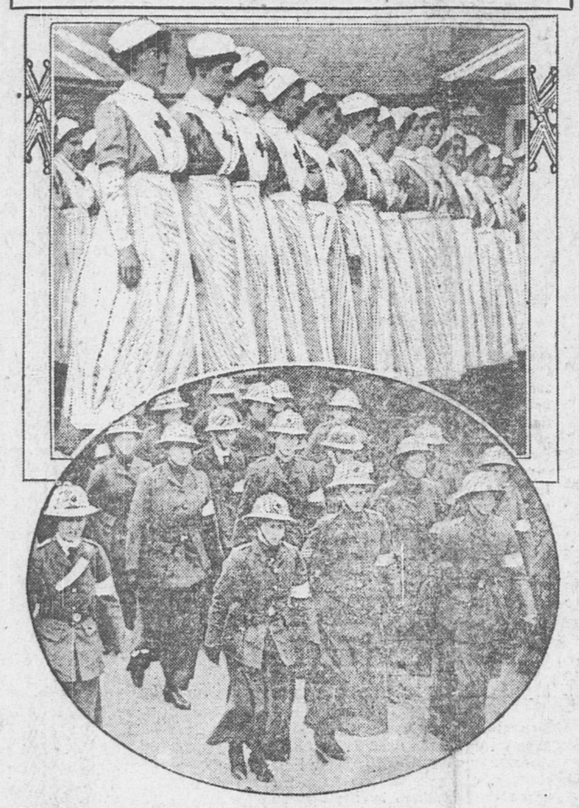
Types of English Nurses Now on Duty In the Great European War.



Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

The year that marks the greatest war in history also marks the fiftieth anniversary of the Red Cross. For just fifty years Red Cross nurses have been widely recognized in time of war and have administered to the wounded and dying. In 1864, when the civil war in this country was drawing to a close, a convention of nations met at Geneva and published and ratified the first code governing the operation of the Red Cross. Since then there have been many revisions and modifications, all tending to extend the immunity of the nurses in wartime. Under the final revision of 1906 the Red Cross was recognized by thirty-five countries, and it is now operating in Europe under that revision. The upper picture shows regular Red Cross nurses of England. The other shows the Yorkshire yeomanry of nurses, a special corps who wear militant uniforms and are drilled in military tactics.

OPEN MEETING BOARD OF TRADE

Will Be Addressed By Prominent Citizens

After seeing "Along Came Ruth" at the Plymouth theatre Tuesday, the members of the Board of Trade will be well primed to start their boom for membership at the open meeting to be held Wednesday evening at Colonial hall. Invitations to attend this meeting and help boom QUINCY through this organization have been sent out, and all will be welcome, even if they have not received a special invitation.

The meeting has been called for 8 o'clock and will be presided over by John L. Hamilton, the president of the Board. Prominent citizens are expected to address the meeting and tell some of the potent reasons why every business man, and for that matter, every man interested in the welfare and upbuilding of QUINCY, should become affiliated with the organization.

The Board is trying for a membership of 1,000, and when that is attained, they promise a club room, with offices, committee rooms, hall, etc.

With a large membership the Board can do much for QUINCY. It is an old saying that in union there is strength, which is another way of saying that a large membership in any organization means strength. Good music will be furnished during the evening, and as noted above everybody is invited to be present.

OPENING OF NEW SQUANTUM CHURCH

Greeting Service at Which Rev. T. W. Davison Was Assisted by Quincy and Wollaston Pastors

A Proud and Eventful Day for the Seaside Resort

Squantum's new church was opened for services on Sunday, although the dedication of the edifice will not take place until next Sunday. It was not until midnight Saturday night that workmen completed their labors on the interior work, but success crowned their efforts, and the church presented a finished and attractive appearance.

It was a proud and eventful day for Squantum, and there is every reason for the people being enthusiastic. Several from Atlantic, Wollaston and Quincy joined with the Squantum people in the services. Those who saw the church for the first time were surprised to see such a beautiful house of worship so prettily situated.

Over 200 attended the services, which were held at 4 P. M., including a large number of boys and girls, and young people as well as adults. On the altar were several floral tributes —asters, dahlias, wild flowers, etc.

The service opened with voluntary by Ethel Jones Bostwick, pianist, which was followed by the hymn, "Come Thou Almighty King" in which the congregation united. Rev. T. W. Davison, the pastor, offered the invocation, all uniting at the close in the Lord's Prayer. A beautiful duet, "Angel of Peace" was sung by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Leonard.

The Scripture reading was by the pastor, and prayer was offered by Rev. Sampson Nicholls, who said there was something beautiful about the first service in any edifice as no spirits grieved.

A pleasing solo was given by Mrs. Ethel Brigham, "Let not your heart be troubled."

The pastor reviewed the movement that led up to the building of the church. Four years ago services were first held during the summer in a tent, and again the second summer, but they were discontinued because during the week the boys cut the ropes and caused the tent to collapse. It was then decided to wait until something some definite should be undertaken. About a year ago services began in the Vacation House, and phenomenal success had followed, so that today Squantum has this commodious church.

He expressed appreciation of the men who had labored with time, money and nerve. He thanked the builders, the contractor, the members of committees and others. He early recognized that there was first class talent in Squantum. The interior decoration was a gift and first class work. In closing he asked for a generous offering for the building committee.

The offering was taken by James H. Sumner and Herbert A. Smith, and at the close of the service several subscriptions were added.

It was announced that Dr. Emery would preach the dedicatory sermon next Sunday.

Hymn 188, "The Church's one foundation" was sung by the congregation.

Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott the pastor of Bethany Congregational church, brought the greetings of Quincy people. He said he scarcely anticipated seeing so commodious a church, or one so well filled. It was very promising to see so many boys and girls present. I cannot be with you next Sunday at the dedication but will remember you at that hour. You have

All the school teachers have to do to be popular is to show special favors and partiality to every child.

President Wilson has joined the "Buy a bale of cotton" movement, and his bale can be stored in the East Room of the White House without crowding the family a bit.

The European powers are trying to lick their enemies by damaging Uncle Sam's trade and endangering the safety of his travellers by sea.

If they lay an extra tax on cigarettes, many men will have to ask their wives for more pocket money.

We've got the Monroe doctrine between us and destiny.

The sufferings of some of the tourists in Europe, with all their baggage lost but six or eight trunks, excite universal compassion.

Montana miners have been threatening to burn the city of Butte. but they kindly offer the inhabitants a few days grace before putting them to death.

On account of the shatting off of the demand from Europe, the star boarder feels justified in asking for two oysters in his soup this year.

The bleacherite feels as if he personally had done something big when he sees his favorite ball player knock out a three bagger.

It is suggested that Congress reduce expenses rather than lay new war taxes. The trouble with this is that it is a good business proposition.

The boys will always bring a pail of water for the ball team, but don't humiliate the youngsters by asking them to bring one to mother in the kitchen.

What a difference in the management of fairs! Weymouth did not let the Quincy people know that they were holding a fair last week, and few were interested; but Brockton always advertises here in all the newspapers and everyone goes to the Brockton Fa ir. Which is the more successful?

PRAYER FOR PEACE.

Even the man who looks at life with an interrogation point may well attend church on October 4, the day that President Wilson has set apart for prayer for peace. There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in the philosophy of some of us.

The rationalist finds the older conceptions of prayer difficult to harmonize. Yet any thoughtful study of the literature of the subject will reveal a host of striking and well attested occurrences, indicating the efficacy of influences not accounted for on any material basis.

If the nations of Europe could but look at their quarrels, either from the Christian, or the business point of view, they would settle them and call off their armed men in a day. Seen either in the light of the teachings of Jesus, or from the most sordid money aspect, the war is both wrong and senseless.

These fighting powers are sensitive to American opinion. They began by hustling American tourists around in a very unceremonious way. Some one told them that the favorable opinion of the United States was going to be very useful to them before they got through. It was amusing to see the celerity with which the attitude toward our travellers improved.

It looks as if this day of prayer for peace might be a regular "Go to church Sunday." The folly and crime and tragedy of this war will be dwelt upon. A wave of sentiment adverse to war, and a vast impluse of sympathy, will sweep over the land.

If there are spiritual forces that play from heart to heart, of which so many intimations are found in human life, it would seem as if this outpouring of feeling must have its influence One would think also that a common sense of shame and decent regard for the opinion of mankind would lead the powers to see in this demonstration the desirability of ending so shocking a condition of affairs.

INVADERS ARE HARD PRESSED BY DEFENDERS

Even the Centre of German Lines Is Demoralized

EVERY SECTION NOW REPORTED IN RETREAT

Vast Army Under German Crown Prince in Position of Extreme Peril —Awaiting Disaster of Appalling Magnitude Unless Route Is Changed —Battle of the Marne Has Resulted In Complete Reversal Such as Has Never Before Been Known In Short Space of Time—French Government Can Now Return to Paris With Perfect Safety

London, Sept. 14.—The seven days' battle of the Marne has ended in a distinct defeat for the Germans.

Demoralization has crept into the centre which fought so stubbornly about Vitry-le-Francois, and it seems impossible for the Germans to rally about Rheims.

If another great battle is fought on French soil, it now seems probable that the clash will come in the vicinity of Mezieres, not for from the Belgian boundary and so close to Sedan that the battle lines may extend over that field where disaster so shattered French aspirations forty-four years ago.

The official announcement that the Germans had evacuated Amiens, and unofficial advices indicating that practically all of northern France in the departments nearest the English channel are free of the enemy, are among the important developments.

The entire German retreat continued throughout Sunday, and the French maintain that the rout of the invading right wing is having its effect upon the German centre, which is being driven northward now more rapidly than it came southward.

Crack Army In Danger

But the most striking news of the day concerns the army of the crown prince, the one force that could, it was felt, smash through the French defenses wherever it was deemed necessary.

This vast army, although its morale is unimpaired and it is in better condition than any other of the German forces, is recognized to be in a position of extreme peril. If the French can strike swiftly and strike hard, it is possible that this army, the flower of the invading corps, may be cut off and put out of future fighting as effectively as the Germans shattered MacMahon at Sedan in 1870.

The army of the crown prince is retiring slowly into the Argonne forest. Unlike the majority of French forests, the Argonne is so densely wooded and so slightly penetrated by roads that further retreat directly north is practically impossible for an army.

Closely pressed by the French forces that the Germans have already been unable to drive back, the crown prince's forces must either strike toward the northwest or the northeast, unless a way out can be battered through the line of forts that stretch from Verdun to Toul. The latter maneuver would mean the sacrifice of the majority of the soldiers, as the Meuse line of fortifications is one of the strongest in France.

Caught In a Trap?

The retirement toward the northeast would bring the German army so close to Verdun that the garrison there could make an attack upon the flank in conjunction with the assaults upon the rear by the pursuing French forces.

The way toward the northwest seems to be the probable route that the crown prince's army will take, but here the chances of disaster seem as great as in other directions. Falling back into the same territory is the army of the Duke of Wuertemberg. If the two armies try to press together through the narrow valleys that stretch toward the north, the chances are that they will get so inextricably mixed that innumerable opportunities will be afforded the French to batter into subjection the confused thousands of fleeing men.

The passes northward are like the sudden narrowing of the neck of a bottle, and as the French know the character of their own country better than they did in the Franco-Prussian war, it seems probable that a disaster of appalling magnitude is awaiting the Germans in this section of the retreat.

History-Making Reversal

Never in the history of any nations in the world has there been such a complete reversal in a single week as that which has been brought about by the battle of the Marne. Only seven days ago, France was apparently facing the gloomiest moment in its annals. Paris, the most beautiful city in the world, seemed at the mercy of the leviathan guns that had smashed the defenses of Liege and Namur. Lille and Rheims, two of the strongest fortified cities in the nation, had been evacuated without a struggle.

London sees in this complete overturn the hand of Lord Kitchener.

While the British and French forces were falling back so rapidly under the pressure of Von Kluck's onward rolling machine, the most famous warrior in Great Britain made an unostentatious flying trip to France, where he conferred with General Joffre.

Kitchener returned to London as quietly as he had departed, but something had happened in his absence from the British capital. The Germans were unconscious of it as they rushed on at headlong speed, their cavalry not swerving or halting until they had looked upon the outer forts of Paris, which they believed must soon fall.

Paris Is Now Safe

It seems incredible to realize that this mighty change has been effected within a week. It was only on Sept. 6 that the French government made its hurried flight to Burdeaux and that even the most defiant of London citizens were already planning for places of refuge in the north before the giant Zeppelins came drifting over the metropolis with their cargoes of death-dealing bombs.

Now the French government can safely return to Paris. The habitues of the cafes can sip their drinks on the sidewalks without uneasy glances into the sky. The German aeroplanes with their bombastic messages and their noisy but ineffective bombs have passed away as though they were but figures in a dream.

Everywhere, with their backs turned toward Paris, the German host is in flight. The army of General Von Kluck is now at least sixty miles distant from the French capital. Even on the frontier between France and Germany the army of the Bavarian crown prince has begun to give way, and the French are preparing for the dash across the boundary into Alsace and Lorraine.

German Centre Gives Way

Even the German centre, which was so desperately engaged at Vitry on Friday and so sullenly retiring Saturday, has begun to be driven rapidly. They, too, like their comrades on the German right wing, have begun to leave behind them in their flight prisoners, arms and even their own wounded. Even the pessimistic prophets who saw nothing but a trap cunningly set by the Germans have now been silenced. The signs of demoralization are too complete. Except in the region of Verdun the fight seems to have gone out of the invading armies.

History is not repeating itself as so many feared that it would. Just forty-five days after the declaration of war in 1870, Napoleon III. surrendered at Sedan. Sunday was the forty-fifth day since the kaiser proclaimed martial law in Germany and set in motion the complicated machinery of mobilization. In 1870 the war, although it dragged on for months, was practically decided by the victory of Sedan. London hopes and even believes that the battle of the Marne, although it will not end the war, will prove the decisive stroke that will throw Germany on the defensive.

German Army Missing

One of the mysteries of the war is the whereabouts of the army of 80,000 Germans reported to be marching southward from Belgium to the rescue of their distressed comrades in France. They were said to have been marching in the direction of Lille, but a careful search of the vicinity has failed to locate them. It is difficult to find any Germans in the French departments that border on the English channel. There are none at Dunkirk and Calais, and it is said that they are out of the neighborhood of Boulogne. A few bodies of Uhlans have been seen, but no detachments in strength. Amiens has been evacuated by the invaders, and the townsfolk are eagerly awaiting the reappearance of the French and British.

It is believed that the most demoralized section of the German armies, the right wing, has not attempted to stop at Rheims, where the hills would make an admirable place for defense. They were between Soissons and Rheims on Friday and are thought to have pressed onward to join the German centre falling back to Vitry. This part of the invading line is also showing unmistakable signs of rout and will soon be exposed to assaults upon the flank as well as from the rear.

BRITISH FLAG RAISED

Germans Lose Seat of Government of Bismarck Archipelago

The British admiralty announced that the British Pacific fleet has occupied Herbertshoelle, on Blanche bay, the seat of government of the German Bismarck archipelago and the Solomon islands. The British loss was three killed and ten wounded. The German casualties are not known.

The Bismarck archipelago, with an area of 18,000 square miles and a population of 200,000, was assigned to the German sphere of influence by an agreement with Great Britain in 1885. German New Guinea is included in the jurisdiction.

The Bismarck archipelago is south of but near the equator. The islands are south of the Caroline and Marianne, or Ladrone, islands, also German; they are southeast of the Philippines and southwest of Hawaii. Their area, counting the neighboring Kaiser Wilhelm land, on Papua, or New Guinea, is about half that of the Philippines.

"INDECISIVE BATTLE"

Berlin Papers Preparing the Public For News of Possible Defeat

The Berlin papers, although without definite news from France, print with the permission of the censor, articles indicating that the fighting near Paris has been severe. They say the battle is of an indecisive nature and may last for some time before it is finally decided. The Lokal Anzieger says:

"Our troops, now fighting for the fruits of former victories, will risk everything to inflict a destructive defeat on the allies in an open battle."

The Tageblatt says: "Victory is not likely to rest with one side immediately. Before victory can come to either side the fortunes of war will frequently change and defeats must be expected."

PLEDGE OF IRISH PEOPLE

Belgium Assured That She Has Their Sympathy and Support

Cardinal Mercier, archbishop of Malines, arrived in London, where he was met by a number of refugees from Malines, who gave him details of the havoc wrought there by the German troops, including the destruction of his own palace while he was attending the papal conclave.

Mercier learned for the first time that his sister and three nephews were among the Belgian refugees and are now in London. Sunday he was the recipient of a demonstration by the Irish Catholics. Speeches were made by John Redmond, T. P. O'Connor and John Dillon, pledging the support and sympathy of the Irish people the world over for the people of Belgium.

SPAIN REMAINS NEUTRAL

Does Not Intend to Intervene In Favor of Germany

A dispatch from Madrid says that Eduardo Dato, the Spanish prime minister, made the following statement:

"Spain has contracted no engagement and will remain neutral until the end of the war."

The statement was made in reply to reports in foreign newspapers concerning Spain's position, which had led to the belief that Spain intended to intervene in German's favor in case of necessity.

HUNGER AS A WEAPON

Peace Meeting Asks For Embargo on the Sinews of War

Ten thousand people, gathered on Boston common in a mammoth peace demonstration, informally protested against the war and unanimously passed a resolution calling upon President Wilson to appoint a commission to work with the presidents of the South American republics in an effort to establish an absolute embrago on the necessaries of life in order to starve out the warring nations and bring the war to a close.

MONARCHS' POWER WANING

Bryan Asserts That Militarism Is Now In Its Death Throes

Baltimore, Sept. 14.—Coming as the personal representative of President Wilson, Secretary Bryan spoke here at the "Star Spangled Banner" celebration.

The development of American ideals, the secretary said, had brought with it a wider freedom and a new type of courage—"a constant growth in the spirit of brotherhood." The constitution of the United States had become a pattern copied by other nations, and now everywhere could be seen the waning of monarchial authority and hereditary power. Americans never had hesitated to die if necessary in defense of the authority for which the flag stood.

"But the war era has ended in the United States," he added, "and is drawing towards its close in foreign lands; the convulsion through which Europe is now passing are but the death throes of militarism."

Considine's Sudden Death

New York, Sept. 14.—James P. Considine, one of the best known sporting men in the United States, was found dead in his apartments in the Hotel Normandie. Heart disease is said to have been the cause.

Church Calendar and Notes of Church Societies

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

Both morning and evening services at Bethany church were largely attended on Sunday. The pastor preached at both services, the evening subject being "The fun of being good."

The full chorus choir sang at the morning service, including an anthem "Far from my Heavenly home," and as a response "Art thou weary?" Mrs. Moore and A. L. Hayden contributed a duet "Guide me oh Thou Great Jehovah." Miss Agnes B. Ruggles, the organist, was back from her vacation, and gave an organ recital previous to the pleasant evening service. The Girls' full vested choir of 30 voices sang in the evening, their selections including "Oh Thou whose hand"—Hanscom, and "Hymn of Life."—Berger.

The Makaria Fraternity resumed its sessions at noon. A business meeting will be held Wednesday evening to fill the vacancy in the office of president caused by the resignation of Walter E. Piper, Jr., who will attend school out of town.

FIRST UNIVERSALIST.

At the Universalist church on Sunday a good attendance greeted the pastor, Rev. Merrill C. Ward, after a summer vacation. Mr. Ward spoke on "Social Ideals" and gave his hearers much food for thought, taking as his text: "The Golden Rule." All enjoyed the singing of Mrs. Mary Hastings Slade and John E. Greene. Sunday school will be resumed next Sunday.

SWEDISH BAPTIST.

The pastor Rev. Paul Hallin, was not in the pulpit Sunday as he is in St. Paul, Minn., attending a large convention there. He plans to return in three weeks and it is expected that at that time the fall ework of the church will proceed in earnest, as the members will have returned from their summer vacations.

The Rev. Mr. Manuel of the Seamen's Mission, Boston occupied the pulpit both morning and evening. His sermons were excellent and he favored the congregation with solos at the services and Sunday school.

Next Sunday Rev. Mr. Lindstrom, a missionary, will preach, and on the following Sabbath, Rev. A. P. Hanson, a former pastor of the church.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

That was a fine audience which greeted Rev. Dr. Sneath Sunday morning. He spoke upon the topic, "God Faithful to His Promises."

There has been much said in recent months about the futility of treaties between nations as the promises are so easily broken. At the Dedham courts last week divorces were freely granted and the familiar suggestion of broken vows in the marriage relation was reiterated. In the business world it is frequently said "If men would only live up to what they promise." And in like manner in the fraternal organizations and the church, the suggestion is often made that if men were true to their vows society would be so much farther advanced in character.

There is another side however. In all the relations of life men are faithful in greater numbers than those who are unfaithful and it is not for us to lose faith in humanity. But in these hours of war and disturbance it is worth while to think again upon the faithful God. He is reliable and will never desert his own nor fail to fulfil his promises. Henry Van Dyke has said "An honest God is the noblest part of Man." It is true and we know that Our Heavenly Father is such an one. It is worth while to trust absolutely in Him for His promises are yea and amen to every one that believeth.

There was a fine attendance at the opening of the Sunday School and remarks were made by Dr. Sneath and Superintendent Campbell.

Mrs. Sneath led the Y. P. S. C. E. meeting at 6 P. M., the topic being "What is a Good Education?"

At the Thursday evening meeting this week the subject to be discussed will be "After the Vacation,—What is our Spiritual Interest?"

Miss Ruth Hardy, soprano of the choir, having undergone a slight operation, will not be able to sing for a month. Her place is being supplied by local talent.

PARK AND DOWNS. CHURCH.

The subject of the Sunday evening sermon was "War." Text: Psalms II "The Kings of the earth set themselves and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord and against His annointed."

The speaker said that the condition now raging in Europe was not to be attributed to the breaking down of the Christian religion, but to the breaking down of a system of organized and wide spread hypocrisy which had employed the name and outward appearance of Christianity to cover its brutal and barbaric forces and to soften and color its selfish intrigues He reviewed the history of the last 25 years to show the present condition as an absolutely logical outcome of European policies. He said that we could sympathize with any side if we got their view point each one absolutely certain that he is right and is fighting for his own existence as a race. This reveals a wide spread suspicion on the part of governments and races toward one another. It is something to the development of which Christianity has had absolutely nothing to do because the whole aim of Christianity is toward interacial co-operation, understanding, sympathy and faith. The current of suspicion was something independent of Christianity a flood tide setting dead against the current of Christianity but bound in time to ebb. The race has been most certainly overgoverned.

Humanity has been carrying a dead weight of royalty on its shoulders and mankind finds today that he is living not for himself but for bejewelled and crowned parasites who have the power to goad him to murder and suicide. A genuine democracy based on Christian principles alone will restore government to safe and reasonable proportions Christianity has been too exclusive. Instead of binding all men and all races together it has been used as an instrument of amputation and separation. It has been used to creeds and to lay down exclusive distinctions. But this is because men have never learned its true message.

Christ ministered to every living being who expressed a need of his ministry. He was the Saviour of men and the purpose of Christianity is to unite all men in mutual cooperation and sympathy. By going all the way to the cross to show the willingness of the Divine Nature to sacrifice self for the last needy human being, he fixed a divine value to each human life. Kings and governments today show a contempt for human life utterly alien to the Spirit of Christ, and if the present struggle accomplishes no other result it should reveal to us the fact that the main principle of Christ's teaching has been lost sight of and should be restored if the race is to be saved from self destruction

These wonderful instructive and helpful lectures are free to all and those who come are sure of a kindly smile and word of welcome from the pastor. Mr. Arthur F. Capen, tenor of the First Congregational church at Manchester, N. H., gave two very fine solos, which were much appreciated

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The services and activities of the Wollaston Unitarian church were resumed Sunday. The new church-year begins with a fine spirit of courage and enthusiasm and a determination to make this year the best yet in the history of the little stone church on the corner. The Girl's Choir led the congregational singing, which was hearty and enjoyed not only by those who were able to participate but also by those who could only stand and listen. Mrs. William A. Hodges of Weymouth was the soloist. Her two selections were appropriate and well rendered and gave great satisfaction. The pastor read as scripture I Kings, 21 1-16 with telling effect and preached a strong sermon in his usual vigorous way upon "The Tragedy of War." In the course of the sermon Rev. Mr Horst said:

War is always a calamity, because as Sophocles said it "takes no weak man by choice, but good men always." "Send forth the best ye breed" as Kipling writes, has been the demand of every nation that has waged war Whenever a nation sends forth the best it breeds to destruction, then the second best must and will take their places. And it is the men who are left behind, that become the fathers of the next generation. The survival of the unfit is the primal cause of the downfall of nations. We see this in the history of Greece and Rome These fell because their best blood went forth to destruction, leaving the weak and unfit behind to propagate their kind. What the outcome of this war will be no one can tell. But the cause of peace I feel sure will profit by it. Through the awful destruction now in process will come the reduction of armies and navies. This war I am sure is doing away forever the superstition that the best way to maintain peace is to be prepared for war. This is not true. Preparation for war always makes war more probable.

Settling disputes by arbitration is the only sane way. An appeal to reason is better than an appeal to arms. There never has been a war which if both sides had been reasonable and had desired to do justly might not have been avoided. As believers in God, as disciples of the Prince of Peace, let us do our part in hastening the day when every man shall dwell in safety under his vine and under his fig tree; when Naboth will be allowed to enjoy his vineyard the inheritance from his fathers, when no Ahab with the help of a lying and intriguing Jezebel will want to take Naboth's vineyard from him; when the knowledge of God, the spirit of brotherhood and good-will and peace shall fill the earth, as the waters fill the depth of the sea. Amen

Last Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock Elizabeth Thayer Hamilton Huntington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond E. Huntington of Willow street was christened at her home by her great uncle, the Rev. George Augustine Thayer, D. D., pastor of the First Unitarian church in Cincinnati, who was assisted by the child's paternal grandfather, the Rev. Dr. Huntington the former president of the Boston University. The special music for the service was rendered by Mrs. Frank E. Page, Quincy's well known soprano

The beautiful flowers that adorned the chancel were from Mr. and Mrs Edward J. Cummings in memoriam of Carleton Cummings.

A special meeting of the members of the church will be held in the vestry Wednesday evening, at 7.45 o'clock to act upon the report of the parish house committee.

We extend congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Weston upon the arrival of a little daughter to gladden their home.

Saturday afternoon, Sept. 12, the pastor united in marriage Ernest Eric Larson and Hildur Sandgren, both of Wollaston. They will reside at 231 Fayette street.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

Sunday at the morning service which is held at 10.45, there was an inspiring sermon by the pastor, Rev. Joseph Wather, the text being taken from the 20th chapter of St. John, 28th verse—"My Lord and My God."

The deity of Jesus Christ was clearly brought forth, even the doubting disciple came to that point where he claimed Jesus as "his Lord and his God." If Christ was not Lord and God He was not even a good man. But He was more than a man, more than friend and guide. He is God that was manifest in the flesh. He is Lord and God. He is Lord of all and over all, and we ought to take that step and say, "my Lord and my God."

It being the first regular session of the Sunday school since the vacation there was a large attendance. Our school is suited to all ages. The men especially are always welcome. Come and join the Walther men's class, and there is still more room in the Ranz class.

The Junior Endeavor meeting at 3.30 was on charge of Mrs. Joseph Walther, the subject being "My purpose for my life." The children are doing a good work in this department

The Y. P. S. C. E. at 6 was conducted by Miss Margaret Goodspeed, the subject being, "What is a good education."

The pastor took for the subject of the evening sermon, these words—"What God hath cleansed make not thou common."

Wednesday afternoon at 3,the Woman's Foreign Mission Society will meet with Mrs. George B. Huntington 94 Highland avenue. Subject: "Sunrise in Africa." Leader, Mrs Charles B. Kimball. If pleasant the meeting will be held on the veranda

Wednesday evening at 7.45 the regular monthly business meeting of the Christian Endeavor society will be held in the chapel. As the semi-annual election of officers will take place at this meeting a large attendance is desired. Following this meeting at 8.30 there will be a social to which all young people are cordially invited.

Thursday evening at 7.45 the regular meeting for praise, prayer and testimony will be held in the chapel. Subject, "What we should believe about Jesus." Let all be present and help to make this meeting of educational and inspirational value.

We are glad to note such good interest at the beginning of the fall work, and look forward to a greater work for "Our Lord and Our God" this winter.

The Boston South Baptist Association will meet in our church, Wednesday, Sept. 23, at 10 o'clock. Rev James A. Francis, D. D., will preside and the following speakers will take part: Rev. W. F. Wilson, Rev. Charles I. Moss, Rev. David Lockwood, Rev I. M. Moore, and Rev. John L. Campbell Please keep this notice in mind and plan to be present

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN.

Services were well attended Sunday at the First Presbyterian church. The pastor Rev. James A. Matheson delivered inspiring sermons both morning and evening. The regular choir was in attendance and rendered beautiful anthems under the direction of the organist Mr. J. Preston. Many expressed their pleasure in hearing the choir again after an absence of several weeks. Sunday school met at the usual hour with all classes well filled. The Clark class, the Ruth and Lydia young ladies met in their respective rooms.

At 6.30 the Y. P. S. C. E. met in the vestry with Thomas McLay, and the president George McDonald in charge.

At various services of the day a special invitation was extended to all to attend the regular prayer meeting on Thursday evening.

The supplementary budget order passed by the last meeting of the City Council was signed before the expiration of the ten days by Acting Mayor Crane, as Mayor Miller was unable to come to City Hall.

No meeting of the City Council this evening. The next regular meeting is scheduled for Monday evening, Sept. 21. This will be known as public hearing night, as a number of public hearings are scheduled for that evening.

Dr. George H. Ryder and family who have been at the Red Cross cottage, Croydon, N. H., during the month of August have arrived home. Returning with them were Mrs. Elisha Ryder and Mrs. Pauline Witter of Hartford Conn., and Mrs. Elizabeth Wilcox of Florida.

Nathan Ames and family returned last week from a 600 mile automobile trip which took them up through the White mountains and New Hampshire. The weather at this season of the year is ideal for automobiling, and those fortunate enough to own cars are taking long trips.

Following several cold fall days, Sunday came out bright and pleasant and considerably warmer. The weather became cool again however in the afternoon after sun set, and the evening was cool. Today is an ideal fall day. The air is balmy and considerably warmer than it has been. According to one weather prophet a severe storm is due the latter part of the week.

There should be some way of punishing young boys who delight in robbing orchards of unripe fruit. Many fruit orchards have already suffered. In some places the grape vines, and pear trees have been stripped of all their fruit. It does but little good to bring the boys into court, and the best way would seem to be to have a good whip handy, and when they are caught to warm their jackets for them. Of course this may result in your being hailed into court for assaulting the boy, but it will have taught him a lesson.

RENDEZVOUS CLOSES SEASON

Pretty Sight as Yachts Go From Hull to Boston

Fully 100 yachts of all kinds took part in the annual rendezvous Sunday afternoon. The fleet got away at 1.45 from Hull bay and after passing in review of the officers on the flagship started for South Boston. It was a very impressive sight all the yachts flying flags of all kinds of colors. The championship winners proudly carried their cock-of-the-walk pennants, and although all the yachts were more or less decorated with flags the Clara and Dartwell the two Quincy yacht club flyers, were most conspicuous. Both yachts have captured many trophies as well as pennants this year, and they can not be blamed for displaying them when they had the opportunity. The Clara flew the championship pennant of the Y. R. A. M., second pennant of the interclub, and the championship pennant of the Quincy Yacht club, together with four championship pennants won in other years. Besides there was a string of blue, red and white pennants.

SPORT NEWS

At the South Weymouth fair, Saturday, in the ball game for the amateur championship of Southeastern Massachusetts, the championship was won by the Quincys who defeated the Rocklands by a score of 7 to 0. Knight of Quincy struck out 12, and Drake of Rockland fanned 8.

FORE RIVER TEAM WON

The Fore River team of the Manufacturers league, strenghtened by the addition of out of state league players, easily defeated the Reed streets of Rockland in a game at the South Weymouth fair Saturday afternoon for the championship of south-eastern Massachusetts.

Manager John S. Higgins, line-up included Gillis, Wes Ganzel, Duggan, Link Elcock, Stevens, Knight, Galvin, Cain and Wall.

Knight pitched good ball, fanned 12 men and allowed five hits. Gillis and Elcock doubled and Cain and Duggan tripled.

The local team braced early in the game, made their first tally in the second innings and jumped it along after the fifth. The score by innings:

Fore River	0	1	0	0	1	1	0	0	4	—7

Batteries—Knight and Wall; Drake and Ford.

YACHT RACING SEASON CLOSES

The open race Saturday under the auspices of the Jeffries Yacht club off East Boston was the last of the scheduled racing events of the season, and half a hundred sailing craft participated. There was a fine easterly sailing breeze and a good race resulted.

In class I the Dorchen II did not seem to have good luck and finished at the bottom of the list. In class A the Areyto of the Squantum club finished in first position, thus making sure her position as far as the Interclub championship is concerned.

In class S the Maritza was the first to finish with the Waweenock second. the Zoe third and I. X. L. in last position.

In class D, the scrapping class, the Grayling finished in first position with the Clara second Dartwell third and Iris fourth. This gives the Interclub championship to the Clara.

In class H the Wanderer IV was the first to finish in that class with the Sinbad second.

As stated above as a result of this race the Interclub championships were settled. In class A the Areyto wins with 146 points. In class B, the Lethe wins with 89 points, in class I the Louise with 117 points; class D the Clara with 128 points; class S the Maritza with 1191 points and class X the Shadow with 120 points.

GYM TEAM DEFEATED.

The base ball game Saturday afternoon between the Cunningham Gym and Farnsworth-Hoyt Company's team was one of the deadest and slowest games of the season. It was a clean walk off for the visitors, the score being 10 to 4 in their favor.

The only time the home team showed any kind of ball playing was in the fourth inning. The visitors had made three runs, there was one down and three men on base. Chamberlain pitched his very best and struck out two consecutive men. But the visitors came back all the stronger the next inning when they made six runs. Their final run was tallied in the seventh. Milton's runs were scored in the second and eighth innings. Chamberlain played an all around game, first he was pitching, then at third base and the last two innings he played the part of catcher. The visitors hitting was very hard while the infield of the home team was weak. The score by innings was as follows:

Farnsworth	0	0	0	3	6	0	1	0	0	—10
Cunningham	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	3	0	— 4

Mrs. Nellie A. Abbott, 33 Edison Park, Quincy, says: "I heard Doan's Kidney Pills highly recommended and finally tried them. I had backache and disordered kidneys. One box of Doan's Kiney Pills fixed me up all right."

Mrs. Abbott is only one of many Quincy people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pils. WITH A CREW OF AMERICANS

Steamer Red Cross Starts on Her Mission of Mercy

HAD BEEN HELD UP FOR WEEK

Citizens' Committees to Be Organized by Miss Boardman to Secure Funds For More Extensive Work on Battlefields—Funds Also Needed For American Hospital In Paris

New York, Sept. 14.—With surgeons and nurses and tons of medical supplies for the wounded on the fields of battle in Europe, the steamship Red Cross, fitted out by the American Red Cross, is on the Atlantic, bound for Falmouth, Eng., her first stop. There she will be boarded by Rear Admiral Ward, U. S. N., retired, who will take over the command. From there the Red Cross will steam to continental ports.

The Red Cross was ready to steam on her errand of mercy about a week ago, but because some of her crew were Germans and Austrians, the converted Hamburg-American steamship was held up until all the crew could be shipped as Americans.

The ship of mercy got under way from her berth off Ninety-sixth street after having finally completed her all-American crew.

Passing slowly down the river channel, while the new engine room force tried out the engines, the Red Cross was compelled frequently to dip her colors and sound her siren in acknowledgement of the many salutes she received from river craft and vessels of many nationalities lying at their piers.

When well down the bay the Red Cross again dropped anchor, and cleared the Hook Sunday. In the meantime Captain Rush exercised his crew in lifeboat and fire drills and got it into such ship shaped condition as may be approved by a retired naval officer.

Miss Boardman says she will immediately begin the organization of citizen's committees in New York and other cities for the purpose of raising funds to increase the scope of the Red Cross field in Europe.

The New York branch of the Red Cross received $7,408.50 for the European fund Saturday. The total received since the fund was started is now $114,286.83.

A cable message was received from Robert Bacon, former ambassador to France, who is now in Paris, telling of the work being done there by the American ambulance hospital, for which a committee of prominent women in this country are raising funds.

It is estimated that $500,000 will be needed, and Americans in Paris have set about raising $250,000. The committee has been organized only two weeks, but already more than $32,000 has been sent by cable to Paris. Contributions for the American ambulance hospital fund should be sent to J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall street.

Washington, Sept. 14.—An official statement of conditions in Mexico, in which denial is made of stories of outrages and revolts in Mexican territory, was telegraphed to the constitutional agency in Washington by General Carranza, the executive head of the government in Mexico.

Carranza denies that he and General Villa are at outs. Instead, he declares Villa and himself are working in perfect harmony. He also declares that it is not true that the port of Vera Cruz has been closed by the Mexico City government.

DEATH OF HAGGIN

Millionaire Turfman and Mine Owner Lived to Ripe Old Age

Newport, R. I., Sept. 14.—James B. Haggin of New York, millionaire turfman and mine owner, died at his summer home here after a two weeks' illness with heart trouble.

Haggin was 87 years of age. He was president and director in several mining companies and the greatest owner of thoroughbred racehorses in the world. He was born in Harrodsburg, Ky., the son of an early Kentuckian and a Turkish mother who embraced the Christian faith after fleeing from her native land.

SURPRISE PARTY AT ATLANTIC

Clifton H. Young of Prospect street was very pleasantly surprised on Sept. 11 by a large party of friends. When Mr. Young returned from an auto trip shortly after 8 o'clock he found his house in darkness, and upon his entrance, the lights came on.

The evening was spent in playing games, dancing and singing. Henry Kelly, who is a member of the Boston Opera Company and Walter Ryder one of the favorites of Keith's circuit, sang several selections. Joe Murry and Mr. McKue of Boston also sang a few numbers, and Miss Edith L.Abbott played cornet solos, accompanied by Miss Eldine Young.

Harry Burr presented Mr. Young with a $5 gold piece, in behalf of those present.

Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served. In the birthday cake Miss Marion Ryder found the ring, Miss Bertha Shultz found the dime, Mr. McKue the button, and Arthur Hall the thimble.

Among those present were: Misses Annette Shultz, Susan Moffat, Bertha Shultz, Eldine Young, Mae Young, Hazel Butler, Edith Abbot, and Jordine Davison of Atlantic; Miss Ramah Baker and Miss Irene Coleman of Wollaston; and Miss Marion Ryder of Boston, and James Butler, Arthur Hall, Alvin Mitchell, Herbert Butler, Harry Burr, William Cole, and Clifton Young, of Atlantic; Loyal Safford of Wollaston; James Jenkins of Quincy; Henry Kelly, Walter Ryder, Joe Murry, and Mr. McKue of Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Welcome Young.

GROSSMAN'S OPENING.

Many people took advantage of the opening of Grossman's new clothing store in the Kincaide block Saturday, not only to provide themselves with a winter outfit at extremely low prices but also to take advantage of the unusual offer of this new firm. This offer was to give every purchaser, whose purchase amounted to one dollar, a dividend check which intitles them hereafter, to an annual dividend of five per cent. on every dollar which they expended on the opening day. This dividend will be paid annually as long as the firm remains in Quincy.

In addition to this inducement, as noted above some extremely low prices were offered on clothing and gentlemen's furnishing goods. Their stock is an unusually attractive one and if the opening day is anything to go by, the firm has firmly established itself.

BABY CHRISTENED.

On Saturday afternoon, Sept. 12, Elizabeth Thayer, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Huntington, was christened at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Edmund G. Thayer, 60 Willow street.

In the presence of the two families and relatives, the ceremonies were performed by the baby's great grand uncle. Rev. George Augustine Thayer of the First Unitarian church, Cincinnati, Ohio, and chairman of the Board of Trustees of Thayer Academy. The prayer was given by the grandfather, Dr. William Huntington, ex-president of Boston University.

Two songs, "Viegenlied" by Schubert, and "Where did you come from, baby dear," by Bock were beautifully rendered by Mrs. Frank A. Page.

WILLARD WOULD MEET JOHNSON

Cowboy Pugilist Seeks Bout With Big Black.

READY TO POST FORFEIT.

Syndicate Formed to Back Young Giant Is Ready to Put Up $10,000 as a Guarantee and Will Let It Go as Side Bet—Also Prepared to Guarantee $30,000 Purse to Champion.

Big Jess Willard, the cowboy pugilist, is now under the management of Jack Curley, who says he represents a syndicate of wealthy sporting men ready to back Willard against Jack Johnson. He announced a willingness to put up $10,000 as a forfeit and would let the money go as a side bet. He also said that $30,000 would be guaranteed to Johnson if he would enter the ring, the guarantee to go, win, lose or draw.

Curley said that the backers believe that Willard can whip Johnson, and with the prestige that would give him there would be a big profit in theatrical engagements for the new white champion. Taking this view and not caring about the gate, the bout, he said, could be held anywhere. He suggested Mexico if the European war continued many months.

"My backers, who don't care to have their names mentioned," said Curley, "are perfectly willing to put up $40,000 in cash and gamble on making money with Willard. They are convinced that Johnson will be beaten if he ever fights Willard, because Johnson has gone away back. Flynn would have beaten Johnson in New Mexico if he hadn't lost his head and tried to butt Johnson. Johnson was so tired after that nine rounds that he couldn't stand up for half an hour. And he wasn't hit more than a couple of times. He was just forced to hustle around. He must have gone back some more by this time. And Willard is the ideal heavyweight anyway. He'd make a popular champion. He looks the part.

"Willard has signed a contract for three years. If he is matched with Johnson and wins his backers will make a quarter million with him at least. They're really getting big odds for their $40,000.

"It doesn't look as if there'd be a chance to fight in Europe for some time. Johnson positively can't come to this country. He might go to Australia, and, though they've barred him in the past, the idea of having a man like Willard to fight him might make a lot of difference. The Australians would like to see Johnson whipped."

Curley seems unduly optimistic if he is in earnest. There is no possibility of a change in the law in Australia which bars fights between whites and blacks. And Johnson is so badly discredited in Europe that it is doubtful if a fight could be arranged there even if the war were over. And there will be the cry of "fake" no matter where or when the fight is held.

The best thing for pugilism, according to most critics, would be for Willard to look for a match with Gunboat Smith, Carl Morris, Sam McVey and the other heavyweights and let the man who proves himself the best of the lot become the new champion and thus eliminate Jack Johnson from further consideration.

A Great Service

It Was Rendered by a Typist

By F. A. MITCHEL

Harry Beale and Jennie MacArthur had the same advantage as to education—that is, they both went to the same public school. Harry was a poor scholar, and Jenny was a good one. Harry would be out with the boys, playing marbles for keeps or plugging tops, winning all the marbles and the tops, while Jennie was getting her lessons and Harry's too. She wrote his compositions for him, made his grammar diagrams—indeed filled the gap of his deficiencies so far as those deficiencies could be filled by another.

In this way she dragged her boy lover through the grammar school. He was considered by his teachers weak in spots, they not knowing that the spots were parts of his school work in which Jennie could not do for him. The two children went to the high school together, and there it was the same, only, the work being more difficult, Jennie failed to get him on as before, and he had a harder time of it every year till the fourth and last, when his record was so bad that it was decided by his parents to take him out of school.

By this time both he and his sweetheart had outgrown childhood, and something of formality had come between them. On dropping out of school Harry considered that it behooved him to thank his coach for the assistance she had given him, but how to do this was a question. He was neither apt as a speaker nor as a writer. He chose the latter course, however, because he shrank from the ordeal. Many a letter makes a breach wider because the writer has not the courage to stand up and face the enemy in the open, but fights behind pen and paper. This is the letter Harry wrote:

Dear Jennie—Permit me to expres my hart felt thanks for the valuable assistance you have so long given me in my studys. I am confident that had all the work been written exersizes you could have pulled me threw. It was the orals that downed me. I am going to work. If you could have got me a diploma I mite have been a lawyer or a doctor or something of that sort. As it is I can only scrub in the durt. Eny way I shall try to make monny so I may some day be of benefit to you. Yours cinserely,

HENRY BEALE.

Jennie's eyes moistened on reading this letter. She had hoped for Harry's sake that she might pull him along far enough to get him into college and that there he might scrape through by himself. Now, as he had put it, he must grub in the dirt. She put his letter in a little Japanese box some one had given her for Christmas and went about her own work with her usual steadiness of purpose.

Having graduated at the high school, Jennie, being expected to make her own living, entered upon a career of teaching. She could not afford to go to college, but while she taught the lower grades prepared herself by home study for the higher ones. Being naturally bright, she made good progress and, being gifted in imparting knowledge, advanced steadily. Nevertheless the pay of most teachers is not great, and $800 is as high a salary as Jennie ever received.

Harry obtained a position in a feed store, with the prospect of lifting bags, thereby getting his clothes covered with a white dust instead of wearing the neat apparel of a doctor or a lawyer. One day Jennie went past the store where he was employed and, seeing him roll a barrel across the floor, sighed at the failure of her efforts to lift him to something better. But Harry, if not gifted to learn from books, had a natural faculty for making a bargain. As a boy he had a faculty, as has been mentioned, for gathering unto himself all the tops and marbles of the other boys, and as a youth he continued to show the same trait in making a profit out of everything he touched. He soon left the feed store and bought out with a handful of cash and a bushel of credit a business for himself. But before he had got settled down to it he sold it at a profit and bought something else. Every one said: "Harry Beale will never get on in the world. He is a rolling stone and will gather no moss." At one time he would be a contractor, at another a farmer, though he never kept a farm long enough to prove that he knew anything about farming.

He did not forget the sweetheart of his school days, but it seemed to him that one of such inferior intellectual capacity as himself should not aspire to a woman so far above him in brain power. Or rather it occurred to him that, he and Jennie having passed out of childhood, this difference in them would separate them farther and farther as they grew older. A woman, he argued, must look up to her husband; the moment she looks down upon him she ceases to love him.

But Henry Beale is not the first person who has attempted to analyze the female human heart to find that it is not to be analyzed. At any rate, there is a multitude of exceptions to all rules that can be laid down concerning it.

Miss MacArthur continued to teach on a salary that was no more than she required to live on. She had no especial faculty for making a dollar serve for two—indeed, it was all she could do to make it serve for one. Though she possessed high intellectual capacity, the demand for it was not great. She lived in a small place where only mediocrity was required. What use therefore were her attainments?

Meanwhile Henry Beale, engaged in groveling pursuits, was extending them. His bank account was all the while growing and his operations all the while enlarging. He was not quite thirty years old when he had a small army of employees about him. He did not need to send out misspelled letters, for he had a dozen typists at his command, any one of whom could put in excellent English whatever he chose to say, and, being systematic, he had made Webster's Dictionary the rule of his office. He had no occasion to regret not having learned to spell, for he could hire spellers for a song. When he wrote his communications, instead of dictating them he felt sure that "business" would not be spelled "bizness" or "excellent "exselent."

One day Beale met a friend of his old sweetheart, who told him that Jennie was wearing herself out teaching. Harry wondered if she would not in her poverty consider such a stupid man as himself for a husband. Unfortunately his old distaste for facing a superior intellectual being again stood in his way. He could not write the English language or spell any better than he had done a dozen years before. If he proposed to his old sweetheart he must either do so verbally or by means of a dictated letter, for he had never had time to learn to use a typewriter himself, and if he had had time it would not have helped his spelling. Since he could not muster courage to propose to one he considered so far above him he was forced to use the latter plan. He wrote out his proposal—it seemed altogether too sacred to dictate—and gave it to a typist to put in proper shape on paper.

Miss MacArthur received a beautifully printed document from her schoolboy lover declaring that his love was as strong as ever: that he was aware he was her inferior and if she married him she would look down upon him; that he wished to serve her, and the only condition under which he could do so was as her husband. Would she marry him? Not a word was spelled incorrectly; not a sentence was bungled.

The day after this letter was sent Mr. Beale called his typist into his office. She carried her implements with her, supposing she was to take down a dictation. On entering she saw at once that her chief had received a setback of some sort. He handed her a letter from Jennie MacArthur addressed to him stating that she had no reply to make to a typewritten letter on such a subject as a proposition of marriage.

"What do you think of that?" he said woefully.

"I think that it is a very proper statement of the case."

"What am I to do?"

"If I were you, Mr. Beale, I would send the letter you gave me to put in type."

"Corrected by you?"

"Corrected by no one."

Mr. Beale groaned. "And that is your advice?" he said.

"It is. If this lady will accept you she will accept you as you are and not as what you are not."

"But her reply shows how she regards me. She will decline my proposition."

"She will not."

"Why do you say that so confidently?"

"Because her reply indicates that what is between you and her is too sacred to be transmitted by a third person. Had she intended to decline your proposition she would doubtless have not been particular about who wrote it."

"Very well, Miss Morton; please send her the original letter."

The letter was sent and a reply was received written on the back of the letter Beale had written his sweetheart when he left school. Miss MacArthur began by saying that she had treasured his letter for a dozen years as the nearest to her heart of anything she possessed. His proposition was accepted, and it was evident from the tone of the reply that the hand bestowed was accompanied by the heart.

On the receipt of this epistle Mr. Beale called his typist into his office and handed her a check for $1,000. Astonished, the lady asked what it was for.

"For the greatest service you have ever done me," was the reply.

RUSSIANS GAIN BIG VICTORIES

Report Capture of 130,000 Austrians In Galicia

STILL PURSUING THE ENEMY

Armies of Dankl and Von Auffenberg Are Cut Off and Disposed Of—Austrians Herded Into Swampy Country and Driven Toward River San—Situation In East Prussia

Petrograd, Sept. 14.—Russia, striking hard in Galicia, has again seriously crippled the Austro-German forces. The enemy's forces, caught between the Vistula and San rivers, have been signally defeated, and are being driven toward the San.

There the Austrians have a strong line, which may delay the advance of the Russian troops until reavy re-enforcements are brought up. The losses of the Austrians in this battle are estimated at 130,000, of which 90,000 are prisoners.

This victory disposes of the armies of Generals Dankl and von Auffenberg, which were cut off from the army on the left flank under Archduke Joseph Fardinand. The swampy nature of the ground forced them to abandon much of their transports. For several days they evaded a decisive combat, even when re-enforced by the Germans. The stand on the further bank of the San will probably be the last made by the archduke.

Russian success is reported everywhere in the Galician theatre of war. The bulk of the opposing army has been crushed, and the Cossacks have been able to meet on more than equal terms the brilliant work of the Hungarian cavalry. The taking of Tomaszow was the beginning of this latest Austrian defeat. It resulted in the Russians being able to herd the Austrians into the swampy, difficult country between the Vistula and the San.

The Germans are concentrating their forces in East Prussia and are forcing their way eastward through the lake country. The Russian line has been withdrawn almost to the frontier. The German advance in East Prussia is no great military success, for the territory through which they advanced had been occupied only by the Russian cavalry screen. Aside from going about the work of reducing Koenigsberg, Russia cannot make any movement in East Prussia until she has finally disposed of the Austrian troops.

On the German line in East Prussia now are re-enforcements of first line German troops drawn from Belgium and the French front. Their places in the western army have been taken by drafts from the landwehr and landsturm.

The Warsaw correspondent of the Novoe Vremya gives an account of the fighting beyond Lublin, Russian Poland. His dispatch follows:

"The Russians were compelled to take several lines of fortifications step by step, ejecting the Austrians from the trenches. I rode along twenty miles of abandened trenches and saw many guns and much equipment which had been thrown away by the Austrians. Taking up a position near our artillery, I watched the progress of the fight.

"The enemy was deluged with a hail of shrapnel alternating with gun-fire, and his line of retreat was marked by burning and deserted villages. Along the roads in the direction of Lublin were marching Austrian prisoners who were surrendering in companies and battalions.

"For six hours I watched the battle. The artillery fire was maintained in the distance above a wood, shrapnel bursting and white clouds rising over the horizon. Suddenly from the wood appeared a black mass, which, on growing clearer, was seen to be an Austrian battalion which filed out and surrendered. At night the thunder of the cannon alternated with the crackle of rifle fire. The enemy's artillery was located and silenced by ours."

KILLS WOMAN AND SELF

Vermont Man and His Victim Are Said to Have Quarrelled

SUNDAY EVENING ALARMS.

Braintree and Quincy alarms on Sunday evening resulted in a large crowd of people rushing to City Square in answer to the summons from what they supposed were danger boxes.

Box 23 in East Braintree was sounded at 9.28 and because the wind from that quarter carried the sounds so it appeared to be a Quincy alarm many again ran to the centre only to find no fire. The fire was in the old shanty, over the railroad crossing at East Braintree, owned by the Bay State St. Ry. Co. The damage will probably reach $15.

At 9.04 the atmospheric conditions held smoke from Emmanuel's candy kitchen close to the roof and a young man, getting the impression the building was afire sounded box 24 at 9.04. The run was needless.

THE NEWSPAPER PUBLICITY LAW.

Its Application to Other Organizations Needed.

The Newspaper Publicity Law, enacted by Congress some time ago, ought to be applied to many other business organizations. This law provides that all publications must file an affidavit with the Postmaster General setting forth full information concerning their ownership, management, circulation, etc. A copy of this affidavit must be printed in certain designated issues of the paper, and a marked copy thereof filed with the Postmaster General. Failure to do this will authorize the Postmaster General to deny the use of the mails to the offending publication.

This law has eliminated many newspaper evils, such as the paid editorial, the overstatement of circulation, and hidden ownership. All this has been attained by the simple remedy of publicity!

A similar law applied to other organizations would work equally well and would eradicate many evils, much corruption and mismanagement. For instance, if labor organizations were required to publish full information as to their objects and their transactions, and to make public an account of their moneys, dues, etc., many abuses that now exist would be removed. Labor organizations should not curry favor from legislatures and Congress any more than business organizations, and they have no right to special exemption from anti-trust legislation. A labor union is a form of labor trust.

Labor unions organized for honest and lawful purposes are necessary and desirable to hold in check encroachments of unjust employers, but when they invoke the aid of Congress for special exemptions they are merely copying unjust methods of other monopolies.

Business should be required to give full publicity as to prices, volume of business, methods of operation, etc., so as to give each competitor the right conclusions concerning their particular field of industry.

We need publicity of all business organizations to cure the evils of mismanagement, and we need it for labor unions, as well, to bring a stop to their frequent abuses and their underhand methods of attaining unlawful objects. A law which could produce such results would bring capital and labor into the open field and their differences would be less and they could be settled more amicably than they are now.

BROOK ADAMS RETURNS

Tells of Conditions in Europe Since War

Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams of Adams street were among the passengers who arrived in New York Sunday on the steamship Finland from Liverpool. Mr. Adams who has been in Europe for the past two months has given much thought to the social and economic effects of the present war. In an interview with a correspondent of the Globe in New York, Mr. Adams is quoted as follows:

"No human being can form any conception of what this thing means," he said, "The world, socially and economically, can never again be the same as it was before the breakdown of the old order of things, which began with this war.

"The changes will be so great that I cannot hazard a conjecture of their extent. The outcome means either Germany supreme or the extinction of the military aristocracy of Prussia which the German Emperor represents.

"In himself the Emperor is nothing in this war. He stands for Germany As one of its best writers, Gen. Bernhardi, has stated, Germany aims to establish a new economic center of the world; it could not continue on its old basis. It was willing to stake everything for the theory of the group of men whom the Emperor represents."

Mr. Adams was averse to being quoted and consented only to a brief interview in general terms. If Germany fell, he foresaw the expansion of Russia, the rise of France to its ancient prestige and accession of strength by England. On the other hand, he believed a German defeat means the destruction of the present German Government and the abdication of the Kaiser.

Mr. Adams was in Paris during the French mobilization, and spoke in admiration of the spirit with which all classes in France took up arms.

"It was the most impressive sight I ever saw," he said. Asked if he had formed any opinion, as a result of his residence abroad, as to whether the war would be long or short, he replied:

"I don't see how anybody can form any opinion on that point, but I have got the impression that it will be a pretty long war."

MANY MISS LITTLE ETTA MAY

The death of little Etta May Holmes only child of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Holmes of 113 Standish avenue, Wollaston, leaves a great void not only in the home circle, but among their near neighbors, who will sadly miss the bright little face. Though only two years and three months old, she had that rare gift for attaching old and young, having a most lovable nature, that won all hearts. Her parents have been receiving many assurances of heartfelt sympathy and affection of a wide circle of friends at the pathetic taking of their little daughter.

Etta May, who had been left in the charge of her two grandmothers, was taken ill with Ileocolitis two days after her parents left for Florida by water. They were notified but did not reach home until midnight Thursday to find the little one gone to the God who gave her, the afternoon before.

The funeral was held at the home at 2 o'clock Saturday. The family, a few near friends, and intimate neighbors made a sorrowful group to listen to a short reading of the Bible, a few appropriate and very comforting remarks and prayer by the Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, pastor of the Bethany Congregational church. Mrs. William C. Frizzell of Salem a sister of Mrs. Holmes sang "Lead Kingly Light," and "Safe in the arms of Jesus," accompanied by Mrs. Hastings M. Moles. The beautiful flowers were silent messengers. The burial was at Evergreen cemetery, Stoughton

HIGH MASS FOR MRS. McGOVERN

Six nephews were the bearers this morning of Mary McGovern, wife of James McGovern who died suddenly on Friday evening. The large attendance at the funeral which was held from the home on Taft street was a loving tribute. Included in those present were relatives and friends from all parts of the city, and many from out of town.

A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor of St. John's church, where Mr. McGovern has been sexton for several years. The music by the regular choir was the Gregorian chant under the direction of John Mahon, organist. The soloists were Miss Eva Rice and Mrs. Mary Burns King.

There was a massive display of floral remembrances among them being a large set piece from Mr. McGovern's associates at Thorp & Martins, Boston.

The bearers were John J. Avery, Frank L. Avery, Paul E. Avery, William J. Avery, Henry J. Talbot, all of Quincy and Joseph McGovern of Dorchester. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

OUR CREED AND OUR COUNTRY

State Secretary to Address Knights of Columbus

The members of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, are looking forward to a treat Thursday night when State Secretary Daniel J. Gallagher, an orator of unusual ability, will address them on "Our Creed and Our Country." The address will follow the regular meeting.

William J. Byrne of Roxbury, whose appointment as deputy supreme knight of the council was announced Saturday it is expected, will be among the guests of the evening. Mr. Byrne is grand knight of Elm Hill council of Roxbury and is well known in the order. He is a retail grocer and provision merchant of Boston.

Deputy Supreme Knight Edward D. Barrett of Ave Maria council, who is past grand knight of Quincy council, will also be present. Mr. Barrett was reappointed to the staff of State Deputy Louis A. Watson Saturday and will continue as deputy of the district which includes Ave Marie council of West Quincy.

SQUANTUM CHURCH

builded spdendidly. But the building is not the church. The church is a company of people who love Christ. You should not only dedicate the building but yourselves. All creeds are welcomed here, as they should be. May the church be a beacon to the young, a comfort to the adult, and a light to the older ones.

Mr. Willmott congratulated the pastor and people, and said he should look for results in Squantum. He hoped for a blessed ministry.

The next number was by the Squantum quartette, composed of James Foster, Joseph Uppling, C. H. Bond and John Marden.

Rev. Mr. Davison hoped that he would soon be released as pastor, as he was busy at Atlantic. The church should soon have a resident pastor.

Rev. I. W. Sneath of the Wollaston Congregational church said the day was made for Squantum, and congratulated the people. Don't you need a new pastor? He rejoiced with the people.

Evidently it is the chosen work of Mr. Davison to build churches. I expected to see a shack, but how happily disappointed. I have heard great things of Squantum, that the people are happily united in one fellowship with the spirit of Christ. I wonder if you appreciate what this church means to Squantum. It means that God is not forgotten. You should thank God, for God certainly does for us. The church is the place to thank God.

The principle of self sacrifice is not to be forgotten in Squantum. It is the thing in life that makes for characters. The influence of the church goes out into the homes and life. You have done a splendid thing. The secret of Englands greatness is the Bible and the Sabbath day. The church sustains both.

Well done good and faithful servants. Congratulations from the Wollaston church.

The service closed with a benediction by Rev. Sampson Nicholls.

The ladies of Squantum will meet in the church Tuesday afternoon to arrange for a grand banquet.

Tuesday evening there will be a meeting to take steps to organize a church society.

The first meeting held in the church was the Sunday School of the Swedish families of Squantum in the morning.

Next Sunday the new church will be formally dedicated when Rev. Dr. Emery will preach the sermon, and other clergymen will take part.

In the basement of the church is a commodious hall, the same size as the auditorium, which will be a Community Hall for all the people of Squantum. There is also a ladies parlor, kitchen, toilets and other conveniences of an up-to-date church.

The pupit of the new church is a work of art by one of Squantum's skilled mechanics ,and the pastor highly commented Avird Johnson on his gift which is worth at least $300.

The Daily Ledger congratulates the people of Squantum.

Please send copies of the Daily Ledger to summer residents and friends.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

The Sky Batt'eground

How will history tell the story of the battles grim and gory
That are fought a mile toward heaven where the silent air men die?
How will battlefields, bespotted, in the trackless air be plotted?
Who will keep the fearful death roll of the soldiers of the sky?

There will be no fifes and drumming; in their place the savage humming
Of a thousand motors spitting clouds of international hate.
There will be no shield or cover where the fearless madly hover,
Hurling bombs through misty spaces with the accuracy of fate.

Who can face the ghastly wonder of an airship torn asunder,
Falling limply through abysses of five thousand feet or more?
Yet the war gods never falter. Superheroes! On the altar
Of the skies their lives they offer as a sacrifice to war.

PITIFUL SIGHTS OF THE FLIGHT FROM PARIS.

Drama of the Middle Ages, Says M. Brieux—Women In Cattle Cars.

Dispatches from Paris to the London Chronicle picture the misery of the refugees fleeing before the German advance on Paris.

Eugene Brieux, the dramatist, witnessed the arrival of a train full of fugitives at Chartres and described his experience in the Figaro.

"Children weep or gaze wide eyed," he says, "wondering what is the matter. Old folk sit in gloomy silence; the women, with haggard cheeks and dishevelled hair, seemed to belong to another age. What I see is a drama of the middle ages or even farther back in the times of the Huns—days when a whole population fled before wild horsemen clad in the skins of beasts."

One of the fugitives explained to him why, after the first hour of their flight, they had had to carry the elder as well as the younger children. She showed him a pair of boots. "I felt the inside with my fingers. The nails had come through the soles. I looked at the child's feet. They were dirty with red brown clots. It was blood."

Lines of cabs, many of them filled with household goods, raced through the boulevards to the southern and western railway stations.

A woman who had arranged some time ago to leave Paris for Biarritz had to be content at the last moment with a seat on a rough bench in a cattle truck, into which thirty passengers or more were crowded, without a glimmer of light.

The odd thing is that there was an inflow as well as an outflow, though not on so large a scale. First there was an uninterrupted stream of refugees from the immediate scene of the fighting. More than 20,000 of these poor people were landed at the Nord station, many of them carrying oddments of property, and some of the children had been allowed to bring a favorite dog or canary.

Mortality Decrease In G. A. R.

As reported at the annual G. A. R. encampment in Detroit, the present membership, in good standing, is 171,335. During the year the roll was curtailed by the death of 11,187 old soldiers, which was 151 less than died during the preceding year.

FORWARD, MARCH!

That the first effect of a sudden great war should be to shock and stun even neutrals is natural.

But it is high time for American business men to brace and build for the future.

It's awful, war is, and it knocks old plans galley west. But we're out of it, and we're not going to be drawn into it, and it's therefore plumb foolish to go around with jaws down instead of working in a brave, bold way toward the sunlight ahead.

We're reminded of this by a statement from one of the biggest authorities in the country on advertising.

"It is inconceivable," he says, "that any merchant or manufacturer should cease or even curtail his advertising just when the country is on the threshold of a tremendous double harvest—the natural harvest of our own unprecedented crops and the logical harvest consequent on the war in Europe. It is under such conditions as these that advertising reaches the zenith of its power.

"To all my clients I have sent this message:

"'Keep the columns of the daily newspapers bristling with your announcements and thus open wide your doors for the flood of prosperity that is bound to rush in. Make hay while the sun shines.'"

A wave of prosperity the like of which nobody now living has ever seen is getting ready to sweep over the United States. It cannot be otherwise when ours is the only big nation left free to do the business of the world. It's coming, as sure as Thanksgiving and Christmas—it's just bound to come.

Therefore, away with doubts, crawfishing and funk, and forward march!

Arms out for opportunity!—Cincinnati Post.

FOUND LIQUOR IN GAS STOVE

Police Make Two Successful Liquor Raids

Carmini Basili of 274 Water street, who drew trade to his store by selling Sunday papers for four cents, was arrested by Inspector Goodhue, Sunday in connection with a liquor raid.

Basili almost "slipped one across" on the police who were about to leave after an unsuccessful search, but for Inspector Goodhue who became interested in a gas stove on which the Sunday dinner was cooking. Noticing the oven gas cock was not turned on, he opened the door and found a case of beer and then, behind a heavy mantle draper covering, a stove pipe hole he found a quart of whiskey.

Basili has gained considerable notoriety the past week among news dealers who failed in their attempts to learn where he purchased his papers to sell them at reduced rates. Several made complaints to the Boston publishing houses on the grounds they were marked five cents a copy. Most of them learned Basili had as much right to ask four as they had to sell for six. In any event it is possible that their competitor will withdraw from the trade for several weeks.

Capt. Daniel R. McKay and Inspector Goodhue raided the premises of Camelio Palmer at 1 Willard street on Sunday and seized a half barrel of ale. It is alleged that Palmer was serving ale to two men from a coffee pot. The names of the men were taken. Palmer was in court a few days ago and fined $75 for violation of the liquor law. The owner of the premises will be haled into court on the charge of letting his property knowing it was to be used for illegal purposes.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

WATCH OLDPORT BOOM THEN BOOM QUINCY

Remember That Whatever Helps Any Business in Quincy Will Help You

Plan to Attend Public Meeting of Board of Trade

The beauty of the dahlias raised in QUINCY by George F. Elcock, and the artistic skill of William Patterson the florist, were shown today when a huge letter "Q" was exhibited in the show window at the Daily Ledger office. It was one of the prettiest floral tributes ever produced in Quincy, and this evening will be presented to the leading lady at the Plymouth Theatre, Miss Ruth Ambrose, who presents "Along Came Ruth," a splendid comedy of more than usual worth, which every Board of Trade in New England should see. It is a delightful play, witty and racy, and Ruth is one of the sweetest little stage heroines that ever was made.

Miss Mildred Gray Huston and the QUINCY BOOSTERS have planned to attend the production this evening, and will occupy Box C and most of the orchestra chairs. Accompanying the floral tribute is a card reading as follows:

"Miss Ruth Ambrose:

With the compliments of

QUINCY BOOSTERS' CLUB

Who thank you for many valuable suggestions for booming a town, and recommend "Along Came Ruth" most heartily. Your part as the heroine is admirably presented, and you have won a warm place in our hearts."

Fifty to 100 QUINCY people, possibly 200, will be in the party, most of whom will leave QUINCY by the 6.57 train. They are intent to "Watch Oldport boom,—then come home and Boost QUINCY"—as the announcement of the Plymouth so kindly put it.

When they see what Miss Ruth did for Oldport, they will realize what 50 or 100 Boosters might do for QUINCY or any other city or town. Co-operation counts, and QUINCY needs united effort.

First.—Accept in a body the invitation of the QUINCY Board of Trade to attend the public meeting of Wednesday evening in Colonial hall.

Second.—If you are not a member become enrolled at once.

Third.—Secure one or two other new members.

Fourth.—Surprise the Board of Trade with your enthusiasm and interest in the organization and our city.

Fifth.—Write a booster for the QUINCY Daily Ledger without delay; so that this interesting feature may be continued from day to day. It is already town talk, and is bringing results.

Sixth.—Advertise QUINCY by advertising your business. Show the Daily Ledger that you appreciate all that is being done to boom QUINCY.

Seventh.—Remember that whatever helps any business in QUINCY will also help your business.

Eighth.—Think QUINCY; talk QUINCY; and stand-up for QUINCY.

Ninth.—Don't hesitate to claim that QUINCY is the most attractive suburb of Boston. Rev. A. L. Hudson has said so.

Tenth.—Remember always the good advice of H. F. McIntire, "to sell your hammer and buy a horn.

Prominent citizens of QUINCY will address the Board of Trade meeting Wednesday evening. An orchestra will furnish music. Ladies are invited. You will make no mistake in booming the Board of Trade. How much will you give QUINCY'S Ruth Ambrose(Miss Mildred Gray Huston) for a Board of Trade fund? Will you give $100 or $1,000?

Human Interest War Pictures That Quickly Arouse American Pity.

Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

These are human interest pictures of the war in Europe. One shows a wounded Scotch soldier being carried by comrades. He is on his way home. The other picture shows Servian refugees resting in a forced march from Belgrade. Routed from their homes by the invading Austrians, these poor people, of all ages, fled in fear—homeless, helpless, hopeless—the innocent victims of war's grim tragedy.

Several additions have been made to the QUINCY party which will attend the Plymouth theatre this evening. These include Chairman John D. Mackay of the School Committee and Mrs. Mackay, Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Foy, Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Piper, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Shaw and friends Mrs. Sue Rice Chase and many others.

The management of the Plymouth theatre evidently appreciated the publicity which the Daily Ledger gave "Along Come Ruth" as will be seen by the following letter, and proposes to put QUINCY on the map also:

Plymouth Theatre,
Boston, Sept. 12, 1914.

Mr. Frank F. Prescott,
Editor QUINCY Daily Ledger:

Dear Sir—I acknowledge receipt of yours enclosing clipping from the "Quincy Daily Ledger." Replying to same, I beg to express sincere thanks for the little "boost" of "Along Came Ruth," and assure you that I do most certainly appreciate such a courtesy.

As I understand it, Miss Huston, is now, or is to be a second "Miss Ambrose." I am sure "Miss Ambrose" will wish her all kinds of success in her undertaking.

In honor to Miss Huston, and in appreciation of your kindness, I am enclosing a box for the performance of Tuesday evening, Sept. 15th.

At that time I would be pleased to meet you, and Miss Huston, and would take pleasure in introducing Miss Huston to the real Miss Ambrose, back of the stage.

Very truly yours,
Fred E. Wright.

MONTH OLD BABY ABANDONED

Was Left on Doorstep at Francis Court

George K. Nichols, a draftsman at the Fore River shipyard, on returning to his home Monday evening found before his front door a large basket, in which was a fully dressed baby boy, covered with a blanket. Beside him was a nursing bottle, half full of warm milk.

The baby was taken to the City Home, and today will probably be turned over to the state by a decree of the District Court.

The placing of the basket on the piazza could not have taken place over ten minutes since people who entered a short time before the discovery saw nothing. They did hear footsteps in the yard, however, and looked out in time to see a woman rapidly disappearing. No accurate description was obtained.

The abandoned child is thought to be about a month old. Until the state authorities take the infant in charge it will remain at the home.

SLIGHT FIRE THIS NOON

The alarm from Box 173 at 1.28 this afternoon was for a slight fire in the hay loft of the barn of Eugene H. McGillicuddy, at 35 Sumner street. The fire probably started from overheated new hay. The recall sounded in a few minutes, the firemen having made short work of the flames. The loss will be slight.

It is said that some of the city employees ate their noon lunch in the barn ,which was a small one story building, used largely for storage. There was an oil can near at hand and it is thought that the heat caused the top to blow off. The fire made a hot blaze and as the building was within six feet of the house, the residents became considerably excited. Neighbors were busy throwing buckets of water on the blaze when the firemen arrived. The loss will not be over $100.

ORNAMENTAL STAIRWAY

Will Be Built By City on Saville Street

Drawings for the concrete steps to be built on Saville street from Upland road to Goffe street have completed at the office of the City Engineer, at City Hall. These plans show that the steps will be of an ornamental nature. Instead of one continuous flight of steps from top to bottom, there will be several landings. There will also be a rail on the sides, and from the posts at intervals will rise an ornamental lamp post for it is the intention to light the stairway at night. When completed it will certainly make a great improvement.

Drawings have also been completed for the culvert to be built over the river on Winthrop street, Houghs Neck, when that street is built to Rock Island.

The Germans are very fond of Paris, and the Russians are stuck on Berlin.

It will be interesting to see how long a partnership with God can endure under Zeppelin tactics.

The censor is the greatest boss these days; and yet the newspapers get the news.

The United States ought to be happy. It has two great consolations "moving crops" and "moving pictures."

"Our troops" says the French officials news bureau, "continue to progress"—Towards Paris.

QUINCY PUBLICITY.

We have been asked why the Daily Ledger is giving the Plymouth Theatre so much publicity. It is a pleasure to answer this question, because doubtless there are business men in Quincy who would like some publicity. It is because the Plymouth Theatre is co-operating with the Daily Ledger to boost Quincy, and have expended over $100 to make Quincy night" a success.

The merchants of Quincy will find the Daily Ledger ready to all times to co-operate with them if they will meet us one-quarter way. The Daily Ledger is published as a business enterprise to make a little money. We should not be expected to shoulder the whole responsibility of boosting Quincy.

Nothing will help Quincy more than live advertisements from local merchants in every issue of the Daily Ledger. What helps one business man, will help every business man of the city. Try it for a month and see for yourself. Let each merchant expend $20 to $30 with the Daily Ledger for one or two months, and the results will be marvelous.

HEAVY RESPONSIBILITY.

The new Pope, Benedict XV, was overcome with emotion on learning of the enormous responsibility placed on him. His first thought was that the burden was entirely beyond his strength.

Smaller men often attain elevation through personal and political pull, and are content to go through the motions of their office in a routine way. It does not take high ability to perform the duties of a high position in this manner.

It is a sign of power, when a man like the new Pope feels the crushing weight of his new duties. The intelligence able to perform great tasks also sees the weight of the difficulties and obstacles in the way, and hesitates, where a smaller man would go on serenely unconscious.

Candidates for places of high authority may have great intelligence or great executive force. But somewhere there is a weakness of prejudice or ill-judgment that would make them forever unfit for power. The man of all around great ability, who can plan for the future, think with intelligence, and act with fairness and common sense, amid the fierce conflicts of state and church, is one among a million.

WILL MAKE A STAND AT AISNE RIVER

German Centre and Right Prepare to Turn on Allies

SUCCESSFUL RESISTANCE IS DOUBTED IN LONDON

Fierce Bombardment of Fort Troyon by Invaders Has Ceased After Many Days of Hammering—German Crown Prince's Army Cannot Come to Aid of Kaiser's Other Harassed Armies In France—British In Hard Fights With German Rear Guard—Two of Kaiser's Armies Safe on German Soil—Outlook For Allies Grows More Promising Everywhere In French Territory

London, Sept. 15.—Although the German left wing has been driven out of French territory into Alsace and Lorraine, the centre and the demoralized right are wheeling into positions somewhat north of Rheims and along the Aisne river to make another stand before they give up the mastery of France to the allies.

It is not believed in London, however, that a successful resistance can be made south of the Mezieres-St. Quentin line, but that the entrenchments behind which the Germans are now massing are prepared only to ensure the safe withdrawal of the main body.

The escape of the isolated German army to the south of the forest of Argonne through the great fortified line from Verdun to Toul has apparently been foiled. The official French dispatches bring the news that the bombardment of Troyon, a fort about twelve miles southeast from Verdun, has ceased. For many days the Germans have been hammering at this unit of the tremendous line of strongholds, from front and rear. They hoped, with their great siege guns, to smash the steel and concrete walls and dismantle the French cannon. Then they could turn their fire upon the next fort to the south and one by one batter down the defenses until Verdun and Toul were isolated.

Meuse Operations Fail

The operations, successful at Liege and Namur, have failed on the Meuse. A French army has been advancing so rapidly that the Germans have been compelled to retreat. Probably in consequence of this feat, the army of the crown prince has moved its headquarters across the Aire river from St. Menehoul to Montfaucon, from the southwest of Verdun to the northwest.

This seems to indicate that the crown prince's army will try to escape to the northeast of the forest of Argonne rather than to the northwest, where it might be entangled with the retiring troops of the Duke of Wuertemberg. But the army is not yet out of danger, for it must not only face a fight with the Verdun garrison but also with the French army that has relieved Troyon, only twelve miles distant.

The official German account of the battle of the Marne states that the crown prince's army is separated from the main line of battle by the forest of Argonne. It will be practically impossible for this formidable force to come to the aid of the other harassed German armies now in France. It has all that it can do to fight its own way out. At the present moment it seems in greater danger even than the army of General von Kluck, which has been more severely handled than any other of the invading forces.

Two Armies In Germany

The only German armies that are now practically out of immediate danger of being surrounded are those of General von Heeringen and the crown prince of Bavaria. These forces are now on German soil, having been driven eastward out of French Lorraine and the Vosges. They will presumably make but little effort to halt a French invasion of Alsace and Lorraine in the neighborhood of Mulhausen and Colmar, but will retire to the vicinity of the forts at Metz and Strassburg. Here they can be hurried by rail to any point near the Franco-German frontier where the German armies are most seriously menaced.

Except for indications that some resistance is to be offered by the German right and centre on the Aisne river and north of Rheims, the German flight has continued as uninterruptedly as it did Sunday. The pace of both pursuers and pursued has perhaps slackened a little, due to the terrible fatigue and hardship under which the troops have labored, but the retreat has gone on steadily.

A Masterly Retreat

Some disappointment has been felt in London that the allied British and French forces have been unable to turn the seeming rout of the German right wing into a real disaster. But von Kluck and von Buelow, the generals in command of the German right and right centre, have conducted a masterly retreat with troops 'over the verge of demoralization. They have been so closely pressed, however, that absolutely no advantage was taken of defenses that had been thrown up in advance along the Aisne in its western course toward the Oise.

The British forces had a few hard fights with the German rear guard to gain crossings on the Aisne, but they were nowhere unsuccessful. Between Compiegne and Soissons the pursuers passed innumerable trenches and earthworks where the enemy had evidently intended to make a stand if driven back from the raid on Paris, but von Kluck's men were too demoralized to take advantage of them.

May Delay Fightinig

Monday afternoon, however, the airscouts of the allies noticed that the survivors of that long march almost to the gates of Paris have been driven into more semblance of order by their infuriated officers. They are hastening in an eastward direction along the Aisne and evidently hope to be able to offer battle on the river north of Rheims. As the British and French are pursuing along both banks of the river, it is probable that merely an attempt will be made to hold off the pursuit to gain further time for re-enforcements to arrive from Belgium and for the checking of demoralization.

The German forces left behind at Arras and other towns and cities in the north of France have taken up positions on the famous Peronne-St. Quentin line, where the British performed so heroically on the retreat from Mons to Paris. This line, too, is hardly strong enough to hold such a flanking movement as would undoubtedly be directed against it, and all indications point to the next battle being waged on the frontier of France and Belgium, on a line extending east and west from Mezieres.

Close on Heels of Germans

The Duke of Wuertemberg's army is retreating through the district that lies to the westward of the forest of Argonne, toward the forest of Belnoue and Triancourt. This force is being rapidly followed by a numerically superior French army.

Everywhere in French territory the outlook for the allies continues to grow more promising. The Germans have been so closely pressed that they have been unable to halt and fight at the most advantageous places. Especially is this the case with the right wing, which has abandoned the valley of the Oise for the barren Champaign country, where the roads are poor after the rains of Saturday and Sunday, and where it is difficult to find heights suitable for the concentration of artillery.

The German casualty lists published to date show a total loss, exclusive of missing, of some 24,000. The lists do not, however, state up to what day they are complete.

One very remarkable thing about them is the high proportion of killed they show. Ordinarily the killed are not more than a fifth or sixth of the total; in these lists they are one-third.

RUSSIANS IN BELGIUM

Presence of Czar's Troops There In Force Is Confirmed

In a dispatch from Ghent the correspondent of the London Daily News says that after two days of investigating he has confirmed the statement that Russian troops are in Belgium. Papers of Ghent, the correspondent says, published a statement as follows:

"The German army has been cut at Counterberg, between Brussels and Louvain, by a Belgian army re-enforced by Russian troops." His investigations confirmed this.

Further reports that Russian troops had passed through England to the continent was given by officers of the steamer Finland, who had been in Southampton. Thousands of Russians came through to Southampton from the north, they said, and embarked on transports, where they were packed densely.

MUST BE "LAST WAR"

England Determined to Crush Kaiser Before Making Peace

Until Prussian militarism is crushed for all time, both on land and sea, England will refuse to consider propositions of peace.

That is the emphatic position taken in London. British officials are admittedly amazed by suggestions that the United States wants to propose a compromise for the immediate ending of the war. It is felt that the position of the allies must be greatly misunderstood if it is believed that any peace proposal would even be received at this time.

Were the war ended today, even though Belgium were indemnified and France received back Alsace-Lorraine, the great German fleet would remain as a menace to the peace of Europe. England is determined that this shall be the last war.

British officials, from the king down, insist that the real cause of the war was the German dream of world power. A compromise now, it is claimed, would mean that at a later date Germany would renew the attempt and this time the allies might not be able to present their unbroken front.

So it is the intention of England to fight on until Germany is forced to consent to a peace that will make her a party for all time to treaties she will be compelled to respect and not regard as "mere scraps of paper" to be disregarded at will.

ARMY OF 1,854,000

British Government Apparently Preparing For Long Conflict

When the British government's mobilization plans are completed the British army for the continent and for home service will total 1,854,000 men, divided as follows:

Regular army, 1,200,000; territorials, 300,000; reserves, 214,000; Indian contingent, 70,000; Canadian first and second contingents, 40,000; Australians, 20,000, and New Zealanders, 10,000.

This tremendous enrolment for a country which normally has only a small professional army throws light upon the British government's views regarding the duration of the war.

The parental school was established as an institution to which common truants could be sent. Counting the eight men who perished on the ice while trying to reach land, after the Karluk was crushed, the three who died on Wrangell island and Andrew Norman, who committed suicide while insane from exposure, twelve members of the Stefansson expedition have died.

The accident to the Karluk occurred last January, when the ship was crushed in the ice north of Herald island.

TRIAL TRIP OF PACIFIC

New Schedule Adopted by Fore River Shipyard

The steamship Pacific, a sister ship of the Atlantic, built at the Fore River shipyard for the coast to coast trade of the Emery Steamship Co. will have her trials in Boston Harbor today. They will consist of endurance, efficiency and speed tests. Capt. "Joe" Kemp of the Fore River shipyard will be in command.

The Pacific, on the day of the launching, proved to be a self starter, having pulled itself away a few minutes after the scheduled time.

On this account it had two sponsors, the honorary sponsor who did not arrive in time and the sponsor who was substituted at the last minute.

Conditions at the shipyard are quiet but it expected that normal conditions will soon be resumed. There is a possibility that the contract for two of the new battleships to be built by the government may come to Quincy, as well as contracts for several torpedo boats.

Monday a new schedule which gives men fifteen more minutes at noon went into effect. They will now work until 4.45 o'clock instead of 4.30 as formerly.

NOT ELIGIBLE TO SERVICE

An amusing incident in connection with preparations for the State primaries occured in the office of the City Clerk this morning, when John Russell, a registered Republican, learned he could not qualify as a deputy inspector for Ward Three, because his name had been submitted by the Democrats.

The law requires that the parties shall have equal representation, and in order to serve a man must be enrolled as a member of the party which submits his name. The vacancy created through this oversight cannot be filled until the Council and Mayor approves the name selected to take the place of Mr. Russell.

As Mr. Russell presented his credentials to City Clerk Crane he remarked, "I suppose this means me." The book of acceptance was placed before him and as he was about to sign Mr. Crane asked if he was the man.

He said he thought so, and an investigation showed he was the only John Russell on the voting list who resided on Elliot street, but that others lived in the ward. While further investigation was being made, Mr. Russell said he was more of a Republican that a Democrat, and that he was designated as a Republican. The records confirmed this, and Mr. Russell declined to serve at the same time Mr. Crane informed him he was ineligible.

QUINCY BRANCH REORGANIZED

Joseph Allen Is President of Central Labor Union

The Quincy branch of the Central Labor Union has reorganized under such promising conditions that the indications are that it will be a large factor in Quincy in the future. Every labor organization in the city is enrolled, and the only craft not yet admitted to membership is the carpenters, whose application was not presented in time for acceptance.

Joseph Allen, representing the Granite Cutters branch of the city, has been chosen president, and Walter L. Belyea, of the Street Car Employees union, is secretary- treasurer.

The next meeting of the union will be in Wilson hall on Sept. 25, at which time the committee appointed to look up permanent headquarters will make their report.

BUSY DAYS FOR F. F. CRANE

The few days preceding the State primaries are busy ones of the politicians for they are putting in their best efforts.

Commodore Frank F. Crane, Quincy's candidate for Congress, put in an unusually busy day on Monday. In the morning he called upon constituents in Quincy, North Abington, Rockland and Whitman. He also spoke at the Lincoln club at Brockton and Campello, where he was introduced by ex-Mayor John O. Hall.

From here hejumped by auto to Dedham to attend a meeting of the Republican club of that town.

He also attended a meeting of the committee of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, relative to the Deeper Waterways convention in New York next week. Mr. Crane has been appointed by the Mayor and Board of Trade to represent them at this convention.

In addition to these he found time to show a customer a farm at Hingham, and to rent two houses, and show seven more to people looking for homes in Quincy.

MORNING ALARM WAS UNNECESSARY

Although the run of the fire department to Houghs Neck this morning was needless, it demonstrated strongly the need of ladder equipment for the apparatus of that section.

The alarm was sounded shortly before 9 o'clock from box 17, and the auto chemical and Chief Billings in his machine made the run and returned as far as Adams shore before meeting the hook and ladder truck. The horses were nearly exhausted from the long, heavy pull and Driver Genero brought them back to the Central station on a light run. Had another alarm sounded in his district it would have been necessary to call for the Wollaston truck if one was needed.

The run all came about because the workmen who started to tar the roof of the moving picture theatre known as the Palms, on Sea street, Houghs Neck, neglected to announce their purpose, and when a column of smoke from under a melting pot shot straight in the air like an Indian signal, all the passengers on a trolley car read the message "fire," and rushed to the scene. Someone before investigating pulled the box.

SHOOTING A DEER.

The Tropical Poisoned Arrow Sent Him to Sleep and Death.

Hunting with poison, as practiced by the natives of Brazil and other tropical American countries, is thus described in a communication to the National Geographic society, at Washington, by Dewey Austin Cobb:

"In hunting the arrows, which are dipped in poison, consist of a point of wood or bone, not more than an inch long and the size of a toothpick, to which is attached a little tuft or hairy fiber of the silk cotton tree. The gun is a straight bamboo tube from five to six feet long, with a sight at one end and a funnel shaped expansion to fit the mouth at the other. The principle is precisely the same as the schoolboy's tube for blowing putty balls, and the accuracy of the natives is wonderful."

Mr. Cobb gives the following description of the shooting of a deer:

"A good sized buck walked out of the corn and stopped, exposing to us its full broadside as we lay some thirty feet away. Our hunter fired. The animal gave a slight start as he felt the prick of the arrow on his flank and turned partly around, sniffing the air for a scent and looking around as if searching for the insect that had bitten him. Detecting nothing, he stood still and unalarmed. At the end of a minute or so his head dropped a little, as if he was sleepy. The hunter stepped out in plain sight. The deer looked at him and moved forward, not away from him, a few steps and stopped. He showed no fear, but simply curiosity.

"My companion and I rose, and the three of us walked quietly within reach of him. He made no movement to run away, but watched us intently and shifted his position a little. His movements seemed perfectly easy and natural. Absence of fear seemed the only observable change until at the end of three minutes or more; then he lay down, not falling, but as naturally as a cow or sheep when ready for sleep. His breathing seemed easy and natural. At the end of ten minutes, though he opened his eyes when touched, his breath became shorter and slower. Eighteen minutes after he was struck by the arrow he was dead."

ACOUSTIC CLOUDS.

Why Church Bells Sound Louder on Some Days Than on Others.

Every one has noticed that on certain days church bells are heard much better than on others and sometimes are not heard at all on other days. The same distance intervenes between the church and the person's residence, the same intensity is used to strike the bell, the same visible obstacles are between the two at one time as at another.

Then why does the intensity of the peal vary? It has been found that there are what is known as "acoustic clouds" in the air. They cannot be seen, but they may be detected artificially. They have the property of reflecting sound just as a brick wall has. So if a thick one of these so called "clouds" intervenes between the church bell and the observer most of the sound is reflected back to the bell, and very little gets through. The acoustic clouds consist simply of a large quantity of water vapor in the air, and water vapor itself is invisible. So we are able to see through something that we cannot hear through. Generally, of course, it is the other way round. We can hear through a piece of black paper, but we cannot see through it.

Now, if these acoustic clouds are disposed in a certain manner it is possible that they will reflect the sound into a region where the bell's tone is ordinarily not heard at all save when the clouds are present and disposed in the proper manner.—Chicago Herald.

Still Observe Druid Festival.

The old midsummer fire festival of druidical origin is still celebrated on the continent, but there is probably only one spot in Great Britain where it is still observed, and that is Tarbolton, in Ayrshire. For days before the festival the village lads collect materials for the great bonfire. The fuel is built upon an altar of turf, and a match is applied at sunset, after which the folk solemnly march around the blaze, and the daring youngsters vie with one another in dashing through the flames.—London Tit-Bits.

Dangerous Occupation.

"Does my practicing make you nervous?" asked the man who is learning to play the cornet.

"It did when I first heard the neighbors discussing it," replied the sympathetic person. "But now I'm getting so I don't care what happens to you."—Washington Star.

Preparing For the Fray.

"I'm going to make a speech that will make my friends sit up."

"You're on the wrong track," replied the experienced campaigner. "See if you can't make one that will cause the other fellows to lie down."—Washington Star.

Nail Holes In Wood.

Old nail holes in wood may be filled up by mixing sawdust with glue till it is the consistency of stiff paste. Press this compound into the holes, and it will become as hard as the wood itself.

Early Impressions.

Early impressions are not easily erased. The virgin wax is faithful to the signet, and subsequent impressions seem rather to indent the former ones than to eradicate them.

Self respect is, next to religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

Mrs. H. C. Haskins of Miller Stile Inn leaves today for New York where she will make a short visit.

Commissioner Brown is out today after having been confined to his home for a week by illness.

C. H. Penniman is planning to build a large addition to his garage on Washington street.

The City Council Committee on Public Buildings are going out on a view Friday, looking at sites for school lots, playgrounds, etc.

It will probably take another day to complete the granolithic sidewalk on the westerly side of Hancock street between Depot and Granite streets.

Mrs. E. C. Follett of 105 Putnam street leaves today for a few weeks' visit with relatives in Georgetown, Mass.

Mrs. S. I. Wood who has been in New York has returned to her place of business at the Adams building where she will continue her work.

Maurice P. Spillane of Elm street has been unable to resume his duties since his long auto trip to Canada, and is confined to the house.

Fishing parties who have been trying the smelts in the lower harbor report some good catches. As yet however they have not begun to run up the bay to any great extent.

The Assessors have the first lot of tax bills about ready to send out, and are fortifying themselves for the kicks that are sure to follow the receipt of tax bills for 1914.

Dispatches from Court Officer Marden, who is spending his vacation on his farm at Hanson, are that he is having a fine time, and is busy harvesting his winter's supplies.

Announcement has been made by the entertainment committee of the Granite City club that the weekly whist tournaments will be inaugurated for the winter the first Wednesday in October.

Commissioner Brown started a gang of men at work this week giving the streets their fall scraping. The dust which has accumulated during the summer travel is being scraped off, after which they will receive their final treatment of dust preventative.

The Quincy delegates to the Deeper Waterways convention in New York the week of Sept. 22-27 are Dock and Water Front Commissioner Frank F. Crane and J. S. Swingle, the Extra Dark man.

Today will pass for an Indian summer day. The weather which has been cool for a week has warmed up considerably and the day is an ideal one. It is hoped that there are many more such days in store before the real cold weather.

The Norfolk County association the G. A. R. and W. R. C. will meet at Weymouth tomorrow morning at Odd Fellow's hall. The Quincy delegates will leave on the 9.50 car from City Square.

The funeral of William Stephen Hobart, one of the oldest residents of the city and a veteran fireman, was held Monday afternoon from his late home on High street. The services were conducted by Rev. Merrill C. Ward of the First Universalist church The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

This is beautiful weather to knock the little white balls over the golf links, and every afternoon at the Montclair links several Quincy business men can be found indulging in this fascinating and healthful sport. In playing golf one will walk several miles without realizing how far he has walked. It is this exercise that works wonders that physicians are unable to accomplish.

According to general custom, the bell will ring on straw hats at sundown tonight, and it will be a brave man who will venture out tomorrow with his summer straw. In many places it has been an old custom for men to gather on certain streets, whose main object is to wreck any straw hat that may pass, thus obliging the wearer to conform to the fall style of headgear.

The State primaries over, municipal politics will come to the front. Just now, however, municipal politics are a little quiet, but from present indications the fall campaign will be lively enough to please the politicians. That there will be a surplus list of candidates for the office of Mayor is quite well understood, and the voters will have a good list of names to select from.

Large List an Indication of Great Activity

Surely 55 real estate sales in one week does not indicate dull times in Quincy. Perhaps a half dozen of these were tax sales, but the others are all transfers recorded last week at the Norfolk registry. Many house lots are being purchased in Quincy these days.

CITY HALL SIDEWALK.

The general opinion of the walking public is that the pitch of the new granolithic walk in front of City Hall is too sharp and that the coming winter when the walk is covered with snow and ice it will be rather a slippery place upon which to walk. Any inebriate who arrives on the late train, who will be able to walk along in front of City Hall and not fall down, will be allowed to pass along free from arrest. Further along the grade of the sidewalk is more level.

It is said, however, that the grade of the walk in front of City Hall is the same as was the grade of the brick sidewalk, but there is considerable difference in walking on brick during the winter months and on granolithic.

Sick-Room Light.

If there are electric lights in the sick room they will generally be found too brilliant, hurting the eyes of the patient, and not every sick room has the electric lights that can be turned up or down. Make a little green silk bag and fasten it over the incandescent bulb and it will give a good but subdued and harmless light.

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

"That's a good show" was the expression heard on every hand as the hundreds of pleased patrons came out of Quincy's Popular Playhouse last night.

The 3 Musketeers are one great act. They have special scenery and electrical effects, which make up a very pretty stage setting. Their songs and jokes made a great hit and their "long fellow" was the cause of uproars of laughter.

Colton & Niles have a unique comed act in which they introduce "The Funny Dog"—no ordinary country dog, either, but the cause of screams of laughter.

Martin & Perkins played several musical instruments to the delight of all. Kaskima, novelty juggler, certainly showed skill in his clever exhibition, which was closely followed and warmly applauded throughout. "When a Woman Loves" is the title of the feature picture which is presented in three reels. It is a strong and stirring drama, well acted and splendidly pictured. Pathe Daily News is, as usual, mighty interesting, showing among its many events of timely interest several sections of the French troops starting for the front in pouring rain.

MATCHES—LEAGUE STANDING AND NOTES

ELECTRICIANS TAKE LEAD

Opening Matches in the Fore River League

The first matches in the Fore River bowling league, comprised of employees at the shipyard, were rolled at the Coliseum alleys Monday evening. All resulted in ordinary scores.

The league schedule will carry the bowlers into the early spring and this season as last, substantial prizes will be awarded the record holders. President Joseph W. Powell has contributed to the reserve fund of the organization, and will take considable interest in the matches.

The schedule will again be carried out under the direction of Joseph W. Larkin, supervisor of apprentices who has been very successful in promoting athletics and sports among the employees.

George Westland set the first mark over the century, with 111, passing Olindy who reached 108. The latter should be watched this season because when the breaks are coming his way, he is extremely accurate in his rolling. None of the men tripled, Westlands 292 being closest to that mark.

MUSICAL BOWLING TEAM.

Harry Paine and his All Star team of the Casino alleys, Boston, will be the guests of the Wardwell All Stars at their alleys on Friday evening. The visitors are all well known in this city and have rolled here several times the past two winters. Their captain, Mr. Paine, is a Quincy boy. He is a self taught musician of unusual ability and possesses a rich tenor voice. The quartette who will accompany him are also up to standard on harmony, and before the match is over the fans will not only be given a bowling treat but a concert of merit. Their many friends are preparing a warm welcome for them.

WIPES OUT ALLEY SLUMS

Dying Wish of President's Wife Is Carried Out by Congress

Washington, Sept. 15.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson's dying wish that congress abolish the alley slums in the national capital was fulfilled when the house passed the senate bill which prohibits the use of dwelling houses in Washington alleys after four years from the date of the legislation. The bill now goes to the president for his signature.

A few hours before Mrs. Wilson died she told the president that she could "go away" happier if she knew the alley slums would be wiped out. Word was sent to the Capitol and the house district committee promptly reported a bill carrying a large appropriation to clear the slums.

COMISKEY HAS HAD GOOD LUCK

Chicago Magnate Is Fortunate In Selecting Batteries.

HAS PICKED UP BARGAINS.

Schalk, Called Best Catcher, Cost $5,000, but Six Great Pitchers, Worth $300,000, Cost Perhaps $15,000—Some Were Caught In the Draft, and Others Were Selected From Bushes.

Sheer luck and baseball intuition have made Charles A. Comiskey the most fortunate magnate in the world in picking up great catchers and pitchers. Just think of it! Comiskey corraled six of the greatest slabmen in captivity, worth in cold cash more than $300,000, if they could be purchased at all, and Commy bagged them for a mere song.

Schalk cost the most of all of these celebrities whose names will adorn the hall of fame in the great pastime. Comiskey paid $5,000 in cash and players for the release of this young catching phenomenon from the Milwaukee club. Schalk couldn't be purchased now, for Comiskey is in the baseball world to remain. He values the esteem and good will of the fans above all things else and knows he couldn't part with Schalk and retain that respect—so that settles it.

"Schalk is the greatest young catcher I ever saw," was the spontaneous exclamation of John J. McGraw after seeing the little catcher in action last fall.

Laudatory remarks about the Sox pitchers are common in the big baseball centers. The earned run proves their superiority. It's a joke to ask Comiskey to sell one of his sextet of star pitchers. The Sox owner dreams of the day when the world's pennant will float from his baseball stadium.

Lucky—well, that word hardly describes it. Good fortune has followed him in all his moves in his eventful baseball career.

Walsh, Scott, Benz, Russell, Cicotte, Kuhn and Faber—seven of the brightest battery stars in the major league firmament—came to Comiskey at a combined figure probably little in excess of $15,000.

Walsh was obtained from the New ark club for a mere trifle. Scott was tipped off to Comiskey by one of the Cantillons, a lifelong friend, and signed by the Sox owner at a small figure.

Benz was purchased from the Batesville club for almost nothing and farmed out to Des Moines, where he ripened into a star.

Cicotte, a castoff of the Boston Red Sox, was purchased from the Hub organization for a few thousand dollars. Comiskey wouldn't take $50,000 for Eddie now, and that purchase is looked upon as one of the luckiest strokes of fortune recorded in many a year in the big leagues.

Russell came to the Sox at the paltry draft price for players drawn from the Texas league. Today he is one of the greatest southpaw twirlers, and he's not for sale at any price.

Faber came to the White Sox for a few hundred dollars. This young recruit is looked upon as the most highly prized slab "find of the season" in the big leagues. Baseball players say no young pitcher in the world has more stuff than the former college star of Dubuque.

Kuhn, a close second of Schalk when in condition, cost President Comiskey little coin. If Schalk should break a finger on his costly right hand Kuhn might have all the critics harping about him in short order.

Billy Sullivan, one of the greatest catchers of all time, is practically in retirement, but he's a valuable asset of the Sox yet and is only another example of Comiskey's remarkable luck in getting stars for a mere drop in the bucket.

STOP FIGHTING OR QUIT THRONE

Russia Believes Francis Joseph Must Do One or Other

MILITARY STRENGTH CRUSHED

Czar's Troops Following Up Advantage Gained by Overwhelming Victories In Galicia—Austrian Situation Extremely Desperate—Her Losses Have Been Appallingly Heavy

Petrograd, Sept. 15.—Declaring that the Austrian opposition in Galicia has received a death blow, the Russian general staff admits that a retreat was ordered in East Prussia Sept. 10. The statement regarding the operations on German territory says:

"On Sept. 10 our air scouts reported the coming of an overwhelming German army, heavily equipped with artillery, who were preparing to attack the main body of Russian troops then holding the country under command of General Rennenkampf. Our position was not strategically strong and orders were given to withdraw to positions previously selected. These are now being held and fighting is in progress. The Russian left wing was attacked by an overwhelming force and was forced to give way, but new positions have now been taken and the German advance is checked everywhere.

"The Austrian military strength is completely crushed. They are retreating in the utmost disorder everywhere. Russian cavalry are pursuing them and harassing them, while Russian artillery has been posted at certain points to cut off the retreat. So precipitate is the Austrian flight that they are abandoning everything. The roads are strewn with rifles and personal equipment thrown away by fleeing Austrians, who found it hampered their flight. Artillery has been mired everywhere and the fact that traces were cut and not unfastened shows the enemy is completely panic-stricken. We are everywhere following up our advantage."

The entire strength of the Russian first line troops is in action, rounding up the completely crushed Austrian army, which is endeavoring to rally under the shadow of the fortress of Przemysl and along the San river to a point north of Jaroslav.

It was officially stated at Petrograd that of the 590,000 Austrians who comprise the Austrian first line of troops 200,000 are already prisoners of war. The entire army of General Danki has been dispersed, and the main armies of General Von Auffenberg and Archduke Francis Frederick, which have been heavily re-enforced from German sources, have suffered greatly.

There is no diminution of the Russian attack. Strong Russian columns are being sent down the territory between the San and the Vistula rivers from the north to attack the Austrians on the flank and prevent further German re-enforcements reaching them. At the same time the centre army, commanded by General Ruzsky, is driving the main Austrian forces before it from the vicinity of Grodek.

That the situation for the Austrians is desperate is indicated by the fact that the entire Austrian landsturm has already been called to the colors. What with the Servians sweeping north the Austrians sent against them; a combined Servian-Montenegrin army invading Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the effective fighting strength of the active army sent into Galicia and Russian Poland already reduced at least one-half in killed, wounded and prisoners; with more than half of the entire Austrian field artillery already captured or destroyed, officials of the Russian general staff have no hesitancy in declaring the Austrian situation extremely desperate. They declare that when the Austrian people realize the exact situation the emperor will either have to sue for peace regardless of promises to Germany or face a revolution that will tear him from the throne.

Every high official at Petrograd emphasizes that the Austrian campaign has completely collapsed and that the losses to the dual empire are appalling.

SERVIAN VICTORIES

Armies Which Defeated Austrians Plan to Capture Budapest

The Servian armies, which last week occupied Semlin after a brilliant cavalry charge, in which 10,000 Austrians were killed or wounded, began a march toward Peterwardein in an effort to open the plains of Hungary.

It is stated at Nish that the Servians are now working in co-operation with the Russian general staff on plans which contemplate the capture of Budapest. The Servians are now in Slavonia in great force. They are reported as being received with great enthusiasm by the natives, the large percentage of whom are Slavs.

Meanwhile the Montenegrin-Servian army which has been commissioned with the capture of Sarcievo, the capital of Bosnia, is within thirty miles of that city. The Austrian garrison is reported in a panic, and it is not believed any stubborn resistance will be encountered.

MAINE CARRIED BY DEMOCRATS

Curtis' Plurality For Governor Is About Two Thousand

LEGISLATURE IS DEMOCRATIC

Indications That There Will Be No Change In State's Representation In Congress—Progressives Fall Far Behind Republicans In Vote For Head of the Ticket

Portland, Me., Sept. 15.—The Democrats elected Mayor Oakley C. Curtis of Portland governor by 2000 plurality, according to the returns thus far, with the city of Brewer and seventy towns and plantations missing.

The figures are:
Curtis, Democrat, 56,702.
Haines, Republican, 54,448.
Gardner, Progressive, 16,296.

The corresponding vote for president in 1912 was:
Taft, Republican, 24,767.
Wilson, Democrat, 47,842.
Roosevelt, Progressive, 44,655.

If the same percentage is maintained throughout the state Curtis' election is indicated by about 2000.

The Progressive loss from the Roosevelt vote was 63 percent. If this proportion holds for the rest of the state, the total Progressive vote for the state will be a trifle over 18,000.

Three of the congressional districts are admittedly in some doubt, although the indications are that there will be no change in Maine's representation in congress.

In the First congressional district the result is in doubt, with the result hinging on Portland. The towns and cities reported gave Hinds a plurality of 268, but this may be easily reversed when the Portland vote is completed.

In the Second district, Congressman McGillicuddy is apparently re-elected over Harold M. Sewall of Bath, as sixty of the 124 towns in the district gave him a plurality of 4461.

Returns from the Third district indicate that Congressman William R. Pattangall, Democrat, is elected, but it is not impossible that Peters' plurality of 1441 in 100 of the 185 towns of the district may be overcome.

Returns from the Fourth district indicate the re-election of Congressman Frank E. Guernsey, Republican.

The complexion of the legislature is in doubt, although the indications are that the Democrats may control both branches. The districts heard from indicate the election of thirty-one Republicans, thirty-five Democrats and two Progressives in the house, with eighty-three districts to be heard from. Three Republican and five Democratic senators have been elected, with twenty-three districts to be heard from.

This would give on a joint ballot thirty-four Republicans, forty Democrats and two Progressives, with 106 districts to be heard from.

GUARANTEE AGAINST WAR

Peace Treaties With Four Nations Are Signed at Washington

Washington, Sept. 15.—In the midst of the great European conflict, the Unied States today signed treaties of peace with Great Britain, France, Spain and China, countries whose combined population is more than two-thirds that of the earth.

These pacts, similar to nineteen already ratified by the senate, are regarded by President Wilson and Secretary Bryan as virtually a guarantee against war, as they provide that all disputes be submitted to a permanent commission for investigation during a period of a year before any nation is free to engage in hostilities.

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, Jules Jusserand, Juan Riano, the British, French and Spanish ambassadors respectively, and Kai Fushah, the Chinese minister, received instructions from their governments to sign the treaties.

Police Think Two Men Found Dead In Street Were Murdered

Gardner, Mass., Sept. 15.—The police are investigating the deaths of James Kalaria and Philip Lora, whose bodies were found with stab wounds in an unfrequented street.

A torn and blood-stained shirt found near the two bodies leads the authorities to believe that the men are victims of a murderer who has escaped.

A Singular Bequest

Its Purpose Could Be Only Inferred

By MAY C. ETHERIDGE

When my mother died, leaving me alone in the world, I felt so desolate that I considered it essential for me to do something to divert my mind from my trouble. I should be obliged to make my own living, but I possessed a few hundred dollars and could not bring myself to begin the work till my money was all gone.

Scanning a newspaper one day I saw an advertisement of a lady who desired a companion with whom to travel abroad. The applicant must be between twenty and thirty-five years old, educated and of a cheerful disposition. Besides her expenses, she would be paid $50 a month.

It seemed to me that this would be a good opportunity for me if I could obtain the situation. I came within the limit of age, for I was exactly twenty. As to the cheerful disposition, I bore my misfortunes without inflicting them on others, but I surely did not feel cheerful. I answered the advertisement and, having been invited to call upon the lady, found her a widow, much broken down in health, nervous and irritable.

I was so disappointed at the prospect before me that I declined the position. This seemed to excite Mrs. Southerland's desire for my services, and she doubled the offer of salary. Since I would be at no expense I should return with some $1,200, which, with what I already had, would give me a little nest egg. So I agreed to go.

Mrs. Southerland's son, a young man of twenty-five, brought her on to the steamer, where I had gone shortly before to prepare her stateroom for her and unpack needed articles. Roy Southerland was evidently much harassed by his mother, whose nervous condition had evidently communicated itself to him. This is a common occurrence. There is nothing that will break down one's nerves quicker than taking care of a nervous wreck. While his mother was resting in her state room before the ship cast off the young man took me aside and said to me:

"I don't envy the work before you. I am sorry to turn my poor mother over to another, but she needs other care than mine. Quite likely when you return you will be in the same condition as myself. If so I will do what I can to make it up to you. I don't consider your salary any pay for what you will have to endure. A thousand dollars a month would not induce me to undertake the care of my mother, and twice that would not induce me to give it up to any one else if I had not come to the end of my rope. It is essential for both her and me that she should be cared for by some one else than me."

I could understand this situation, and I confess the young man won my earnest sympathy. The prospect before me was surely not brightened by what he told me. I did not think so much of his offer to make good what I would endure as a feeling of contentment at being able to bear his burden for him while he took a rest. I assured him that he had acted wisely in the matter and that he might have perfect confidence I should devote myself to his mother and stand by her till I brought her back to him, as I hoped, greatly benefited.

Mrs. Southerland proved to be a singular woman. When I returned to her after this interview with her son she said to me:

"I suppose you have been talking to Roy. He is a good son to me, but he does not realize that I am perfectly competent to take care of my own affairs. Besides, he considers me very irksome and I'm sure is glad to get rid of me. However, he is more dutiful than most sons, who don't hesitate to fall in love with the first pretty face they see, and those who have poor old lonely mothers will not scruple to marry and leave their mothers out in the cold. But Roy can't do that without my consent unless he is willing to give up the family fortune, which my husband left entirely to me to dispose of as I please, and Roy knows that the moment he takes a wife to usurp my first place with him he will lose every cent of it."

This was but an expected sequel to what Roy Southerland had told me and was not a very pleasant beginning of my term of service. Without making any reply to the remarks I asked the lady what I could do for her to make her comfortable. This diverted her mind from her unappreciative son, and she told me of so many things she wished for that I had all I wanted to do to provide them.

I had accepted this situation in order to recover from a condition of my own and found myself called on to bear a depression of another. One would suppose that I had made matters worse for myself. But this, in one respect at least, was not so. My own distress fell to the ground before the greater suffering of another. Mrs. Southerland was a hard mistress, finding fault with every one, including her own son, but there were moments when, her nerves having come to a period of rest, she showed an entirely different disposition. During these intervals she showed unbounded love for her son and declared that if he wished to marry a society girl she would not stand in his way. We had not crossed the ocean before she showed not only great dependence upon me to do things for her, but began to rely upon me for companionship and for sympathy. Her son had provided her with reading matter, and she desired me to read to her, but I saw at once that the books he had selected were far above his mother's requirements. I found lighter works in the ship's library, which I read to my charge and by doing so not only kept her from harassing me, but I was enabled to pass such time as I devoted to this work pleasantly.

During the latter days of the ocean voyage I got Mrs. Southerland on deck occasionally, and she was benefited by the pure air of an ocean whose currents were unobstructed, but when we entered the smoke and perpetual rains of London she fell back to her previous condition.

One duty fell to me that I found very difficult. Mrs. Southerland directed me to write every few days of her condition to her son. Of course she read the letters I wrote. I tried telling the young man that his mother was doing well and improving steadily. This letter she forced me to write over, telling him that she was no better and would never be any better. I obeyed the order, but since I was commissioned with the posting of the letter I opened it and put a postscript stating that the health report was his mother's and not mine. In my next letter I stated that the patient was feeling poorly. I was directed to write it "tolerably well for a broken down old woman."

Since I wrote in the mother's name the son replied directly to her, but his letters invariably contained thanks to me for acting as her amanuensis. He seemed constantly solicitous about his mother, and it was evident that he was a very good and affectionate son.

We reached Switzerland as the hot weather elsewhere was coming on, and I took my charge to a small hotel on Lake Geneva. I had hoped the Swiss mountain air would do her good, and I do not doubt it would have done so had it not been that her vitality was gradually failing.

During our stay in Switzerland I was told by physicians whom I had called in that she would last but a few weeks. I wrote privately to Roy Southerland of this report.

Roy started at once to join us, but arrived too late to see his mother alive. During the last week of her life she became aware that she had but a short time to live and called in a notary to draw a will. I was surprised at this, for she had told me that she had made a will before she left bequeathing her fortune to Roy, but had determined that if he married against her wishes during her lifetime she would change it. However, it was natural that she should make a will with death facing her to provide for immediate requirements. Indeed, she told me that she had stipulated in the instrument that I should be paid my salary for a year from the date of my entering her service.

A few days after Mrs. Southerland's death we started on our return to America. I gave Roy his mother's will, but he was too much affected by her loss to open it, thrusting it into his pocket.

When I reached America I went directly to my home. Not long after my arrival Roy Southerland called upon me, and from the moment I entered the room where he was I knew something momentous had happened. He spoke to me in a reserved tone.

"Are you aware of the contents of my mother's will so far as it concerns you?"

"Only what she told me."

"What did she tell you?"

"That I was to receive a year's salary."

"Do you know any thing else that is in it?"

"Nothing whatever. I supposed that she would call upon me for one of the witnesses, but she did not."

While he was asking me these questions he was scrutinizing me. It was evident he was searching for some truth. He asked me one more question.

"Did mother ever talk to you about how she had left her property?"

"She told me she had left a will at home bequeathing you everything, but added that in case you married without her consent she would change it."

When I said this an expression came over his face which seemed to indicate that he had elicited what he had been searching for. He did not speak again for a few moments, then in a changed voice said:

"All my mother's property after a few small legacies is bequeathed to you."

I stood staring at him as though he had made a statement involving an impossibility.

"I naturally wondered," he continued, "whether you had exerted any influence upon my mother to bring this about. I am sure you had nothing to do with the matter and were ignorant. Moreover, I have learned from what you have told me my mother's reason for leaving all her property to you."

I was too dumfounded to speak for awhile, but presently I asked him what that reason was.

"That you must find out for yourself."

I did find out, so far as guessing would enable me to do so, that she had left her property to me because she wished her son to marry the woman of her choice and I was her choice. She was a singular woman, and had I not known her for some time I could not have understood her.

What followed this denouement is a longer story than the one I have told. I offered to give up the inheritance. That plan failed. Then I offered myself with the inheritance. The offer was accepted.

Culinary Notes

When Preserving Fruit.

The secret of preserving fruit is simply the killing of ferment germs and bacteria by intense heat and the exclusion of air.

Fill jars brimful—this excludes air—then see that the lids are screwed down just as tight as possible. After screwing the lids on tight place the jars upside down until cool. Any leak caused by cracked cup or faulty sealing rings will be instantly discernible.

Be sure your jars are well sterilized—that is, heated through and through by placing in hot water and let come to a boil. This sterilizes and also toughens the jars, so they are not so apt to break when filling with hot fruit.

Don't take any chance of losing your fruit by using sealing rings from the previous year. Rubber is very susceptible to climatic conditions and rots very easily. Provide yourself with new rings each year.

If jelly does not "set" well a few days in the rays of the hot sun will improve it.

To seal jellies pour melted paraffin over the jelly in each glass. Fruit jars may be sealed in practically the same way. After filling jars with fruit screw lid on as tight as possible, turn upside down till cool, then dip tops in melted paraffin, using care that the caps and rubber sealing rings are completely covered.

Fruit may be kept several years in this way.

German Potato Salad.

The Germans excel in the art of preparing potato salad in a variety of combinations. Their first consideration is the potato, which must be just right. They use a hard little potato, which boils tender, but does not crumble. These potatoes may often be bought in delicatessen shops in your city and are usually called German salad potatoes or Hamburg potatoes. Blend them with onions, green peppers, beets, string beans, radishes, okra, carrots, cucumber, tomato, parsley, cress and lettuce for a vegetable salad.

With salt or smoked fish, shrimps, salmon, sardines, oysters or scallops you may have a different potato salad every day, so well do they combine with other good things to eat. All cooked meats, fresh or salt, make most excellent salads combined with potato. Poultry and fresh fish, except those mentioned, are an exception.

Potato salad is the one exception to the rule of serving salads as cold as possible. They are very good served hot and ofttimes should be served in this way, particularly for luncheon or supper with cold meats, or, if combined with meat, as a warm supper dish. Potato salad should never accompany a regular dinner of roast and vegetables, as it is too hearty a dish in itself.

Dried Fruit.

Unquestionably sun dried fruits and vegetables are better than most preserved foods. Yet the many difficulties in drying them out of doors in this climate prevent most people from considering it. But nothing is easier if you own a hotbed, such as where you start vegetables or flowers. Lay a floor on top of the earth; spread a clean cloth over the boards and put the fruit or corn, peas or beans on this. After placing the articles to be dried in the frame put the covering sash back on it, taking care to raise both ends about two inches to give free circulation of air over the fruit, for the air carries off the moisture and prevents the fruit burning. Insects cannot stand the heat in this frame, and rain cannot reach the fruit, although it is advisable to put the sash tight on the frame in case of storm.

Cooking Fresh Vegetables.

Some cooks use a little vinegar with green beans, spinach or cabbage to soften the cellulose. A small onion sliced and cooked with peas is the method employed by another cook. But it is very necessary that the water be soft, and therefore in case you must use hard water a very tiny bit of soda may be boiled in the water. When peas are cooked in the soda water, after fifteen or twenty minutes pour off this water and finish with fresh boiling water. A few green mint leaves added at this time will increase the palatableness of the peas.

Making Cabbage Digestible.

Cabbage that is crisped in cold water before it is cooked or served raw will agree with almost every one if you do not commit the error of overcooking it. Overcooked, water soaked cabbage is an unpardonable sin against the powers of digestion. If you find that the peas, green beans, cabbage, etc., have grown beyond their tender youth you may resort to the use of a little baking soda added to the water in which they are boiled. But use soda very judiciously. The slightest excess will injure their flavor.

Useful Kitchen Set.

Something just imported and useful for kitchen work is a set of imported wooden utensils. It consists of a bread board, two scoops, two smaller spoons, a meat pounder—useful also as a potato masher—two whirls, useful in baking, and a butter former. These, carved of smooth white wood and bound carefully on the bread board, are only $1 a set.

Y. M. C. A. MEN ON OUTING

Sail to Plymouth and Attend Services There

A jolly party sailed from the Wollaston club house Saturday afternoon in the yacht Kathrina of Capt. Frank Burgess, their destination being Plymouth. In the party besides Capt. Burgess who is president of the Y. M. C. A., were A. F. Bromley of Y. M. C. A. Delcevare King, Eric H. Ewertz and Curtis Pierce, directors of the Y. M. C. A., State Secretary Herne of the Y. M. C. A. President John L. Hamilton of the Board of Trade and others. The run to Plymouth was made in good time, and was a delightful sail. The yacht laid off Plymouth for the night and early Sunday morning the party went ashore and had breakfast at the Samoset.

Later the party were joined by George H. Brown, Charles P. Hutchins and others who came by auto. Sunday morning they attended services at the Church of the Pilgrim, of which Rev. C. P. Marshall, formerly of the Washington Street Congregational church at Quincy Point is the pastor.

In the afternoon the party attended a meeting of the Y. M. C. A. in the vestry of the church and at the evening services State Secretary Herne was the speaker. The party took different routes to reach home. It had been a fine trip and a jolly party, in which good fellowship prevailed.

The object of the outing and meeting with the Y. M. C. A. of Plymouth aside from furnishing a pleasant outing for those who participated in the outing, was to fraternize, and inculcate a spirit of unity as well as to receive inspiration from the state secretary.

FRED PETERSON REACHES HOME

Has Many War Experiences to Relate

Overflowing with stories of the effects of the war on Paris and its surrounding territory, Fred Peterson, a Quincy boy, who was in that city when war was declared, reached home unexpectedly on Sunday morning.

His return was a pleasant surprise to his mother, Mrs. Marie Peterson of 80 Cranch street who has been very anxious for his safety.

Several weeks ago a letter received from the young man stated he intended enlisting in the French army. His mother refused her consent and all unknown to her and his sisters he took passage on the La France which docked at New York Saturday. When he reached home about eight o'clock the usual Sunday quietness prevailed.

He knocked at the door and when a member of the family answered it her cry of welcome summoned the other members.

Mr. Peterson left for Paris last June intending to spend several years in the schools of that city. He will return to resume his studies after the war.

In relating stories of the effects of the war upon the city he says there is a general scarcity of money and that it is not an unusual sight to see women and children soliciting alms on the streets.

He also tells of seeing a German aeroplane sailing over the city of Paris. Two bombs were dropped he said but he never was able to learn the extent of their damage.

TODAYS COURT.

But one criminal case was heard at the district court this morning. This was a case of a well known Houghs Neck resident who was found early this morning suffering from an over indulgence of that which inebriates. He answered to the name of Abel D. Brown, and was assessed $15, which sum he was given time to pay.

GOING TO PHILIPPINES.

The Boston Sunday Herald of Sept. 6th. has the following, which is of interest to the many friends of Rev. A. L. Ryan and family of South Braintree.

"The Rev. A. Lowell Ryan, who has been pastor of the South Methodist Episcopal Church of Braintree since 1912, has resigned to become superintendent of Sunday school work in the Philippines. He will close his present pastorate this month and will leave for his new field of labor in October.

Mr. Ryan will have the entire supervision of the Sunday schools in the islands. The Methodist Episcopal church has 200 Sunday schools there and it is proposed to extend that branch of the work. The church has a membership of 35,000. There is an annual conference of 48 members, 18 missionaries and 30 Filipino preachers and 400 other helpers; an American church valued at $40,000, a theological school, a deaconess training school, a publishing house and a hospital. Besides the Methodist church, other churches have 30,000 communicants.

Mr. Ryan, in an interview with a Herald reporter, said: "I believe the work in which I am to engage in the Philippines is full of promise. Again, when we consider the remarkable achievements among those Filipinos, we see another factor of large promise. They are a people of great possibilities and we may anticipate a more rapid economic progress than is to be found anywhere in Asia within the tropics.

AMERICAN SCHOOLS FOR NATIVES

"Since schools were opened by our government in 1901, the attendance has been steadily increasing and there is now an enrolment of 600,000 students. A staff of 1000 American teachers has been maintained through the decade and over 5000 Filipino youths are now employed as teachers The government university at Manila has an enrolment of 1200 students.

"While the work of our government has not been labelled missionary, it has been missionary in effect. The whole world is watching it with interest. Hundreds of Americans of the best type are there in various activities, missionary, educational, business and governmental. English has become the official language of the islands and is now spoken more widely than Spanish ever was. The instruction in the American schools has been entirely in English. This fact is wonderfully significant.

NATIVE OF KANSAS.

The Rev. Mr. Ryan is a native of Kansas. He is a graduate of Baker University of that state, class of 1906, and Boston University. In his college senior year he won all of the prizes in the intercollegiate prohibition oratorical contests from the local to the national. In the year following his graduation he served as an instructor in Baker Academy and was general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in the college, in both of which positions he rendered unusual satisfaction. Being convinced that he should enter the ministry, he declined an invitation to continue as an instructor and served for two years as a pastor in a difficult field, building up a very worthy and live church organization. In the summers of 1907 and 1910 he served as field secretary for Baker University, following which he was asked to be principal of the academy at Baker University, but this he declined, coming to Boston to continue his studies.

During his first year, 1911, in Boston University he served as pastor of the Methodist Church at Methuen, and the following year he was assigned to the pastorate of the South Methodist Church in Braintree, where he has since labored with great success.

Mr. Ryan has a wife and two children.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Reputations, like beavers and cloaks, shall last some people twice the time of others.—Douglas Jerrold.

Dare to look up to God and say, Deal with me in the future as thou wilt; I am of the same mind as thou art; I am thine; I refuse nothing that pleases thee; lead me where thou wilt; clothe me in any dress thou choosest. —Epictetus.

Every tub must stand upon its own bottom.—Bunyon.

One of the grandest things in having rights is that, being your rights, you may give them up.—George MacDonald.

Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit and lost without deserving.—Shakespeare.

AMERICAN FASHIONS.

Unusually Attractive Models especially adapted to American Women. Smart, Practical and Becoming.

If American women are not unusually well turned out this year, it won't be the fault of our clever designers. Owing to the paucity of French models, experts here who usually content themselves with modifying foreign ideas, have gone a step farther and really originated a number of clever conceits, exactly adapted to the clientage on this side of the pond.

It would be curious if one of the effects of this deplorable conflict, is the launching of authoritative American fashions for American women.

THE NOTE OF COMFORT.

Viewing the great variety of attractive types seen here at the best centres, one is struck with the note of comfortable easy, fitting even in the revived basques that have returned so improved that they deserve a different name.

If there ever was an ugly, uncomfortable garment it was the old time fitted basque with its many seams adjusted to display every defect in one's figure. The new type with panel effect front and back, and easily fulled seams, adapts itself to any requirements if cleverly managed, and wonderful are the changes wrought by slight differences in its adjustment.

DRESS MATERIALS.

Serges are decidedly in the lead just now, especially in the Gabardine types, and satins are back with a vengence, especially in combination with the serge. Very attractive are those models with the narrow petticoat, sleeves and girdle of black satin and the rest serge. Dark blue still holds the lead in this combination but there are lovely shades in purple, greens, and browns that combine as effectively but are not so universally becoming as the blue.

BUTTONS.

Buttons are of special importance and in the serge satin combinations one sees considerable use of satin covered buttons. Jets are reckoned particularly smart, and are advancing in price, as these are largely imported, so it's an opportune time to seek out any nice jets one possesses to make the most of them while they lead the mode. Crystal and amber buttons are also in demand and the new fad for finishing narrow neckties on shirt waists with an olive shaped button is pretty and popular. Jet jewelry, in combs, barrettes, pins and chains is naturally to the fore.

FALL OPENINGS.

Fall openings are of special interest at this time. Millinery and corset departments receiving most attention, perhaps since these items are among the first purchases made by the well-dressed set. Flexibility and comfortable support is the keynote of authoritative corset style, and these qualities are cleverly secured in the newly lauched Warner, rust proof models, by means of thin double boning that gives with every movement of the wearer, yet holds the figure in trim, fashionable outlines.

Brassiers of the same make, as cleverly modelled, supplement the corsets admirably, securing just the right effect for the fashionable fitted basque which we will wear in some form this year.

MILLINERY.

Never was there a more attractive showing of hats, or an easier time to secure the hat that brings out all one's best points. Small hats lead in variety of shape but there are no end of pretty sailor models with wide spreading brims, that appeal to the girls especially in the softly draped black velvet models which set off the face and fluffy hair bewitchingly. Soft crowns are seen in many of the most exclusive places, and the prices tacked on to unobtrusive little velvet hats with a wisp of expensive feather, trimming effectively placed, are startling to one not conversant with the awe with which say a "Virot" model is viewed by the fashionable. Fortunately for those of us whose purse strings don't stretch immoderately, there are many clever copy cats who reproduce the masterpieces at prices that we can afford to pay.

The hat is the main thing, its shape, and material and finish are the essential thing, then just a bit of garniture, where it will do the most to accent the style of headwear and wearer.

One of the newest, prettiest black velvet hats—in the small class, resembles a soft crowned Derby with a cuff of velvet at one side from centre front to back, topped with a few wisps of black paradise or other light feather fancies.

FIXINGS.

Wide, rolling collars of linen pique or of sheer stuffs and wide cuffs to match, promise to remain smart for a long time to come and the velvet necktie, tied with long streamers under the chin is a fascinating variation of the "Follow me lad" of the seventies.

New York, Sept. 5, 1914.

MAYOR SUGGESTS NAME FOR PLYMOUTH PLAY

"Three Chapters From the Gospel According to Saint Hustle," Mr. Crane's Selection

Hopes Present Movement Will Bring About Results

Be Up And Doing.

When interviewed this morning, Emery L. Crane the Acting Mayor said:

"If I was asked to suggest another name for the play 'Along Came Ruth,' I should offer this: 'Three Chapters from the Gospel according to Saint Hustle.'

To me, it taught the doctrine of 'be up and doing' more clearly than any sermon I ever listened to.

"Of course, our city is not in the condition of Oldport before Ruth came, but even here there is great need of something or somebody to make us all work for the best interests of QUINCY.

"What we need is more co-operation and less knocking. More pushingand less pulling.

"Let us hope that the present movement will bring that result about.'

WHEN RUTH GETS HER FIRST JOB

MY FRIENDS:

We welcome you to OLD-Port. I think Quincy should be called the NEW-Port of Massachusetts.

But then QUINCY would not change its name, for everyone has heard of the two QUINCY Presidents, the QUINCY shipyard where battleships are built, and QUINCY granite of which Bunker Hill Monument is built.

Col. Prescott was the hero at Bunker Hill, but QUINCY has its Col. Prescott and Col. Kincaide; and Joe Whiton; and Emery Crane who should be on the stage.

QUINCY has many attractions for me, and I may soon become one of your residents. My QUINCY friends, I thank you.

Success to the QUINCY Ruth!

This was the response of Miss Ruth of Oldport at the Plymouth Theatre last evening, when the mammoth "Q" was presented from the QUINCY Boosters' Club to the leading lady in "Along Came Ruth," a part admirably sustained by Miss Florence Shirley, a Boston girl who is having all the good luck her friends ever wished her, and she has a host of friends made when she played young girl parts at the Castle Square Theatre a few years ago. Now she comes back to Boston in the appealing part of Ruth Ambrose in "Along Came Ruth," and she is making more friends at every performance. Florence has gone up fast on the stage but the way she wins applause every night at the Plymouth Theatre proves that she well deserves the fame she has won.

The presentation from QUINCY came at the close of the second act, after fully a half dozen curtain risers, as everybody was enthusiastic over the comedy, and the transformation from a dead town to a live city by Miss Ruth.

At the same time that the ushers passed the mammoth "Q" over the footlights, a large basket of beautiful pink gladioli was handed by another usher to Miss Mildred Gray Huston who is the QUINCY Ruth, and occupied box C with QUINCY friends. The surprise to both the young ladies was complete and much appreciated.

BRITISH ARTILLERY IN ACTION UNDER COVER.

The British artillery has been very effective against the German lines. It has cut down hundreds of Germans and has steadily forced the retreat of the invaders. In this picture is shown one of the eighteen pounders under cover, manned by five artillerymen. Dozens of these guns are now operating against the Germans.

KEEPER VAUGHN TO BE REINSTATED

Judge Avery Finds That Removal Was Made Without Proper Cause Under Civil Service

Is Entitled to His Regular Salary Since Removal

Judge Albert E. Avery of the District Court handed down an important decision under the Civil Service statute this morning, when in making a finding in the celebrated Vaughn case, he ordered his reinstatement as warden of the almshouse.

Judge Avery found "that the removal was made without proper cause; that the order for removal is reversed; and the petitioner is to be reinstated in his position."

It is understood his finding was based principally on a recent decision of Chief Justice Rugg, who ruled that the simple charge "for the good of the service" could not hold in the courts unless backed up with something more specific.

Arrangements for Mr. Vaughn's reinstatement have not been completed, counsel having agreed that a reason into effect.

The salary for the position is $800, and carries with it the living expenses of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn, the latter having acted as matron. Under the finding Mr. Vaughn is entitled to salary and living expenses from the time he was removed.

The first steps in the case were taken on April 27, when the removal was made. Mr. Vaughn asked for a public hearing on the charges preferred, and one was held in the Council chamber. As the law provides that the man who made the charges must also hear them, Perry Green, Overseer of the Poor, presided. He found against Vaughn.

Vaughn then petitioned the District court for a review of the evidence, and after extended sessions the case was closed last Thursday, when Judge Avery heard the arguments.

Walter S. Pinkham, city solicitor represented the city in the case, and J. J. McAnarney was attorney for the petitioner.

The Civil Service makes no provision for an appeal.

Visit Paper Mills at Hyde Park and see Manufacturer

The members of the Massachusetts Press Association were guests of the Tileston & Hollingsworth Co., on Monday at their paper mill in Hyde Park, this paper being represented. After a dinner at the United States, Hotel Boston, the party conducted by Mr. Wells, a representative of the company, went to the mill in a special car attached to the 2.06 train.

The entire process of making fine quality paper from old rags and pulp was shown and fully explained. This large paper mill, only six miles from Boston, is in a class by itself, and manufactures special papers, such as Athena plate, Flemish book, Silk Surface, Orthodox Bible, Certified Library Record and Milton Cover and Text. The Tileston & Hollingsworth Co., are "Paper makers of over one hundred years."

Following the inspection a business meeting of the M. P. A. was held at which plans were considered for the annual fall outing. The party returned to Boston at 5 o'clock.

SYMPATHY FOR OUR MAYOR

Latest reports from the home of Mayor Miller are that he is resting comfortably, and it is also said that he is planning to take a little automobile ride this afternoon should the weather continue good. However the Mayor is far from being a well man. He has the sympathy of many friends in his illness all of whom express the hope that he will rally and be able to be about again. At his home it was reported that he was feeling nicely and that he was up and about the house.

THE HOME PAPER.

Do the people of this community really know how much their newspaper is doing for them? Do they realize that every day or every week, as the case may be, it brings to them the tidings of the great world, tells them of the doings in state and county and lets them know just what is going on among their friends?

This is a great service, but besides this the suburban paper does many others. There are ever so many matters of political or economic importance that their paper tells them of. It teaches them, it guides them, it entertains them. In a word, it plays a very great part in their daily lives.

For this the publisher should receive due recognition, not alone in moral support, but in material assistance. The people of every community should realize that they owe their paper much and that they are expected to show their apreciation in some material way—that is, they should patronize the home paper.

O-P-P-O-R-T-U-N-I-T-Y.

Opportunity is knocking loudly at our front door. Let us not merely open the door for her, but let's invite her in and ask her to stay awhile—a long while. Have you met Miss Opportunity? Her name is "Made In America." No, not "Maid" but "Made."

The thing is this: We have for many years been sending about $1,000,000,000 to Europe for goods manufactured over there. But at the present moment Europe is busy with other matters and can't stop to manufacture things. Are we for that reason going to be deprived? Not a bit of it. We can make anything that Europe can. We have the raw material; we have the machinery; we have the money, and we have the enterprise and energy that is necessary.

Already our domestic industries are feeling the increase of orders. We are going to make things right here in this country and consume them here also. We're going to keep our money at home.

What we need most is that everybody in the country realize that our industries must be supported. That will make them grow. Their growth will bring about a vast increase in employment. It means jobs for everybody and money in everybody's pocket. Let all join in boosting our domestic industries. Teach the people to buy only goods that are made in America. That solves the whole question.

INVADERS ARE IN PERILOUS POSITIONS

Have Thus Far Evaded Attempts to Outflank Them

VON KLUCK IS RELYING UPON HIS REAR GUARD

Unconfirmed Report That He Has Surrendered Third of His Army—Position Chosen by Him For Halt on River Aisne Easily Flanked—May Gain Time, but Will Prove Costly to German Cause In Number of Men Lost—Forces of Crown Prince Exchange Peril For Safety at Tremendous Cost to Comrades—Two Armies of German Centre Retreating Steadily—French Take Rheims Without Meeting Opposition

London, Sept. 16.—Although the battle of the Aisne has already opened in the forest of L'Aigle, the armies of the German crown prince and of Gneral von Kluck have not yet been able to extricate themselves from the danger of the onrushing advance of the French and British troops.

The crown prince has seemingly been able to fight his way to the north of Verdun, but the French are following his force so closely that it now seems probable that he cannot join in the battle that has already begun.

The German army here may be able to shake off their pursuers long enough to get safely out of France and behind the guns of Metz, but it is difficult to see how this section of the invading armies can be of much more service to the other German armies now fighting or retreating on French soil.

Von Kluck In a Trap

Reports have been received in London from Dieppe that the flanking movement of the British and French have driven von Kluck into a trap and that he has surrendered a third of his army. These cannot be substantiated and are not generally believed, although it is more than possible that they may prove good prophesies.

So far as can be ascertained, von Kluck has halted his wearied troops between the forest of L'Aigle and the town of Craonne on the river Aisne. Here he is anxiously awaiting the arrival of the German centre armies, which are still retreating north of Rheims toward the plateau, where they hope to stay the allies' advance.

But von Kluck is in a perilous position. The British and French troops have been in constant contact with the fatigued rear guard of the Germans, harassing it continually and threatening daily to crumple it in confusion.

Allies' Golden Opportunity

With rare skill the Germans have evaded the persistent attempts of the British to outflank them, but the halt upon the Aisne seems to present the golden opportunity. The British are on the north bank of the Aisne, with the French on the south, and an enveloping movement of the British, while von Kluck is holding off the French, seems a probable result of his stand.

The position chosen by von Kluck is so easily flanked that reports are flying about in London that he is so conscious of the peril gathering about him that he is staking the fate of his army upon the heroism of his rear guard.

No details of the position of his troops have been made known in official dispatches. But it is unofficially stated by British correspondents that the main army of von Kluck is continuing its retreat to the neighborhood of Vervins, where a last desperate stand is to be made by the combined German armies to remain upon French territory.

A Rear Guard Engagement

If this proves true, the battle of the Aisne is to be merely a rear guard engagement of the Germans to preserve their main armies and to give them time to fortify their lines near the Belgian boundary. The necessary time may be gained by this maneuver, but it will prove costly to the German cause in the number of men lost. But the German generals have never yet shown any unwillingness to sacrifice their troops to gain any end.

The crown prince has been driven north of Verdun to a line between the towns of Varennes, Consenvoye and Ornes. His attempt to batter a way of escape through the fortified line from Verdun to Toul was clear evidence that his army was so imperilled that it would not try to take any part in the next great battle of the war.

Costly Escape From Trap

Foiled in their attempt to smash the fort of Troyon, the army, supposed to comprise the flower of German's forces, fell back rapidly Monday, and Tuesday was exposed hourly to vicious attacks delivered by the French upon the rear guard. The Germans appear to have fought out of one trap, but they have merely exchanged peril for safety at a tremendous cost to their comrades still in France.

The way to the east seems clear, but the roads to the west will be barred to them. The crown prince, the hotspur of the war, must return for the present at least to the protection of the guns of Metz.

General von Buelow, it is believed, has brought his army to the line on the Aisne chosen for defense by von Kluck. The two armies of the German centre, led by the Duke of Wuertemberg and General von Hausen, have been retreating steadily, not even attempting to pause at Rheims.

French Again n Rheims

The French took possession of Rhiems without a struggle, a strange reversal to the event a week ago, when the Germans marched into the fortified city unopposed, confident that they could march almost without pause straight to the gates of Paris. The news that Rheims had again been occupied by the French created tremendous enthusiasm in Paris, where the unexplained fall of the city a few days ago was the most dismal news of the war.

The German centre has made preparations for another battle on the hills north of Rheims, but this, too, is regarded in London as merely a maneuver to gain time while the main forces continue their retreat northward toward Mezieres and Sedan—nearly on the French-Belgian boundary.

Every hour the success of the allies in the battle of the Marne grows more pronounced. The Germans have been hurled backwards so severely that they seem to have abandoned the idea of retreating through hostile Belgium.

They are making for Germany on the roads north of Verdun, and if the pursuit continues as speedily through the week as it has for the last few days even an endeavor to pass back through Luxemburg may be given up.

SUNK BY BRITISHERS

Submarine Which Destroyed Pathfinder Proves Easy Mark

The German submarine which sank the British cruiser Pathfinder has itself been sunk. A part of the British fleet on the lookout for German submarines became aware of the near presence of one. The British vessels divided when the submarine appeared with only its periscope showing.

With grim patience the British cruisers waited for the reappearance of the submarine, which occurred in a dramatic fashion. By some miscalculation, probably in a final effort to escape the cruisers, the submarine's conning tower and upper structure suddenly appeared in the midst of the English vessels.

The conning tower had hardly broken the surface of the water when the first British gun marked it. The doomed vessel was within range of seven British cruisers and from every one of them guns crashed out. In ten seconds seven shots entered the shell of the submarine.

FIGHTING IN BELGIUM

Forces Under King Albert Keep Up Attack on German Lines

The Belgian forces made another raid on the German lines of communication and are fighting along a line extending from north of Louvain to the neighborhood of Malines.

The dykes along the Scheldt river have all been cut and the lowlands are flooded in anticipation of another attempt on the part of the Germans to try to cut Antwerp's communications with the sea.

King Albert in person is again leading the offensive operations despite the protests of the general staff that he should not expose himself to danger.

GERMAN CRUISER SUNK

The Hela Is Sent to the Bottom by a British Submarine

It was officially announced at Berlin that the German cruiser Hela was sunk by a torpedo from a British submarine. Almost the whole of the crew were saved.

The Hela was a small protected cruiser of 2040 tons. She was 328 feet long and carried a crew of 178 men. Her armament consisted chiefly of light guns. The Hela was laid down in 1893 and finished in 1896.

SITUATION IS DESPERATE

Refugees and Wounded Added to Vienna Masses of Unemployed

The Vienna authorities are adopting stern measures to suppress rioting by the unemployed. The problem of caring for the refugees is a desperate one.

Thousands of refugees from Galicia have arrived in Vienna. They have added to the ranks of the unemployed to such an extent that the officials are alarmed and are diverting many of the men to work on the earthworks that are being constructed to defend the city.

Meanwhile the thousands of wounded continue to roll into the city. It is impossible properly to care for them.

TURKEY REMAINS NEUTRAL

Influenced by Warning From England and Victories of Allies

Turkey has finally decided to remain neutral and will not support Germany, according to reports current in official circles in Constantinople.

This action was decided on following a straight warning from England that if Turkey participated in the war she would be eliminated forever as an independent nation. The news of Franco-British victories in the recent fighting was also a factor.

KILLED IN ACTION

General Findlay Had Been Decorated For Bravery In Boer War

Brigadier General Neil D. Findlay, Royal artillery, has been killed in action, according to the official announcement in London.

Findlay commanded the first division, Royal artillery, of the British army since 1919. He served in the South African war, 1899-1900, and was twice mentioned in dispatches for bravery and received the Queen's medal. He was born in 1859.

Wilson and Bryan Prepared to Meet Any Peace Overtures

Although no reply has been received from the German government to the inquiry of the United States concerning the attitude of the former toward peace in Europe, Washington administration officials are hopeful that from the informal effort something tangible may soon develop.

That many influential German-Americans are working to bring about some exchange of peace terms is admitted in official quarters. President Wilson and Secretary Bryan are keeping in close touch with all these efforts.

Washington, Sept. 16.—Evacuation of Vera Cruz has been ordered by President Wilson.

The American soldiers and marines under General Funston, who have held Mexico's principal seaport since it was seized by the fleet on April 21 last, will embark for home as soon as transports can go after them, and shortly afterward all of the war fleet, except a few light draft vessels, will be withdrawn.

The order for evacuation is the concluding chapter of the second armed conflict between the United States and Mexico, in which a score of Americans lost their lives, nearly 100 were wounded and upwards of 300 Mexicans were killed or wounded.

Rizkallah was charged with being an accessory before murder. The arrest followed the finding of the bodies of twin infant girls.

The little girl possesses a healthy pair of lungs, and in her own way has given more than one concert since taken there.

Monday, Mrs. Campbell, an 80 year old inmate, suggested that inasmuch as the child will have to be named there was no time like the present, so with the consent of all admirers of the infant she performed a lay ceremony and christened the babe, "Elizabeth Quincy."

The necessary steps to turn the child over to the state have not as yet been taken.

CITY CHARTER COMMITTEE

The recess committee of the Legislature, which has been holding a series of public hearings, investigating city charters, held its first executive meeting on Tuesday, preliminary to the formation of its report to the next legislature. The committee will meet again today, when it is expected that the attorney general will give the committee some assistance.

At the hearing given on the city charter of Quincy, the committee intimated that it did not intend to report one charter that would apply to all cities, but that it would probably report several forms, so that each city might have a chance to select that which seemed to meet the wants of their particular municipality.

The committee expressed considerable surprise when informed that in case of a vacancy in the office of Mayor or Council before Oct. 1, that a special election would be necessary. It was stated that Quincy was probably the only city in the commonwealth with such a provision, and all agreed that this particular part of the charter at least should be changed, so as to provide that in case of a vacancy of the Mayor, the president of the City Council should serve for the remainder of the term, and in case of vacancy in the City Council, that it should be filled by the remaining members of that body, taking into account the political complexion of the councilmen who caused the vacancy.

It was the pleasure of many in the Quincy party to meet personally Fred E. Wright, the manager of the Plymouth; Mr. Cox,the manager of the company; Paul Davis the advance representative; and others, and best wishes were exchanged.

The synopsis of the scenes follows:

Act I—I. P. Hubbard's "Furniture Emporium." (One year is supposed to elapse between Acts I and II.).

Act II—Hubbard-Bradford Department Store.

Act III—Parlor of the Harborview Hotel.

Place Oldport, Me.
Time, The Present.

In Ruth's encounters with the characters of the town, Mr. Day has shown types familiar to New Englanders in many amusing situations. Israel himself is one of the most original and diverting stage creations that has been discovered in years. He is played by James H. Bradbury with all the inimitable drollness which always marks Mr. Bradbury's work.

Cap'n Nathan Hodge, played by F. J. McCarthy, remembered for his contributions to the fun of "The Merry Widow," and other successes, is a central figure. And Edgar Nelson, once the fat soda dispenser in "The Fortune Hunter," now has the character of Oscar, the bewildered clerk who is hopelessly entagled in Ruth's meshes.

Ruth's boyish lover, Allan Hubbard, who persists in his love for her in spite of the threats of Israel Hubbard his father, and in spite of the rivalry of Col. Bradford, is played by George Le Guere. Considering his youth, Mr. Le Guere has won more distinction than any other juvenile on the American stage. He made his first hit as the dreamy boy Jan in Lena Ashwell's memorable production of "The Shulamite" seven years ago, and he has added to his list of achievements every season.

Maude Turner Gordon who was last seen in Boston in "The Ghost Breaker," is taking the role of Mrs. Burnham and she plays with the same deftness and distinction as of yore. Her gowns and those of Louise Corbin add to the impression of Oldport's up-to-dateness and prosperity.

Citizens of Oldport can well feel proud in watching this play that the world can see in it how their spirit of progress and unselfishness has brought city to the fore. What care they if the spectators laugh at little peculiarities! Would we deny anyone the tonic of hearty laughter? A thousand times No!

At the close of the play President Hamilton entertained the Quincy Ruth and the box C party at the Tourraine.

Some of the Quincy party left immediately for home, but quite a number enjoyed after theatre dinner parties at some of the hotels, taking the 12.05 train for Quincy.

BOSTON COMMENT.

The Boston Advertiser says: "QUINCY night was celebrated last night at the Plymouth theatre by about 150 city officials and prominent business men of the City of QUINCY who received their inspiration to start booming QUINCY from the lines of "Along Came Ruth" now playing at the Plymouth theatre. After the second act a floral letter Q made up entirely of dahlias was presented to Miss Florence Shirley, the leading lady of the "Along Came Ruth" company by the QUINCY Boosters Club, to which she made a short speech of thanks. A basket of gladioli was also presented to Miss Mildred Gray Huston, clerk of the QUINCY Board of Trade, who has been styled the "Ruth Ambrose" of QUINCY.

The Globe says "The QUINCY Boosters' club and a delegation of 150 prominent QUINCY people headed by Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane were entertained last evening at the Plymouth theatre. Between the second and third acts bouquets were presented in behalf of the party to Miss Florence Shirley, who has the leading lady part in the play, and to Miss Mildred Gray Huston, clerk of the QUINCY Board of Trade, whom QUINCY people believe will have a part in the booming of that city similar to that which Miss Shirley characterizes on the stage. The bouquet presented to Miss Shirley formed an immense Q. It was marked—"Miss Ruth Ambrose with the compliments of the QUINCY Boosters, who thank you for the many valuable suggestions for booming a town."

"Ruth Ambrose" is the part which Miss Shirley plays. She responded with a brief speech of thanks. The bouquet was made up of 4000 varicolored dahlias, grown in the private beds of George Elcock, in West QUINCY. (The smaller bouquet presented at the same time to the QUINCY counterpart of Ruth Ambrose, Miss Huston, was formed of gladioli. As a result of the trip last evening a special meeting has been called for tonight in Colonial hall. QUINCY, at which an organized effort will be made to boom QUINCY."

MAY COME TO QUINCY.

Already there is a movement to get the "Along Came Ruth Company" to come to QUINCY. It would be an expensive undertaking but the QUINCY Boosters Club is equal to anything now that it is fully aroused and determined to Boost QUINCY.

BAN ON STRAW HATS.

Few were the men who appeared today with straw hats, for dame fashion has long dictated that Sept. 15, is the last day upon which they can be worn and be in style. Today is hot enough, however, to make a straw hat fell much more comfortable that a soft felt or derby, but it was noticed that straws were few and far between in and about City Square this morning.

BOOST QUINCY!

SUCCESS

By Mary A. O'Brien

Success is gained by Labor only;
It is no mean or weak tinsel toy;
It is a golden gem and solely
For those who yearn work and try.

Though Despair and Failure hinder thee,
And Hope has vanished from thy view,
Rise o'er it all, and strive on bravely,
Every effort begin anew!

For ages past, the golden Day-god
Begins his courses thro' the dawning sky,
Sunny days, and bright, he may have had,
Yet, lurking cloudlets he did espie!

The thunder-clash, the clouds have risen,
And vivid lightning grazed his way,
Wild winds of strength strong oaks have risen
Yet shines he more glorious each day!

The vessel sailing the stormy ocean,
All rigged with hopes and banners flying
Yet thus withal, the storm's commotion
Brings on the moments that are trying.

The waves may dash her decks a-whit'ning
And hang Death's pallor in the gloom,—
Yet, sail she on, all a-bright'ning
With hopes and glimpses of a clearing moon!

The Self-made Man has had his battle,
Has had his moments, and sad, and drear,
Has heard the roar, and dim and rattle
Of Life, ere he climbed the Golden Stair.

Look on road of those who strive and yearn,
No roses glisten by the way-side green,
Sharp the stones that blench, and burn
The bleeding feet, sore-tired I ween.

Think thou Success is gained by only
Waiting for her beckoning, glad smile,
That she will come to thee, all wholly
While you loiter her precious time?

Success waits not for the dreamer;
Arising from hours of sluggish sleep,
She loathes the hour that would detain her
From those who would her own hours keep.

Then gird thee on with Duty's armor
Arise to thoughts of generous creed,
Wield thou the wand of fairest Honor
Disdain the mantle bespeaking greed.

Rise from Failure like battle-soldiers
Returning with pride, won nobly.
Success will heal the scars, and bolder
Strengthen thee more thoughtfully!

Strive for God, and State and Home,
Strive for QUINCY with might and main,
Like its heroes grand who made this strand
A gem in a Nations name!

MILTON TEAMS PLAY FOR PURSE

Much interest has been aroused among the sporting fans of Milton in the new base ball teams which have been organized. The teams are representing East Milton and Mattapan and will engage in a three game series for a $100 purse. The money is being supplied by representatives of both teams. The gate receipts will be split up so that 60 percent will go to the winner and 40 percent to the loser. Both teams are made up of members of the Colonial, Canadian New England and American leagues.

The first game will be played this week Saturday at the Brook Road playground and promises to bring out about 1200 fans. This will be a fine opportunity for residents of the town to see some real base ball playing.

The batteries for this game will be: For East Milton,—Alwood, who played as catcher for the Washington Americans two years ago, and Palouci, the popular young pitcher of East Milton who has been pitching professional ball the last few seasons. For Mattapan,—Duffy, of the New England league and J. Cannon of the Canadian league.

"Red" and "Toppi" Robertson, the fast ball players of this town will represent, East Milton. Some of the professional men to play are: Otis of the New York Americans, Courtney of the New England league, Kiley of the Canadian league and Kane of the Colonial league. Roger Langster, captain of the Cunningham gym team is the manager of the Mattapan team and "Ed" Palouci is the manager for the East Milton team.

DAILY LEDGER
SPORTS
All of Local Interest

John J. Nolan, Jr., of Adams street, has reported to the football coach of Syracuse University and is practically assured that he will again play a guards position on the varsity aeam.

Classes do not open at Colgate until next week when he will resume his studies. The opening day will see another Quincy boy in the ranks, —Donald, the oldest son of City Clerk Emery L. Crane. His only athletic diversion is tennis, and he has been a consistent point gatherer for the university team during his course which closes this June.

Richard Crane, his younger brother will re-enter Harvard where he is a member of the 1917 class. He likewise has chosen tennis as his favorite sport, and last season not only captained the class team, but also gained considerable prestige because of his fine work on the courts.

James McLaughlin of Bates avenue, West Quincy, the Boston Athletic Association athlete who won honors in the annual national junior track championships at Baltimore, by equaling the joint record for the running hop step and a jump, was deprived of a new record by poor measuring on his first successful trial, according to John J. Hallahan of the sporting staff of the Boston Herald.

Hallahan, who is recognized as a well informed and long experienced athletic writer made this comment in his story of how the Boston representatives not only their trainers but the entire list of competitors.

The record of 45 ft. 9 in. was twice equaled by McLaughlin, an almost incredible performance, but one which is on the records of the association. Hallahan's claim to poor measuring if correct makes McLaughlin, the recognized, but not official junior champion.

The youthful champion reached home early in the week but modestly declined to make any comments on the Hallahan claim. He will continue training and next year it is expected will be a contender for first place in the senior championships. The fact that the man who took third place in those events made a mark of nearly a foot less than McLaughlin points out that the Quincy boy can consistently be considered one of the future stellar performers of the world.

LEFT HAND HITTER HAS ADVANTAGE OF YARDS.

Federal League Sluggers Argue That Separate Averages Should Be Kept.

There is a lot of weight in the argument of the Federal league sluggers that separate averages ought to be kept for the left and right handed batters, owing to the distinct advantages enjoyed by the former.

It is pointed out that a left handed batter ought to hit from fifteen to twenty points ahead of the right handed batter each season because his position at the plate gives him at least a two yard edge on the right handed swinger. Two yards quite often is the difference between a hit and an out.

The right handed man stands on the off side of the plate from the first base direction. When he swings the exertion pulls his body farther away from the plate and shifts him in the direction of third base. Then he must recover himself from the swing, reverse his direction and race over the plate on his way to first.

With the port side clubber it's different. When he stands at the plate he is a foot or so nearer first base than home plate is itself. When he swings his body pulls away from the plate and toward first. In running for first he does not have to recover himself, as does the right handed batter, but goes right along in the direction of the swing of his body.

It is pointed out that a left handed batter ought to get at least twenty more hits each season than a right handed person of equal ability simply because the left handed batter has to travel about two yards less than the right handed batter. This argument undoubtedly is true because there are scores of times each season when players who have bunted or driven grounders to the infield are beaten by a stride.

ANOTHER CADDIE CHAMPION.

Walter C. Hagen Succeeds to Ouimet's Laurels.

Once again an American caddy has routed a distinguished brigade of the greatest Scottish, English and home bred professionals known to the perverse game of St. Andrews and won the highest golfing honors of the nation. Young Walter C. Hagen of Rochester, N. Y., who began his links career toting clubs at the age of six, captured the national open championship at the Midlothian club at Rochester by the narrow margin of a single stroke. He had a total of 290 for the four eighteen-hole rounds.

Hagen won the title in a memorable race with Charles Evans, Jr., the Chicago amateur record smasher. Chick was eight strokes behind his eastern rival at the start of the final round. He shot at 71 in the morning and cut Hagen's lead to four strokes, the Rochester star taking 75. In the afternoon Evans went out in 35, while Hagen needed 38, and only one stroke stood between the title contenders.

Hagen has a fine golfing disposition and is popular with his fellow professionals. He weighs about 160 pounds and has a powerful physique. One of the strongest points of his play is his putting. He was a pupil of H. A. Christie, who formerly was professional at the Homewood Country club.

This year's tournament was the second national event in which Hagen has competed. Last year at Brookline he tied with J. M. Barnes, MacDonald Smith and Louis Tellier for fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh prizes, their scores being 307.

Many Entries For English Derby.

The entries for the 1916 English Derby number 468, including twenty-three made in New York and forty-eight in Paris. The entries for this year's Derby numbered only 375 and for next season 420. Entries for the Oaks of 1916, another English classic, total 324, including fourteen made in New York and seventeen in Paris. King George has entries in both events.

Athletic Hall of Fame.

The University of Pittsburgh has established an athletic "hall of fame." Teams or individuals who win certain honors will have their pictures hung permanently in the new $25,000 track house, erected last year on the university campus, each picture having a printed inscription noting the achievements of the team or man thus honored.

IS DETERMINED TO TAKE BERLIN

Czar's Friendship For Kaiser Has Turned to Hatred

WILL LEAD TROOPS INTO CITY

Ready to Use Russia's Entire Fighting Strength to Accomplish Purpose —Plan to Attack Hungary Given Up —Feeling In Petrograd That Austria Is About to Quit Fighting

Petrograd, Sept. 16.—That the proposed invasion of Hungary by a strong Russian body has been definitely abandoned was intimated in Petrograd. It is realized by the Russian general staff that the German resistance will be very strong, and it has been definitely decided that the entire Russian field army, first and second line troops, will be retained for the capture of Berlin.

The czar is determined that Berlin shall be taken if it costs the Russian empire its entire fighting strength. His former friendship for the kaiser has been replaced by an enmity which, court officials say, is the most bitter the czar has ever indicated against any one. He is determined his forces will take Berlin, and that he will ride into the city at the head of his troops.

Because of this it is officially stated that there will be no side trips. The crown land of Bukowina was taken, and the passes through the Carpathians have been held purely as defensive measures. The Russians intend to utilize part of Austria for the passage of their troops toward Berlin, but it is unlikely that any real attempt will be made to invade Hungary proper. The Servian troops may do so, and will be aided by the Russians in every way, but the main Russian columns, after the Austrian army is completely disposed of, will be sent directly across Germany if possible.

There is a growing feeling in Petrograd that Austria will soon admit her inability to continue the war. The fact that her main army has been crushed—and its capture is considered a strong possibility—means she will soon be no longer an active factor in the war. Russia will be inclined to be more lenient with Austria than with Germany, officials declare.

Discussing the general situation Minister of War Sukhomlinoff declared: "The Russian army is going to capture Berlin. That is the task assigned to it by the allies in the present war. The entire strength of the Russians will be used to this purpose. We have been compelled to remove the Austrians as a source of danger, but we have not planned any general invasion of Hungary or any attempt to take either Budapest or Vienna. The Austrian army is crushed. Its losses in killed, wounded and prisoners exceed 250,000. They have lost a great part of their artillery. The position of the remnants of the army is precarious, and its surrender would be no surprise.

"On the other hand, the spirit of the Russian troops was never better, and they are ready to press forward without further delay. Russia is administering the captured territory, but it will not forcibly annex any of Austria's territory. Questions of that sort must be left until after the war is over."

According to the officials in the Russian war office, the Russians are again assuming the offensive in East Prussia. First line troops have been withdrawn from the Austrian theatre of war and have been sent to the aid of General Rennenkampf's columns, which have been hard pressed. It is understood, however, that these operations are intended chiefly to hold the Germans in East Prussia in check and prevent them being withdrawn to go to the assistance of the Austrians.

It is estimated by the officers of the Russian general staff that Russia has already captured one-sixth of the active Austrian artillery. The latest captures were 309 cannon and 8000 men at Rawarusska, with a mass of war materials that has not yet been sent to the rear.

The action of General Broussiloff in warmly commending in general orders the Bulgarian General Dimitrieff, who volunteered service at the opening of the war, will have an excellent effect in Bulgaria, where Turkish emissaries have been very busy in an attempt to persuade the Bulgarians to make a combination with Turkey against Russia.

The situation in the south is excellent.

DESERT THE AUSTRIANS

Men of Slav Nationality Are Now Fighting With Servians

A dispatch from San Giovanni, Albania, says the Montenegrin troops have joined the Servians and, fighting under Servian generals, have repulsed the Austrians all along the Bosnian frontier.

"There was fighting Saturday, Sunday and Monday," the dispatch continues, "and the Servians are now pursuing the enemy. The Austrian casualties amounted to 4000. Seven hundred men were taken prisoners, and another 500 men of Slav nationality, including several officers, deserted the Austrians and, with their arms and ammunition, joined the Servians."

BANK PRESIDENT HELD

Head of a Boston Institution Is Charged With Larceny

Boston, Sept. 16.—Joseph A. Plouff, president of the Lafayette Savings bank, was arrested on charges preferred by Bank Commissioner Thorndike relative to "irregularities" in connection with the bank.

The bank was organized about eight months ago. It is alleged by the examiner that the last examination showed less than $10,000 in deposits, extensive loans, and no profits, and also brought to light irregularities.

Plouff was charged in court with the larceny of $2000. He pleaded not guilty and bail was set at $10,000. Bail not being furnished, Plouff was taken to jail.

Court Postpones Angle Case

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 16.—The case of Mrs. Helen M. Angle, charged with the death of Waldo R. Ballou at Stamford, was postponed for a week, when it came up in the superior court here.

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

I have grown to believe that the one thing worth aiming at is simplicity of heart and life; that one's relations with others should be direct and not diplomatic; that power leaves a bitter taste in the mouth; that meanness and hardness and coldness are the unforgivable sins; that pleasure exists not in virtue of material conditions, but in the joyous heart; that the world is a very interesting and beautiful place, and that congenial labor is the secret of happiness.—A. B. Benson.

METHOD.

The absence of method, which characterizes the uneducated, is occasioned by an habitual submission of the understanding to mere events and images as such and independent of any power in the mind to classify or appropriate them. The general accomplishments of time and place are the only relations which persons of this class appear to regard in their statements. As this constitutes their leading feature, the contrary excellence, as distinguishing the well educated man, must be referred to the contrary habit. Method, therefore, becomes natural to the mind which has been accustomed to contemplate not things only, or for their own sake alone, but likewise and chiefly the relations of things, either their relations to each other or to the observer or to the state and apprehensions of the hearers.—Coleridge.

THINKS LIQUOR MEN BENEFIT

Haines' Only Regret Over Defeat In Maine Election

SLASH IN PROGRESSIVE VOTE

Gardner Thinks It Due to Lack of Interest In Public Questions Other Than Liquor Legislation—Congressmen Are Returned and Democrats Gain In the State Legislature

Portland, Me., Sept. 16.—Governor Haines, in a statement commenting on the state election at which he was defeated by Oakley C. Curtis of Portland, his Democratic opponent, said:

"I never believed a majority would turn down an administration which stood for law enforcement. The alliance of the Progressive leaders with the Democratic machine in this state was too much to overcome. Personally I have nothing to regret. My only regret is the encouragement the liquor interests receive by the result."

Governor-elect Curtis, when asked for his views of the election, said he was gratified at the result, but had no statement to make at present.

"I regret that the voters of our state will not interest themselves, except in a presidential election, in any public questions other than liquor legislation," said Halbert P. Gardner, the Progressive gubernatorial candidate, whose vote was 63 percent less than that cast for Colonel Roosevelt two years ago.

"I hope the time will come when our state will wake up to the fact that there are other political issues," he said. "We shall now prepare ourselves for the campaign of 1916."

The Democratic victory was measured by 3587 votes, the plurality by which Curtis defeated Haines, according to unofficial returns. All four congressmen, three Republicans and one Democrat, were re-elected.

In a vote heavier than that cast at the last presidential election, both Haines and Curtis ran well ahead of the Taft and Wilson figures, while the Progressive vote cast for Gardner showed a pronounced decline from that cast for Roosevelt.

The total vote at hand exceeded that from the same places in 1912 by 11,878. The Republicans showed an increase of 31,541 against a Progressive loss of 30,461. The Democratic gain was 10,798.

Returns on the legislature show a Democratic gain of nine, a Republican loss of seven and a Progressive loss of one. The available returns show a safe Democratic majority in both branches. On a joint ballot the Democrats have seventy-four votes, the Republicans fifty-seven and the Progressives two.

Unofficial figures on the congressional contests are as follows:

First district, Asher C. Hinds, Rep., 17,017; plurality, 691.

Second district, Daniel J. McGillicuddy, Dem., 16,341; plurality, 5425.

Third district, John A. Peters, Rep., 19,161; plurality, 1671.

Fourth district, Frank E. Guernsey, Rep., 11,631; plurality, 2346.

No material change is anticipated when the missing returns come in. In the last presidential election the missing towns gave Taft 424, Wilson 662, Roosevelt 591.

While perfect weather helped bring out the vote, which was the largest cast in many years, political observers generally credit the increase to the interest aroused by the participation of more speakers of national prominence than ever before were sent to Maine in an off year.

Two cabinet members, Secretaries Redfield and Daniels, spoke for the Wilson administration, Colonel Roosevelt campaigned for the Progressives, while the Republican speakers included Senator Borah of Idaho, Senator Weeks and former Congressman McCall of Massachusetts, Congressman Kelley of Michigan, former Congressman Longworth and former Vice President Fairbanks.

TWENTY-SEVEN KILLED

Car of Passenger Train Plunges Through Trestle In Missouri

Springfield, Mo., Sept. 16.—Twenty-seven persons lost their lives and a score of others were injured when the locomotive, baggage car and forward chair car of a St. Louis and San Francisco passenger train plunged through a trestle over Brush creek, near Lebanon, and were submerged by the swollen stream.

Most of the victims were drowned in the chair car, and a great proportion of these were women and children.

"Like Father Like Son"

By JOHN BARTON OXFORD

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"Yer green sweater? Now, I've me think a minute, dearie. Sure, I've had me eyes on ut somewheres lately. Take a look in the cellar stairway. I've a mind ye'll find ut hangin' on wan av the pegs there."

"Yep; here it is, covered up be three aprons and a bag av clothespins," said he, turning back to the spotless kitchen while he drew the sweater over his big shoulders.

Mary Mooney ran an appraising eye up and down her son's stalwart figure. She did it not without a certain quiet pride.

"Ye sure do be lookin' very fit, Eddie," said she.

"And fit I am, mums," he returned lightly. "Never was I fitter in my life."

Doubling his right fist, he slowly bent his right arm until the biceps made a great curving swelling beneath the sleeve of the green sweater.

"The things I'll be doin' to that Doheeny guy at the South armory a coupla hours from now!" he threatened, laughing.

"That's the way to talk," said his mother approvingly. "'Tis yer first real bona fide fight. Yer must make good, Eddie. Don't forget that yer father was Cal Mooney, the best fighter of his weight that ever lived, so the papers was always tellin' time and time ag'in."

Again Eddie laughed. He stooped to run his fingers caressingly through her sparse gray hair, a trick he had had since childhood.

"Here's Flicker Shea now in the taxi they've sent for me. So it's off wit' me right away. Goodby, mums. Think of how me name'll be spread headed in the mornin' papers like the old man's used to be often."

He kissed her again.

"Hello, Flicker!" Young Mooney addressed the stoop shouldered man waiting on the steps outside. "The taxi's all ready. Then I've us be off!"

They went down the steps to the waiting taxi and climbed in.

"The South armory," Flicker instructed the chauffeur, and the cab lurched away from the curb.

Eddie leaned across the portly figure of Flicker Shea to wave a hand to his mother.

"Old lady's strong for yer, son, ain't she?" he observed to the younger man beside him.

"Uh-huh!" he grunted shortly without turning his eyes to his companion. "Fact is, Flicker, if she wa'n't quite so strong"—

He paused.

"Well, what?" Flicker prompted after a patient period of silence.

"If she wa'n't quite so strong for me, if she wa'n't quite so set on me doin' this and upholdin' the fame that the old man brought to the name yer wouldn't never catch me foolin' wit' no crooked game like this."

"Wot?" he gurgled in bewilderment, as if he could not credit his ears.

"If it wa'n't for her I wouldn't have nothin' to do wit' this game," Eddie repeated.

"Shame on yer!" hissed Flicker dramatically. "A man wit' yer build and yer speed and the blood of Cal Mooney in yer veins too! Fie!"

"'Tis true," said Eddie doggedly. "I'd ruther work in a foundry or dig in a ditch or do anything useful. But she thinks it's the finest game in the world. She has always been eggin' me on to it ever since I was a kid. I can see it now. She wants me to folly in the old man's footsteps and get famous and wrote about in the papers and all that.

"And so, because she's lookin' for it and because it would be sorter slingin' mud at the old man's memory if I didn't, I'm goin' to make good!"

Mr. Shea, being neither of facile nor analytical mind, puckered his bushy brows as he pondered those words. He was still puckering them when their equipage drew up before the South armory.

As the taxi came to a sputtering stop he placed one pudgy hand on Mooney's shoulder.

"Say, Eddie," he said thickly, "ye're in wrong. Yer won't never be makin' no headway wit' nothin' like that on yer mind. I never yet see a felly make good at anything that his whole heart wa'n't in, and if yer whole heart ain't in this"—

"Can it," said Eddie very crisply. "Even if me heart ain't in this thing I've got a blamed good substitute for it. It's what she's lookin' for and expectin' me to do. And yer'd better forget what I've just said to yer—see?"

"All right! I ain't never heard it, Eddie," Flicker declared magnanimously. "Come on in! We ain't none too early. Better hustle into yer ring duds. No use keepin' a bunch waitin'."

It was after 11 that evening when the taxi again came purring into the little street of the wooden tenements and stopped before the particular one which Cal Mooney's savings had bought some years ago.

Eddie Mooney got wearily out, said good night to Flicker Shea lounging on the cushions within and stood watching the cab as it spun about and went chugging up the street.

All in all, young Mr. Mooney was not a pleasing presence as he stood there under the flickering light of the street lamp.

But there was something like a grim smile on Mooney's battered features as he drew out his bunch of jangling keys, selected his latchkey and climbed the steps to the little stoop.

Before he could insert the latchkey in the lock, however, the front door flew open.

"Oh, Eddie!" cried Mary Mooney, both her arms about her big son. "It seemed as if ye was never comin'."

Gently Eddie disengaged himself.

"Come into the parley," he said somberly, leading the way into the very ornate little front room and touching a match to the gas jet.

"Eddie," she cried with sudden anxiety, catching sight of his battered features in the light with which the room was flooded as one after another he lighted all the jets in the little chandelier, "ye've been hurted!"

Eddie said nothing. Slowly he turned about that she might get the full effect of his sadly damaged face.

She came a trembling step nearer to him. Her thin hands were clasped tightly together. A light, pitying, compassionate anger flamed in her eyes.

"Ye've—ye've," came her faltering tones, "been licked!"

"And what if I have?" he said shortly, almost sullenly.

His mother stood looking fixedly at his big frame, and in her eyes, much to his surprise, was neither the anger nor the disgust nor the disappointment he had expected.

Then, with a little choking cry, she flew to him. She forced him gently down into a big, gaudy rocker of yellow brocaded plush. She bent over him, gathering his head in both her arms, pressing it close to her, mothering him as if he were some tired and hurt and disillusioned little child.

"Oh, Eddie! Oh, Eddie!" she said over and over. "Oh, I'm so sorry for ye, ye poor, poor b'y—so sorry, dearie, so sorry! But for me own sake, Eddie, I'm glad, glad—oh, so glad!"

"Huh!" Mooney managed finally to gurgle, all but speechless with astonishment.

"Mind how sorry I am for ye, dearie, won't ye?" she went on hurriedly. "For I am sorry for the cruel, bitter disappointment that this'll be to yer. But ye'll soon get over that, and if ye was licked this bad in yer very first fight ye won't be kaplin' on wit' the game, will yer? And that's what makes me so glad.

"I never wanted yer to be a fighter like yer fa-ather was, but he was set on ut. He was forever talkin' about the fine build of yer and the speed of yer and the clever way yer could handle yerself even when yer was nothin' but a tiny kid. He was always dreamin' about the great name yer'd be makin' for yerself in the ring when yer grew up, a name that was to put his own clane in the shade, accordin' to his way of thinkin'.

"And when his time come he called me to him jest before he dies and 'Mary,' says he, 'make me wan promise,' says he. 'Promise me ye'll never stand in Eddie's way, and if he wants to go into the ring when he grows up promise me ye'll be to him what ye've always been to me in that way—that ye'll stand behind him and cheer him on and encourage him, like ye've always done for me.'

"So I promised, and, though ut near broke me heart when ye first began to do yer boxin' at the clubs and yer name got talked around as Cal Mooney's clever son and a comer in the game, I remembered the promise I'd made yer fa-ather, and I stood by ut and kep' a smilin' face to yer to cheer yer on even though the heart av me was like lead within me. But now ye won't want to be fightin' anny more—not after this, will yer, Eddie?"

Eddie Mooney suddenly jumped to his feet. He caught his mother by the shoulders and gently held her off at arm's length.

He pretended to be looking at her very sternly and accusingly, but even on his bruised and battered face there was no mistaking the look of infinite relief that rested there.

"Mums," he said, with mock severity, "do yer mean to tell me you'd like me just as well—me, the son of Cal Mooney, that was the greatest fighter of his weight that ever lived—if I worked in a foundry or took the job that Spillane, the contractor, offered me awhile back—a job at the bottom, diggin' in a ditch?"

"Do yer mane," she asked, with tremulous eagerness, "that ye are goin' to give ut up and do somethin' like that? Oh, the thought of ut makes me so happy, Eddie, so happy!"

"Then listen to me for a minute," said he. "Tomorrer I'll see Spillane and take the job. Spillane was one of the best friends the old man ever had, and, what's more, he's strong for me. I'll have to start at the bottom, but he'll put me up the line just as fast as I make good. Now I'm goin' to bed."

"I'ave me fix yer cheek and that poor eye for yer before yer go," said she.

"Aw, them little welts don't amount to nothin' at all," said he.

"And, Eddie," she pleaded, clutching his sleeve as he made as if to leave the room, "don't take this thing too hard. Maybe now 'tis all for the best. Maybe ut was meant'"—

He turned to her with a smile. Once more he exercised that childhood trick of his—running his fingers gently through her hair, rumpling it softly and smiling down at her the while.

"Of course it's all for the best, mums," he chuckled. "And as for takin' it too hard, don't let that bother yer for a minute. Yer see. I knocked out Doheeny in the tenth round down to the South armory tonight."

Prince of Piedmont, Heir to Italian Throne.

Prince Humbert, heir to the Italian throne, better known by his official title as Prince of Piedmont, was born ten years ago. In the early summer he embarked on the man-of-war Puglia with a naval tutor for a cruise in the Mediterranean. Heretofore the young prince has spent his summers with his mother and three sisters, but he wants to be a sailor and therefore went to sea. Doubtless his sail was of short duration, as conditions in the Mediterranean are anything but peaceful. The naval training of the Italian crown prince is a departure from established custom of the house of Savoy, for since the time of its founder, Umbertus I. in 1032, all heirs of the house have been brought up as soldiers.

Word Guessing.

"Haven't you something new for us, Aunt Ruth?" asked Bertha.

"I'm afraid I am thought out," Aunt Ruth said, laughing. "Though I believe something did pop into my head the other night.

"It isn't much of a game," she said presently, "but it may help out some of these rainy hours."

The four drew their chairs nearer, alert to hear what Aunt Ruth had to tell.

"We will begin with the first five letters of the alphabet. Alice, Bertha and Carl may as well use their initials, and Norton and I will take D and E. Alice, you may give us the definition of a word whose first or last letter is A. Then we will try to guess it."

"Well," said Alice, "my letter ends something I like in puddings and cakes."

"Sugar!" shouted Norton, and then joined in the laugh at his blunder.

"Vanilla," guessed Carl, which was right.

"Mine begins something we cannot live without," said Bertha.

"Bread?" ventured Alice.

"No. Besides, we can live without that."

"Breakfast?" asked Norton.

"No, indeed. Plenty of people don't eat breakfast."

"Breath," guessed Aunt Ruth, and then it was her turn.

"It ends a precious stone," said Aunt Ruth.

"Sapphire!" cried Norton.

"Right. Now give us a D word."

"Something I like to eat," said Norton.

"Dates," guessed Carl.

"Dumplings?" asked Aunt Ruth.

"No," laughed Norton.

"What can it be?" wondered Alice.

The tinkle of a bell in the hallway told them it was dinner time.

"Let's go out and get it!" shouted Norton.

"Oh, dinner!" they cried. "Why didn't we think of that before?"—Youth's Companion.

Legend of the Phoenix.

The phoenix of legendary lore was a delightfully interesting bird not only because of its beauty, having a purple body and a gold collar with a glorious tail of blue and pink feathers and a splendid crest, but because it had to die every 500 years by being burned to ashes. A small worm would be found in these ashes, which became a bird on the second day and a phoenix on the third, warranted to last 500 years. And because of this pretty legend the phoenix rising from its ashes is sometimes represented in churches as an emblem of immortality.

Providing For Old Horses.

A certain Herr Franz Bizony, who died not long ago, was a great lover of animals. He dwelt at Miskolez, Hungary, and in his will bequeathed $4,000 to the city for the founding of a home for old horses.

More than a hundred horses, donkeys, cats, dogs and birds had their homes in outhouses and stables on his property during his lifetime. With the exception of his manservant, it is said that Herr Bizony had not seen another human being for twelve years before his death.

Rimed Enigma.

Once in ages long ago
I was part of wrong and woe,
Was a burden hard to bear
And a sign of shame to wear.
Now I stand for glory, fame.
Before me burns the sacred flame.
Dying men may bless my sign
And for me their all resign.
Answer.—The cross.

EACH MADE A MISTAKE.

It Was, In Fact, a Case of "Turn About Is Fair Play."

Sam Showalter was having a sale of his surplus stock. To start the sale he led out a milk cow, one of the best of his herd, and told the auctioneer she was four years old. John Dawson, a long, leathery, weather beaten fellow with a shrewd eye, bid in the cow. He gave Showalter a check for the amount and said he would come for the cow the next day.

"I tell you, John," said Showalter when Dawson rode up the next morning to lead home his purchase, "I made a mistake yesterday. I said that cow was only four years old, but when I talked it over with the old woman last night I remembered that she is eight years old. It was another cow altogether that I had in mind.

"I didn't want to let a mistake like that go with a neighbor," continued Showalter, whose word was not usually accepted as entirely dependable in the community, "so I thought the fair thing to do was to tell you and just let you take your check back and I'll keep the cow."

Dawson squinted his eye approvingly at the cow—she had every mark of a good milker—and then looked appraisingly at Showalter.

"Well, Sam," he said, "turn about is fair play. You made a mistake yesterday; I'll make one today and just keep the cow."—Youth's Companion.

FANS, BASEBALL BRAND.

Are Most of Them Imitations of the Newspaper Cartoon?

My own belief is that the fan, as the baseball writers and cartoonist have depicted him, is a very rare being. To the extent that he does exist he is the creation, not of the baseball diamond, but of the sporting writer and the comic artist. The fan models himself consciously upon the type set before him in his favorite newspaper. It is once more a case of nature imitating art.

If Mr. Gibson many years ago had not drawn a picture of fat men in shirt sleeves, perspiring freely and waving straw hats the newspaper artists would not have imitated Mr. Gibson, and the baseball audience would not have imitated the newspapers. It is true that I have seen baseball crowds in frenzy, but these have been isolated moments of high tension when all of us have been brought to our feet with loud explosions of joy or agony.

But the perspiring, ululant fan in shirt sleeves, ceaselessly waving his straw hat, uttering imprecations on the enemy, his enthusiasm obviously aroused by stimulants preceding his arrival at the baseball park, is far from being representative of the baseball crowd.—Simeon Strunsky in Atlantic Monthly.

Atomic Attraction.

Hydrogen and oxygen gases separately may be compressed to the liquid form, and then the compression further is exceedingly difficult. But in the chemical union of two atoms of hydrogen with one of oxygen to form a water molecule the immense force of atomic attraction, or chemism, as one may prefer to name the force, is one of the most powerful in nature. It reduces huge volumes of the gases down to a far less volume, and the force is far greater than can be secured in any machine of screws, levers or hydraulic presses. Atomic attraction is perhaps the most powerful in nature. At least it is strong enough to hold atoms of steel and platinum together and diamonds.—New York American.

MRS. CATLIN TO SPEAK HERE

Mrs. Claiborne Catlin, who has travelled over 475 miles on horseback through cities and towns in Massachusetts in the interest of equal suffrage, has reached Quincy, and tonight will discuss the momentous question of the age "Shall women be given a right to vote in this state?" at an open meeting.

Ms. Catlin requested permission to make her address in City Square, but because the ban is on affairs of this nature there, she will speak on Saville street.

Up to noon she had not been granted a permit but she promised at the close of a phone conference to call on City Clerk Crane this afternoon for the necessary papers.

Mrs. Catlin spread the doctrine of equal suffrage in Braintree on Tuesday and that evening addressed over 300 in the public square of the town. The horse she rides is the second one used in the trip, Diana, the handsome bay on which she left suffrage headquarters, having been withdrawn from the campaign because of his well nigh exhausted condition.

After the speech Mrs. Catlin came to Quincy and was the guest of Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney of Wollaston, an ardent supporter, over night. Today she is interviewing leading women of the city who have enlisted in the cause.

Eternal Feminine.

Margaret, aged seven years, was playing housekeeper. As she pretended to wipe the perspiration from her face she turned from the toy washboard upon which was rinsing out a handkerchief, and, addressing her brother, a year younger, said: "There you are sitting at your ease and me breaking my bones doing your washing."

Genuine Pity.

"Mr. and Mrs. Whiffer never have any arguments." "How does that happen?" "Mr. Whiffer won't argue." "The poor woman."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

President Hamilton Reviews the Year's Record by the Association

Edwin C. Johnson and Others Speak at Open Meeting

A representative gathering of the live wires of Quincy accepted the invitation of the Board of Trade to attend the public meeting at Colonial hall Wednesday evening, and the meeting augurs well for increased activity in the Board. About 150 ladies and gentlemen were present representing all parts of the city.

On the platform were seated the officers and directors of the Board, some of the speakers of the evening, and Provosts orchestra which furnished inspiring music. Conspicuous was the front elevation of a grand six-story brick block which is a possiblity if the Board obtain a membership of 1,000. On the wall was the banner of 1914 with the slogan 500 members this year.

After selections by the orchestra, President John L. Hamilton outlined the objects of the meeting and in turn introduced Edwin C. Johnson of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Secretary Bromley of the Y. M. C. A.: John S. Scott, representing the Telephone company; Herman F. McIntire and Joseph A. Sedgwick. All made very appropriate remarks.

EDWIN C. JOHNSON.

Mr. Johnson was the principal speaker and brought the best wishes of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. As Boards of Trade prospered so would the Chambers. The object of both was the getting together for common good.

He told of the history of the Chamber, which now has a membership of nearly 5000. He explained at length the work of some of the committees, there being 50 in all. There were committees on agriculture, city planning, extension of domestic trade, extension of domestic trade, extension of foreign trade, fire prevention, legislation at State House, industrial relations, maritime affairs, meetings and assemblies, publicity, membership, etc.

Mr. Johnson in telling of some of the many things accomplished by the Chamber of Commerce spoke particularly as to the settling of two strikes that had threatened Boston. One of these was the threatened strike of the street railway employees, and in this connection he stated that President Storrow gave up months of his time of his own business to sit on the arbitration board. Through the efforts of this arbitration board the strike had been averted.

The second strike averted was that of the telephone operators. All realized what the stopping of telephone service would have meant to the business houses of Boston. At almost the eleventh hour, when the calling of a strike was about at hand, the Chamber of Commerce interested festif and the strike was averted.

Another matter that originated with the Chamber of Commerce was the Safety First campaign that had been inaugurated last spring, and he believed that through the efforts of this campaign many lives had been saved. The Chamber had expended something like $1,500 in this campaign alone.

Mr. Johnson was asked some questions as to how membership was obtained and he explained in brief his method of obtaining new members one of which was that the members of the membership committee always carried an application blank in his pocket, and

This picture shows a building in Antwerp, Belgium, damaged by a bomb dropped from a Zeppelin airship navigated by German army officers. The explosion tore one corner of the roof off and blew out all the windows. Two persons were killed and several injured. Many other buildings were damaged by other bombs, and the attack from the sky at night aroused the indignation of most nations. Germany claimed that the bombs were meant to hit the army headquarters.

A WEEK OF ANNIVERSARIES

Francis P. Loud a Volunteer in September 1861

The present week is a busy one for Past Commander Francis P. Loud of Washington street. On Tuesday he celebrated in a quiet way two important events. One was his 83d birthday anniversary, and the second, equally as important, was his 57th wedding anniversary. Both of these events were observed in a quiet manner.

On Wednesday he was one of the guest at the annual dinner to the old people held at the Opera House, South Weymouth, and today he is attending the 44th annual reunion of the old 2d regiment with which he went to the front in '61 as musician and became band master. Today's reunion is being held at the Revere House, Boston.

One to see Commander Loud would not for a minute think that he had climbed the life ladder to the 82d round, for apparently he is as young and spry as when he became letter carrier.

Commander Loud has a host of warm friends in Quincy who wish him many more years of continued health and happiness.

CONGRESSIONAL CONTEST.

Frank F. Crane the Quincy candidate for the nomination for Congressman from the fourteenth district spoke to the employees of the Crosset and Arnold factories at North Abington on Wednesday, and later in the day spoke at the Republican rallies at Randolph and Canton. Commodore Crane was accompanied on his campaigning trip by Commodore Ira M. Whittemore. Candidates Raymond and Howard were also present at the rallies and spoke. Each promised to give his full support to the man who should be nominated.

LARGE EDITION WEDNESDAY.

It was necessary yesterday to print a second edition of the DAILY LEDGER of 1000 copies.

Paul Davis, the publicity representative of the "Along Came Ruth" Company, happened to see a copy of the Ledger soon after it left the press, and he was prompt to recognize its value as an advertisement to the theatre.

The papers are being circulated today in Milton, Braintree, Weymouth, and some of the outlying wards of the city.

Not only was Wednesdays Ledger a good advertisement to the theatre, but a bigger advertisement to the city of QUINCY. The Boost spirit is certainly abroad in QUINCY. Merchants are also awake to the possibilities and avail themselves of the big circulation of the Daily Ledger—over 12,000 readers every day, and about 17,000 for Wednesdays edition.

WHITON NOT A CANDIDATE

Says Personal Business Affairs Will Not Permit

President Joseph L. Whiton of the Council, who has been proposed as a candidate for Mayor by many of the city's most interested citizens, will not be a candidate, according to a letter received this morning. Mr. Whiton states his decision is for business reasons, sufficient time not being at his disposal to properly administer the office in the event of election.

He announces however that he will again be a candidate for re-election from Ward One to the City Council.

In his letter he recommends the citizens to choose a man whose experience and qualifications entitle him to the office. The letter follows:—

Editor of the Ledger:

As the time is drawing near for the selection of a candidate for the office of Mayor, and as I have been approached by a great many of our citizens to become a candidate, I deem it my duty to the public at this time to state my position in the matter.

My business is such that at present it would be impossible for me to give the attention to the office that I believe should be given it, because for the first five months of the year it takes my entire time and attention.

A great deal of pressure has been brought to bear on me to become a candidate, and while I appreciate the confidence placed in me by my fellow citizens, I am obliged to decline as far as the office of Mayor is concerned.

I am, however, pleased to serve the city as a member of the council. I shall be a candidate for that office again this fall and if elected, shall coninue to do all in my power for the best interests of my city.

I sincerely hope that when the time comes for the citizens to choose a mayor that they will select some one whose experience and qualifications entitle him to that office.

Very truly yours,
Joseph L. Whiton

WEST QUINCY MARRIAGE

Miss Clarkin the Bride of Thomas A. Paradis

Thomas A. Paradis, Jr., and Miss Catherine V. Clarkin, a well known West Quincy couple, were married at the close of a nuptial mass at St. Mary's church Wednesday morning.

Rex. Fr. William J. Duffy, assistant pastor, celebrated the mass and solmnized the ceremony. The musical portion of the mass was rendered by the regular choir under the direction of Mrs. Mary McKay Reardon, Joseph Morrisette, a friend of the groom, was the soloist.

Miss Agnes Clarkin, a sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Joseph Paradis, the brother of the groom, was best man.

The bride was dressed in white crepe de chine, and wore a veil caught up with lilies of the valley. She carried a handsome bouquet of Brides roses. Her attendant was dressed in pink crepe de chine, with hat to match and carried pink roses.

A wedding breakfast was served at the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Paradis of Dayton street, which was attended only by the immediate relatives and friends. Mr. and Mrs. Paradis will not take their honeymoon for several weeks, and on their return will live at 2 Quarry street.

The bride was a forelady at the factory of the Tubular Rivet and Stud Co., Wollaston, and is a popular member of the I. D. I. club of girls. The groom is a plumber by trade. Last week the members of the Hardy A. A. an organization of young men with which he is affiliated, tendered him a tin shower, probably the first of its kind in the city.

CHARLES H. JOHNSON WILL NOT WITHDRAW

Corrects the Rumor That he Had Declined in Favor of another Candidate

Wants the Republicans to Choose at the Caucuses

There was a rumor through City Square this morning to the effect that Charles H. Johnson had withdrawn as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor, in favor of another aspirant.

Mr. Johnson stated emphatically to a Ledger representative, however, that the rumor was baseless and that under no circumstances would he cease to be a candidate.

Having accepted the nomination last year, when the prospects of Republican success were not auspicious, and having made a creditable fight under the difficult conditions which then existed, he feels that he is morally and logically entitled to the nomination this year.

At any rate, he wants the choice to be made by the people at the caucus, and he will insist on having them pass on the question.

OLD FOLKS REUNION

Quincy People at the South Weymouth Gathering

Quincy was well represented, Wednesday, at the annual reunion of the Old Folks' Association at South Weymouth, which was attended by 125 members, the majority of whom were more than 70 years of age. Those present from Quincy, were Past Commander Francis P. Loud and Mrs. Loud, Judge E. Granville Pratt and Mrs. Pratt, and Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Loud of West Quincy. The oldest man present was William Raymond, who is 91 years of age, and the oldest lady was Mrs. Melissa Daggett, also of the same age.

There was an informal reception and renewal of acquaintances from 10 to 12 o'clock, at which hour a dinner was served. This was followed by a business session at which officers were elected for the coming year.

The members of the association were welcomed by Rev. Henry C. Alvord, and addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Willard L. Scott of Brookline and Rev. Dr. D. W. Waldron of Boston.

Probably the Colorado mine fighters during the three years' truce asked by President Wilson, will stop breaking heads and merely break the laws.

Not merely are the newspapers saying some very sassy things about the Germans, but now the government proposes to increase the tax on beer.

It is wonderful with what calm fortitude and Spartan resignation the average man views the proposal to help pay the war revenue by increasing the income tax.

If you want to know what place Petrograd formerly was, ask the boys, who are all reading the war news, rather than the schoolmarms.

FIRE LOSS VERY SMALL.

Vice President Sedgwick of the Board of Trade was slightly in error in his statement at the open meeting Wednesday evening in Colonial hall as to the fire loss in Quincy. He made the startling statement that he had found from investigation that the fire loss in Quincy was at the rate of $15 per capita which would mean a yearly fire loss of $600.000.

As a matter of fact the fire losses in Quincy are among the lowest in the state, if not in the country, and the loss per 1000 population instead of being $15 is less than $1.50 per capita.

The last report of Chief Litchfield, which was for the year 1912, shows that the total loss in Quincy for that year was but $50,402.75. Estimating the population of Quincy at 35,000, which is low the loss per capita would be but $1.44.

NEWSPAPER RESPONSIBILITY.

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, in an address delivered Labor day to a press association, urged all editors to subordinate their news to the service of the country. He particularly felt, that in this time when international issues are involved, newspapers should be careful what they print.

This is good advice. But few people realize how largely editors always do follow these counsels.

Where there are controversies as to the publication or non-publication of news, they almost always arise over some personal wrongdoing. A man gets too much bad whiskey in him, then breaks loose and assaults some one. Next morning, after paying his fine, he calls around at the newspaper office. He shows an appreciation of the editor's friendship that was never manifested before. Incidentally, he asks the paper to keep the story quiet.

"It won't do any good to print it. No one is interested in it," is his familiar sounding plea.

No good purpose is served by the suppression of such incidents. The only result is that the offending citizen is spared a part of the condemnation that is his just punishment. As a result, he is much more likely to make an ass of himself again.

It is a very different story when the newspaper man comes in contact with the police or other responsible public officials. If the newspapers printed all they know, criminals would escape, and many corrupt officials would buy tickets for Canada.

The great majority of the newspapers are handling tactfully and patriotically the news about the war. They freely print both sides. They have a right to express an opinion as to the causes of the war.

Just one suggestion could be made to certain journals, newspapers of the saffron stripe. Mere rumor ought not to be dignified with just the same emphatic and positive headlines that would be given to an authenticated report.

GERMAN LINE CONTINUES TO MAKE STAND

Believed, However, to Be Preparing For Further Retreat

GAPS IN ALLIES' LINES FILLED BY FRESH TROOPS

Von Kluck's Army Still In Most Perilous Position, While That of Crown Prince Eludes Attempt to Cut It Off From Main Battle Lines After Heavy Losses—Germans Have to Contend With Roads Made Slimy by Rains, While Allies' Lines of Communication Are Intact—Battered Right Wing Driven Back More Than Seventy Miles In Two Weeks—British Fighting Between Two Great French Forces Along River Ainse

London, Sept. 17.—The battle of the Aisne, the second great clash of the hostile armies in the struggle for mastery, is raging on a front of 100 miles, from Noyon, sixty miles northeast of Paris, to the forest of Forges on the Meuse river.

Reaching out from Amiens, northwest of Noyon, a strong force of French and British is hammering at the right wing of the German force, seeking desperately to turn it, and to drive back once more the battle-worn and exhausted troops of General von Kluck.

Re-enforcements which have been rushed to the German right have stiffened the lines that were so rapidly disintegrating. But the allied armies that are swooping down upon the flank have also been tremendously strengthened since the battle of the Marne.

Not only have fresh British and French soldiers been sent to the front to fill the gaps in the lines, but the first detachment of the native Indian troops, the hardened Sikh cavalry, have passed through Paris after their long journey by sea and have been rushed northward.

Crown Prince Gets Away

The crown prince's army has, it is believed, eluded the attempt of the French to cut it off from the main battle lines, and, by almost superhuman efforts, in which its losses were startling, has made a connection with the army of the Duke of Wuertemberg and is holding the lines of retreat across the Meuse. This is a precaution taken to insure the roads for retreat into German Lorraine in case the Germans are unable, as now seem probable, to hold back the assaults of the allies.

The Germans are still in a perilous position. In case of a decisive defeat, the armies in the east will be able to pass by Longwy to Diedenhofen and by Arnes to Metz. But the armies in the west will be so closely crowded by the allies both from the south and west that Generals von Kluck and von Buelow seem to be in as precarious a position as they were at the beginning of the week.

The reoccupation of Amiens by the French has proven most important from a strategic point of view. Once more, with the crossings of the Aisne held securely, the French and British are in a position to trap the German right wing. The invaders succeeded in getting out of the first trap, but with a terrible loss in killed, wounded and captured, and a greater loss in morale. Not yet recovered from their demoralization, they are less apt than before to be able to squirm out from the smashing attacks of the allies, which are again closing in upon them like the blades of gigantic shears.

Nature Aids the Allies

To add to the misery and the desperation of their plight, the Germans are contending against nature as well as the allies. The incessant rains that have been drenching northern France still continue to sluice down, converting even the fine roads of France into treacherous slime.

The British and French are marching ankle deep in mud, but they have the advantage of a network of railroads behind them to bring up food and ammunition as rapidly as needed. The Germans, depending largely upon motor vans, are much more handicapped by the slippery footing.

Then, too, they are compelled to guard the great guns that were being brought forward to batter the Paris forts. These were well behind von Kluck's main force, but his retreat has been so swift that now he must either abandon the guns or risk a delay that may prove fatal.

It is as yet too early to forecast the importance of the battle of the Aisne. If the allies press so closely upon the Germans that they call back their main forces to join battle, it may rank with the battle of the Marne. But indications point to the prospect that it will merely be a rear guard fight on the part of the Germans to secure the further retreat of the invaders to the entrenched lines that they have prepared near the Belgian and Luxemburg boundaries.

Details of Battle Lacking

Few details of the fighting have been given out by the war offices in London, Paris or Berlin. Nowhere have the lines of the allies weakened, despite the vicious charges of the Germans, and, on the invading right wing, von Kluck's men have again begun to retire slightly.

It is felt in London that this absence of news is probably due to the eagerness of the allies to keep secret their attempt to flank the German right wing. Already this battered wing has been driven back more than seventy miles in a fortnight, constantly fighting and for the last few days floundering through quagmires and splashing along roads that resemble rivers.

The Aisne can be of but little service, for the allies from Amiens are on the north side of the river and numerous bridges toward the west are held by the British. Already the German lines have begun to give slightly here under the persistent attacks of the British and French. As in the retreat from Belgium and the battle of the Marne, the British army is fighting between two great French forces, and it is supposed that a considerable part of the British are in the flanking army.

Left Centre Driven Back

The German centre and left appear to hold better defensive positions than on the right. If a flanking movement, however, starts another German retreat on the right, the retirement will have to be carried on all along the line, and the battle of the Aisne will then hardly prove so stubborn a fight as was its predecessor.

The German left centre, where the army of the crown prince is the principal force, has been driven back several miles from Varennes, which it held Tuesday, but apparently the French have been unable to pierce the strong line. The bridges across the Meuse at Consenvoye, just out of range of the Verdun guns, but exposed to a sortie of the garrison, are held by the crown prince's army.

A combined attack here by the French who have been driving this army northward and by the Verdun garrison might prove as disastrous to the German left as was the attack of the Paris garrison and the British and French armies upon the right wing.

The armies of General von Heeringen and the crown prince of Bavaria, recalled from Alsace and the Vosges, presumably stretch from the Meuse to the great German forts about Metz, the rallying point of the retreating armies if they are driven off from French soil.

The centre lines, which bore the brunt of the fighting in the battle of the Marne, will presumably have the quietest time in the battle of the Aisne, for the allies will concentrate their efforts upon the armies of General von Kluck, on the extreme right, and of the crown prince, north of Verdun. If either of these gives way appreciably, the centre lines, which include the strongly fortified city of Laon, can hardly be held by the invaders.

SEEKS TO SAVE CAPITAL

Austria Realizes That She Is In Most Desperate Plight

Austria is now sacrificing everything—troops, territory and prestige—in the desperate effort to save Budapest and Vienna from the Russians and Servians.

Dispatches from Rome say that Austria has abandoned all pretence at struggle in Galicia, and is endeavoring to withdraw from that scene of disaster whatever troops can be snatched from the czar's armies.

Galicia is now a Russian province, save only for the strongholds of Jaroslav and Przemsyl, toward which the remnants of the shattered armies of von Auffenberg, Dankl and the crown prince are fleeing.

NOT TIME FOR PEACE

Allies Insist Upon Putting an End to "Menace" of Germany

Fresh reports from America of peace talk, coming from Oscar Straus and Count von Bernstorff, do nothing more at London than accentuate the fact that the allies are not willing to make peace at this time. They might entertain a formal proposition of peace, but only on terms which Germany could not possibly accept.

It is obvious, judging by talks with high officials, that Germany must be crushed; that there must be made an end for all time to the so-called menace of Germany.

Britain wants this war to bring to an end the race for armored superiority. She also wants to eliminate the German competition for mastery of the seas, so that England may cut down her own fleet and end the mad rush for naval supremacy.

GERMAN ATROCITIES

President Wilson Receives Statement From Belgian Commission

A resume of the findings of the Belgian commission of inquiry appointed by the King of the Belgians to investigate the alleged atrocities committed by German troops was made public by the Belgian legation after the report had been presented to President Wilson.

The findings were grouped under the headings of "The Atrocities at Linsmeau and Orsmael," "The Massacre at Aerschot" and "The Destruction of Louvain," and recited cases of massacre, rapine, pillage and incendiarism.

The president promised to give the statement attentive perusal. "Presently," he said, "I pray God very soon, this war will be over. The day of accounting will then come, when, I take it for granted, the nations of Europe will assemble to determine a settlement. Where wrongs have been committed their consequences and the relative responsibility involved will be assessed."

The president declared the time is not ripe to pass judgment on acts of war, and that it was not for any one nation to decide.

USE OF DUM-DUM BULLETS

President Replies to Protests of Heads of Germany and France

President Wilson replied to the message recently received from Emperor William protesting against the alleged use by the allied armies of dum-dum bullets. He said he had read the communication with the gravest concern, but that it would be unwise and premature for the United States to express any final judgment in the controversy.

A cablegram replying to the protest of President Poincare of France, who charged that the Germans were using dum-dum bullets, was also prepared. It was not made public, but was known to follow closely the text of the president's message to Emperor William.

RELIEF WORK COMPLETE

Breckenridge Reports American Refugees Practically All Cared For

Henry S. Breckenridge, American assistant secretary of war, arrived in London from Havre on the American cruiser Tennessee. The cruiser brought no American refugees, as practically all of those who desire to leave had already done so.

Breckenridge expects to remain in London only a few days before leaving for the United States. He says his original estimate of 100,000 Americans in Europe wishing to get away when the war broke out has been verified by those engaged in relief work, for reports show that about that number had been assisted or are in process of being aided in some way to leave Europe.

GENERATOR BURNS OUT

German Wireless Plant In New Jersey Is Forced to Close

Tuckerton, N. J., Sept. 17.—The big wireless station here, one of the two plants in the United States in direct touch with Germany, is closed.

Lieutenant Gygax, U. S. N., in charge of the station, said one of the generators of the plant had burned out. He said there was no evidence of any tampering with the machinery.

The station is out of operation for an indefinite period, Gygax said, as the extent of the repairs to be made has not yet been determined. There was a large amount of business on hand when the breakdown occurred.

The equipment was manufactured in Germany. If the material cannot be obtained in the United States it may be six months before the plant can resume operations, Gygax said.

THE FOOTPATH.

Ah, here it is! The sliding rail
That marks the old remembered spot;
The gap that struck our schoolboy trail
The crooked path across the lot.

It left the road by school and church,
A penciled shadow, nothing more,
That parted from the silver birch
And ended at the farmhouse door.

No line or compass traced its plan:
With frequent bends to left or right.
In aimless, wayward curves it ran.
But always kept the door in sight.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

WAS ORDERED TO STOP SPEAKING

But Moved on to New Place and Continued

Although Mrs. Claiborne Catlin, the young woman who has already travelled over 475 miles on horseback through the cities and towns of Massachusetts in the interest of equal suffrage, was refused a permit to speak in City Square, she spoke just the same.

It was a few minutes before 8 o'clock when she rode up to the fountain, and almost immediately was surrounded by a large crowd. It was a very orderly and there was no attempt to jolly the speaker. She immediately started into the discussion of the subject of equal suffrage for women, and had about completed her address when an officer stepped up and informed her that she could not speak without a permit.

Mrs. Catlin said that she was sorry for she had nearly completed her address, and would have liked to finish. The officer said that he could not permit it.

Without any further argument she said that she would go elsewhere, and hoped that the audience would follow her. She rode to the corner of Hancock and Depot street, near the corner of City Hall where she completed her address without interruption.

She spoke of the conditions of the home, and the reason that the place was not where the woman should be confined. The woman was vitally interested in the matter of pure food products, that the milk, meats and water were pure. It was not fair for the husband to accuse the wife of cooking poor meats, when she had no means of being sure that the meats were pure. That no complaint of the poor quality of milk or water should be made as the woman had no voice.

The law she said provides for inspectors of water, milk and meats, but if the inspector does not do his duty what can a woman do about it, or why should the husband blame the woman for poor meat when she has no voice in compelling the inspector to do his duty.

She also spoke of the fallen woman, whose conditions brought about by white slavery would be lessened if the woman had an equal chance with the men at the ballot.

In some of the western states where women had been given the ballot resolutions looking to the morality and health of the communities had been passed and everywhere the woman had been praised for her work.

She also said that now almost everything we wear comes to us in the ready made form and that if the women of Massachusetts could visit the sweat shops of New York as she had done and seen the conditions they would not want to wear the clothing. If women had an equal right with men to the ballot these things could be regulated.

In closing she urged the men of Massachusetts to give the women an equal opportunity to use the ballot as the men. Mrs. Catlin was frequently applauded during her talk and the crowd which gathered about her was most orderly.

Merchants and Newspapers Great Factors In Building Up a Town

PATRONIZE YOUR HOME NEWSPAPER!

Although there are many reasons why EVERY ONE SHOULD DO ALL IN HIS POWER TO HELP THE HOME PAPER, it is self evident that the men who can and should do the most are the merchants. Their success means the success of the newspaper, and none will deny that the SUCCESS OF THE NEWSPAPER IS MAINLY DEPENDENT ON THE MERCHANTS. The newspaper is vitally interested in the success of those who have things to offer to the community.

Women and many men nowadays read the advertising columns almost as closely as they do the news columns.

IF A MERCHANT HAS ANYTHING SPECIAL TO OFFER HE KNOWS THAT THE VERY BEST WAY TO LET THE PEOPLE KNOW THAT HE HAS IT IS THROUGH THE COLUMNS OF THE LOCAL NEWSPAPER. MERCHANTS SHOULD TAKE A DEEP INTEREST IN THEIR HOME NEWSPAPER. IT IS AN INSTITUTION OF THE TOWN. IT SHOULD BE SUPPORTED. IT SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED. IT IS THE GREATEST TOWN BOOMER THERE IS. THE NEWSPAPER IS NECESSARY TO THE MERCHANT AND THE MERCHANT TO THE NEWSPAPER. IF THE HOME NEWSPAPER OCCASIONALLY KNOCKS IT IS TO REMEDY SOMETHING THAT IS WRONG, OR AT LEAST SOMETHING THAT IT HONESTLY THINKS IS WRONG. THE HOME NEWSPAPER'S HANDS SHOULD BE HELD UP. IT NEEDS THE SINCERE MORAL SUPPORT OF EVERYBODY IN THE COMMUNITY, BUT NONE MORE THAN THE MERCHANTS.

Merchants of a town, those who supply its daily needs, invariably are PUBLIC SPIRITED CITIZENS. They are the men who make up the boards of trade. They are always in the forefront of any agitation looking to the BETTERMENT OF THE MUNICIPALITY. Their cause always is identical with that of the home newspaper. There should be a spirit of co-operation between the merchants and the home newspaper.

MERCHANTS, BOOST FOR THE HOME NEWSPAPER!

THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

THOMAS CRANE PUBLIC LIBRARY
HIGH SCHOOL PUBLIC SCHOOLS
WOODWARD INSTITUTE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL

Plans have been decided upon for the opening of the evening school term which will take place Monday, October 5. There will, as usual, be two schools opened for foreigners, in which exclusive attention will be given to teaching the rudiments of the English language and other essentials for naturalization . These two schools will be held in the Willard and in the New Adams buildings. The latter building will be used for this purpose for the first time this year.

The old Adams building because of its conversion into an Industrial school, no longer is available and even if it were, the growth of the evening schools has been such that the larger building is required to provide the necessary seating capacity.

The new building, too, is much better lighted than the old one, and its spacious hall, which is already used by the Civic League for Immigrants will be of great assistance in the regular work of the evening school.

Teachers will be provided, as was the case last year, who know and can speak the language of the pupils, and every effort will be made to reach as many racial groups as possible to spread the work of education. If these schools continue their steady progress of the last three or four years, a 25 per cent increase in attendance may confidently be expected.

The classes at the High school will open at the same time and will provide instruction in free hand and mechanical drawing, in bookkeeping, penmanship, arithmetic, and subjects required for civil service examination. These classes will be held on three evenings a week this year, instead of four as in previous years. This change will probably give increased attendance and better results.

The trade classes advertised by the School Committee make an ambitious programme and furnish excellent educational opportunities for young men engaged in the trades. These classes will cover 20 nights and will be in session twice a week. They will be open only to persons over 17 who are engaged in the trades mentioned and will be taught by competent men from the trades.

All of these classes for men will this year be conducted in the Industrial School on Phipps street in the old Adams building, and to join them, advance registration will be required. The office of the Industrial school will be open every evening next week from 7 to 9 for the purpose of registration or registration may be made by mail.

The classes will number 15 each, and no class will be started unless the advance registration reaches that number. The classes arranged for men are as follows:

Drawing and blue print reading for machinists.

Drawing and blue print reading for joiners.

Drawing, blue print reading and estimating for plumbers.

Drawing, blue print reading and estimating for electricians.

Sheet metal design and development.

Gear design, mould loft work, preparation for examination for engineers licenses.

Monument design, lettering for granite cutters.

Roof framing and stair building for carpenters.

CLASSES FOR WOMEN.

Classes will be formed for instruction in cooking and sewing as in former years. The cooking class will be opened in the Willard school on Monday, October 5, provided a sufficient number register in advance. The sewing class will be opened at the High school in the sewing rooms, with the same conditions as to registration.

The sewing course will be radically different from that of previous years and will follow the lines suggested by the State agents for this branch of work. The use of patterns will be taught and the work will be specifically arranged in unit courses.

The evening school work as a whole will be advertised by large posters spread through the city especially in the factories and shops, by small leaflets for general distribution, and by the columns of the daily papers.

TEACHERS RETIREMENT.

The new Teachers Retirement Law goes into effect the present month, and is of general interest. The operations of this law are compulsory upon new teachers coming into the public service after this date, and are optional with teachers who were already in the service.

Briefly described, the law brings into effect a system of pensions for teachers, to the support of which the teacher herself, and the state alike, contribute.

It is provided that contributions toward the pension allowance shall be in general on the basis of 5 per cent of the teachers annual salary, provided however that no contribution shall be less than $35 yearly nor more than $100.

In return, retirement for the teacher is made optional at the age of 60, and compulsory at the age of 70, and the retirement allowance will range from $300 to $600, dependent upon the length of service and the rate of salary received by the teacher while in service.

In case of the retirement of the teacher from service before the retirment age from any cause, the amount paid in by the teacher is returned with interest at 3 per cent.

At its best the law provides an excellent pension plan; at its worst, it is a system of compulsory savings.

The law makes a very welcome appeal to the teacher and its provisions are being widely accepted by the teachers already in service.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

A new book at the Thomas Crane Public Library by Mary Antin, whose Promised land has met with such favor and is now so widely read, will be welcomed by public spirited citizens interested in the subject of immigration.

"They who knock at our gates" considers these three questions with reference to immigration:—"A question of principle: Have we any right to regulate immigration?
A question of fact: What is the nature of our present immigration?
A question of interpretation: Is immigration good for us?"

The book is divided into three chapters:—1. The law of the fathers. 2. Judges in the gate, and 3. The fiery furnace. In the first the author based her discussion on the Declaration of Independence. In the second she discussed the reasons given by those not in favor of immigration. And in the third the effects of immigration on us.

Mary Antin's great love for her adopted country is clearly shown and also her wide knowledge of the conditions whereof she speaks.

The library has several books containing the Declaration of Independence and also many books and pamphlets on immigration which may be found by consulting the card catalog.

MAYOR MILLER COMFORTABLE

News from the home of Mayor Miller this noon was to the effect that he was resting comfortably and was doing as well as can be expected. He is able to be up about the house but as yet has not ventured out. He is under the care of a physician and is siad to be responding to the treatment given.

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Miss Mabel Doring, of 30 Faxon road entertained thirteen friends at her home Wednesday evening in honor of the eighteen anniversary of her birth. The decorations were potted plants and palms, brilliantly illuminated. During the evening vocal solos were rendered by Dr. Elmer Hollingsworth and J. Edward Murphy, both of Cambridge. Whist souvenirs were awarded to Miss Ethel Axberg and Ambrose Grignon. A catered supper was served by Burleigh and Martin.

INDIAN SUMMER.

The noon temperature, which dropped as low as 62 degrees a week ago and since has been gradually climbing, reached the 79 degree point at noon today. For a week the noon temperature did not get above 65 at noon, and many were led to believe that fall weather had arrived ahead of time. It looks now however as though the Indian summer weather was at hand.

SECRETARY BROMLEY.

A. F. Bromley, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. said we are interested in boosting Quincy and as far as I can see the only organiaztion helping its progress is the Board of Trade. I joined because I felt it a public duty. I hope any man in the audience, not a member, will join not for what he is going to get out of it, but because of the good he may do. There is a great work in all cities and towns for Boards of Trade. Come in and be workers.

JOHN F. SCOTT.

President Hamilton, in introducing John F. Scott of the N. E. T. & T. Co., said when Mr. Scott came to Quincy to make his headquarters he was ordered to join the Board of Trade and that he was to act as the nether stone between his organization and the citizens of Quincy.

Mr. Scott handled the situation in Quincy without gloves. He said he came here with instructions to join not only the Board of Trade, but every organization which has the interest of the citizens at heart.

In speaking of what organizations can do, he said the Boston Chamber of Commerce had more to do with the settlement of the proposed strike among the Telephone company employees than any other organization. The reason men join that organization, he declared, was because they expect to receive something in return, and for the welfare of what they represent, and for the good of the city in which they reside.

He said no reason exists why the Board of Trade should not have a membership of 1000 or more.

Mr. Scott said he sensed an unusual situation in this city, and made an impersonal investigation, which resulted in his acquiring much information as to how people in general felt in Quincy.

During the last tour of the Board of Trade he says he heard several say that the worst they had to contend with, was the slurring remarks of citizens and the general finding of fault with what the organization did or intended to do.

It struck me as being peculiar, he said, and an investigation was made. Between 50 and 60 of the business men and representative citizens, of all sections and walks of life, were visited. To all the questions, "What do you think of Quincy, its development, its schools and its Board of Trade," were put.

And, gentlemen, I am sorry to have to stand here tonight, and say that if everyone of those men who spoke would "sell their hammer and buy a horn" there would be such a rush to music stores the police would have to be called out to quell the riot.

Mr. Scott then spoke of Quincy and its many attractions for homes. Ownership of a home, he said, was a great factor in a man's life. The man who said, it was as easy to pay rent as to own a home, never does either.

He then made a fine appeal for an increase in the membership of the Board of Trade. He said the answer to give the men who found fault was that it was their criticism that was needed to keep us from making mistakes. Men that are never satisfied are the kind who are not wanted, the kind that if they were lucky enough to get into heaven would not be satisfied because they had no chance to look over the plans beforehand.

With 500 members Mr. Scott said you have provided the best gun possible and it will then be up to all to furnish the amunition.

Wake up, stop molting, produce something. There is no room here for drones. If you lend your name and influence to the Board of Trade you will be surprised, and next year you will register from Quincy when in an out of town hotel and be proud to call it your home.

PRESIDENT HAMILTON.

President Hamilton at this point reviewed the years work of the Quincy Board of Trade: He said:

The Quincy Board of Trade was established in 1901. Its object has always been the greatest good for the greatest number. In its early history because of the few who were then members, its activities were to an extent restricted, but as time went on, and the people of Quincy saw the Board of Trade was an earnestly working body, they offered their encouragement.

In the beginning of 1913, at which time I had the honor to become your President, our membership was 239. This membership increased to 327 by January 1st, 1914, and at the present time is approximately 350. The old Saying "that numbers are strength" needs no better exemplification than in an institution of the character of the Board of Trade. Increased membership means increased interest, greater activities and larger funds with which to operate. Quincy is a city of between 25 and 40 thousand inhabitants and the membership of the Quincy Board of Trade should be, at least 1000 and it can be 1000 very easily if each of you gentlemen would evert yourself a trifle for the benefit of the organization which does not advertise itself with a brass band, but which nevertheless is quietly working working all the time. It is a common habit, I regret to say with a great many people in our city to regard its Board of Trade as rather in the matter of a clearing house, for private opinion. That such is not the case with the organization to which you gentleman belong is evidenced by the facts in the case.

A brief resume of some of the endeavors and some of the accomplishments of the Quincy Board of Trade during the past years, I feel is not out of place, and if you will be patient with me, I will try to show you briefly just what we have accomplished, and what we have assisted in accomplishing, and further what we have tried to accomplish during the past two years.

The activities of your Board have resulted in securing an appropriation from the State of $100,000.00 for the further extension of the boulevard towards Hancock street.

An appropriation for the improvement of the channels and basin to the yacht clubs at Wollaston beach.

An appropriation of $9000.00 for the improvement of the channel at Houghs Neck and basin up to the public landing established by the city and largely by the board's agitation.

An appropriation from the city to make soundings on the Board Meadows relative to the establishment at the point of a public dock.

We secured a fire vent fare from West Quincy to the chocolate mills at Milton Lower Mills in place of a former ten cent fare.

You will grant me, I think, that the train service of the New York, New Haven to the different stations in Quincy is much improved. The 12.05 train from Boston at night, for which the Board is wholly responsible is without a doubt an accommodation to a great many, and the connections with that train by the Bay State Street Railway Company were brought about by the Board of Trade.

The late car from Quincy to Neponset is another of our successful efforts.

The establishment of the cordial relations with the Telephone Co. and constant touch with that company has, we believe, materially improved its services.

This is equally so of the Bay State Street Railway Company.

The movement to have in Quincy a County Court building was inaugurated in the Board of Trade, and the present building is a monument of the effectiveness and usefulness of the Board.

The Granite avenue bridge when finished will make a shorter and a most desirable entrance to Quincy. This had the active support of your Board, and we take no little credit for the securing of the $75,000.00 appropriation by the legislature. In 1913 a bill was introduced into the legislature taking the control of the rivers and ponds from the cities and towns to place them under the control of the Harbors and Land Commission of the State. This legislative bill was harmful, and the Quincy Board of Trade actively opposed it. The bill was defeated.

Regarding the grade crossings in Quincy, you all know of the action of your Board. We fought for the depression as long as we had a leg to stand on for the reason that Quincy in its various meetings had favored depression. For the present, it would appear we had lost the fight, but the story is not yet told.

The activities of the Board of the Safe and Sane Fourth of July celebrations have resulted in a distinct advantage to the city, to the merchants, and have been an element in advertising Quincy.

During the past two years the Board has inaugurated a Field Day, and at that time its members, as many as can be gotten together, have made a tour of the city visiting its various industries. The success attending these Field Days, and the resultant benefits are marked.

The Board of Trade assisted largely in the entertainment of the Retail Granite Dealers of the Country on the occasion of their convention in August 1913, and was host to the Retail Grocers and Provision Dealers Association of Massachusetts at their annual meeting in April, 1914. Both of these meetings have been very highly spoken of by the visitors from the various cities, and by the delegates who attended from all the cities of the United States.

The objectional features of the sewer outlet at Moon Island have been brought to the attention of the Board, and the matter is under consideration now. A conference with the State Authorities, and with those of the City of Boston is working to the abatement of conditions.

A comfort station in City Square, and the establishing of a Waiting Room of the Bay State Street Railway Co., are two much needed improvements. Both of these have the attention of the Board and the early accomplishment of the same is anticipated.

When Houghs Neck and Squantum talked secession from the city, the Board used its best efforts. Your committee attended the meetings in both places, and in conference with the citizens of both sections, the wisdom of remaining a part of the city was clearly established.

The sidewalk now being laid on west side of Hancock street has had the active support of the Board, and we take to ourselves no mean part of the credit for its accomplishments.

The town of Brookline petitioned to withdraw from Norfolk County. This your Board, regarded as inimical to the best interests of Norfolk county. The bill was earnestly opposed by your Board and was defeated.

Through the activities of your chairman of your Water Front and Water Ways, an appropriation of $161,000, has been gained for the widening and the deepening of the channel of the Weymouth Fore river. Now a further appropriation of $389,000 is asked for. At a conference with the U. S. District Engineer in Boston, members of your committee were present, and urged the importance of this proposal. A second and most successful meeting on this project has been held in Quincy under the auspices of the Water Front and Water Ways Committee at which time Col. Craighill, U. S. district engineer, was entertained at lunch and was accompanied on a tour of inspection. The matter is making most favorable progress, and the prospect that the appropriation will be recommended is very bright.

There is in your city an organization of Boy Scouts. Your Board believed that it is worthy of attention and encouragement, and a committee of your Board has been appointed to co-operate in extending its usefulness, and assisting in its support.

Your Board is a member of the Atlantic Deeper Water Ways Association which is actively pushing the construction of a canal from Narragansett bay to Quincy bay, and your Board sends delegates to the conferences of that association.

Granite is the keystone of Quincy. The great dock to be erected at South Boston must necessarily use vast quantities of granite. A committee of your Board in conjunction with a committee of Granite Manufacturers As-

EX-MAYOR STONE IS UNDECIDED

Has Been Urged to Enter the Mayoralty Contest

Former Mayor Eugene R. Stone, whose name has been frequently mentioned as a possible candidate for the Republican nomination for mayor, in an interview Wednesday evening, said he had not yet taken a definite position with regard to it.

He said that numerous friends had approached him and asked him to enter the race, and that he was giving their request serious consideration. Mr. Stone says he has received every assurance of support from prominent men of the community, but will not be prepared to make an announcement for several days.

There is a Heap of Solace in Being Able to Depend Upon a Well-Earned Reputation.

For months Quincy readers have seen the constant expression of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills, and read about the good work they have done in this locality. What other remedy ever produced such convincing proof of merit?

Richard W. Smith, painter, 14 Blake St., Wollaston, Mass., says: "I suffered from a painful back and kidney trouble for a long time. I was so stiff on damp and rainy mornings that it was some time before I got limbered up enough to dress myself. I had a dull, heavy pain through the small of my back. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up all right. I have used this remedy off and on since whenever I have needed a kidney tonic. Doan's Kidney Pills have never failed to put me in good shape. In my present work, painting, I find Doan's Kidney Pills to be just the medicine I need for keeping my kidneys in good working order. I have recommended Doan's Kidney Pills before and am glad to do so again."

COMPANY OF ITALIANS

Organized in Quincy to Respond If Called

The intensely patriotic spirit of the Italian residents of this city was ably demonstrated Wednesday, when Arnaldo DiNicola of Canal street, who held the post of telegrapher in the Italian army with the rank of sergeant, ecruited a company of 31 men prepared to leave on a moment's notice, within three hours after he had received the call to muster a company.

Many of the enthusasts are veterans of the Italian wars of the past 20 years and several are medal of honor men. The deep sympathy they have for their country in her serious predicament led them to rejoin their colors to participate if necessary in a defensive war. The men are the first of the foreigners of this city to respond to the call "To Arms."

On Wednesday evening they went to Boston and headed by Sergeant DiNicola, marched from the South Station to the New England recruiting station where they formally pledged their loyalty. Their company brought the quota enrolled the past two days up to 500.

STATE CAMPAIGN FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Three Hundred and Fifty Meetings to Be Held in a Single Week in Massachusetts---Every City and Town in the Old Bay State to Be Covered.

Leading Platform Temperance Orators of Nation to Take Part in Storming State in the Interest of National Prohibition Measure Now Pending in Congress.

Boston, Sept. 8.—Beginning Sept. 21, there will be seven days which promise to be the greatest week in temperance annals in the history of this state. The campaign, which is to be conducted jointly by the Anti-Saloon League of America and the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League, contemplates having a general rally in every town and city of the state. About 350 different meetings are to be held, arrangements for most of which have already been made. In addition to the meetings which will be held in the various towns during the evenings of the week beginning Sept. 21, special rallies will be conducted in all the larger cities on Sunday afternoon.

Among the cities where these special afternoon rallies will be held are: Boston, Springfield, Lynn, Worcester, Brockton, Cambridge, Lowell, Brookline, Fall River, Chelsea, Lawrence, Haverhill, Malden, Medford Melrose, Quincy, Somerville, Waltham, Pittsfield, Milford, Newburyport, Newton, Northhampton, Plymouth, South Framingham, Taunton, Wakefield, Warren and Watertown.

Prominent Speakers to Take Part.

Fifty or more prominent platform temperance orators from over the United States will take part in the campaign during the week. Among these will be such men as Dr. P. A. Baker, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America; Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson, member of congress from Alabama; Governor Robert B. Glenn of North Carolina, Hon. Frederick Landis, ex-member of congress from Indiana; Arthur J. Davis, superintendent Anti-Saloon League of Massachusetts; Hon. Sam Small of Georgia, Ernest H. Cherrington, general manager of the publishing interests of the Anti-Saloon League of America; Hon. William H. Anderson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York; Dr. James K. Shields, superintendent of the New Jersey Anti-Saloon League; Dr. Lewis Albert Banks, author and lecturer; Hon. Daniel A. Poling of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, T. Alex. Cairns, Ph.D., author and lecturer of New Jersey; Howard H. Russell, D.D., founder of the Anti-Saloon League and general secretary of the Lincoln-Lee Legion; Dr. A. C. Bane, financial secretary of the Anti-Saloon League of America; E. J. Moore, Ph.D., superintendent of the Pennsylvania Anti-Saloon League; Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, who is leading the fight for state prohibition in Ohio; George W. Young of Kentucky, Hon. Grant Hudson of Michigan, Fred H. Lawton, A.M., Massachusetts, editor of The New Republic; Hon. Frederick Fosdick, ex-mayor of Fitchburg; William Horton Foster, director of the Ford Hall Foundation; Edwin C. Dinwiddie of Washington, D. C., legislative superintendent Anti-Saloon League of America; Hon. S. E. Nicholson of Indiana, editor of the American Friend; Milo G. Kelser, assistant secretary of the Lincoln-Lee Legion; J. Frank Burke of Albany, N. Y., and George W. Morrow of Detroit.

Petitions to Congress.

A part of the general program will be the circulation of petitions requesting congress to act favorably on the house joint prohibition resolution now pending in congress. The ministers of every church in the state will be requested to preach on the subject of national prohibition on Sunday, Sept. 20, and it is hoped that by means of the petitions which will be circulated in the churches on that Sunday at least 100,000 signatures can be secured to petitions asking for favorable consideration of the measure by congress

Moreover, all church organizations, as such, as well as all Sunday schools, Young People's societies will be asked to send special petitions to members of congress from Massachusetts urging them to use their influence in expediting the passage of the prohibition measure.

Nothing similar to this great week's campaign in Massachusetts has ever before been attempted in the state and it is confidently expected by those who have charge of the arrangements that at least 250,000 people will be gathered in the audiences of these several hundred rallies in all parts of the state.

Boston Meetings.

According to the plans which have been arranged, seventeen large mass meetings will be held in Boston on the closing day, Sunday, Sept. 27. There will be one central meeting in the heart of the city and the other meetings will be distributed among the several subdivisions and outlying districts. Anti-Saloon League officials are arranging for the largest auditoriums in all of Boston to accommodate these Sunday afternoon rallies. It is also likely that provision will be made for overflow meetings, especially in the central portions of the city.

Purpose of the Rallies.

The purpose of these special meetings which will be held in all parts of the state during the campaign week is to arouse interest in the movement for national prohibition, calling special attention to the joint resolution now pending in both houses of congress. In connection with the holding of these meetings it is the plan of those who have the matter in charge to placard the state with posters and bills, not only calling attention to the special campaign being conducted in Massachusetts, but showing something of the progress being made in the Anti-Saloon League movement throughout the United States as well as giving to the people in readable form some of the latest and best facts which have been secured through scientific demonstration showing the relation of alcohol to industrial inefficiency, accidents, crime, pauperism, insanity, etc.

The same plan of campagn contemplated for Massachusetts will probably be used in practically every other state since the national organization of the league is attempting to use every effort possible, first to secure the early passage of the prohibition amendment resolution in congress and afterwards to secure the ratification of the amendment by the legislatures of the necessary three-fourths of the states

The prospects are that the people will know more about the national prohibition movement and be more interested than ever before in helping to make it a success.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hewes Tilton of Cambridge has devised a novel way of attracting attention to her work along the line of anti-alcohol education. She has fitted up her automobile to carry an exhibit. When she stops her car, lantern slides throw on a screen in front twenty anti-alcoholic posters. The American Unitarian Association will call on the various Unitarian churches in the state to have this motor car exhibit in their towns as their contribution to the campaign.

Only One Solution.

There is only one solution, and that is to destroy it without question or compromise. These are the teachings of science, and we welcome every effort that has one object, the prohibition of the traffic, destruction of the saloon and breaking up of the delusion that alcohol in any way contributes to the health and vigor of the race.—Dr. T. D. Crothers.

REVENUES NOT ESSENTIAL

United States Not Dependent on Licence Money Paid by the Liquor Traffic.

From the time the federal revenue tax was put on the liquor traffic, fifty years ago, one of the favorite pro-liquor arguments has been to the effect that the government can not run without the revenue derived from this traffic. If the United States was ever in this condition where it was absolutely dependent upon such revenue, certainly that time has long since passed. The federal reports for the last fiscal year show the ordinary government receipts to have been $691,140,455, while the ordinary government disbursements were only $654,804,625, showing the income of the United States government to have been almost $40,000,000 in excess of the government expenses for the year.

Furthermore, the income tax amendment to the United States constitution, which has been ratified by two-thirds of the states, will, at a conservative estimate, increase the revenues of the United States government from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 a year.

If there ever was an excuse for drawing from the liquor traffic of this country the money necessary to run the United States government, that excuse will no longer hold, for the income tax alone will provide almost as much money as the government receives each year in revenue from the liquor traffic.

LIQUOR AND PROSPERITY

Development of Manufacturing in Massachusetts and Other License States as Compared with Prohibition States.

Massachusetts is known as a great manufacturing state. On the other hand, the prohibition states for the most part are recognized as agricultural states more than as manufacturing centers. The argument often used by the liquor interests is that prohibition kills business and especially affects manufacturing centers

In this connection it is interesting to note the last statistics of the several states on manufactures. These statistics show that in the nine prohibition states of the Union, the average number of wage earners in the factories increased during the last ten year period for which statistics were taken, 53 per cent, while in the state of Massachusetts, with its great manufacturing interests, the increase for the same period of time was only 33.4 per cent.

Furthermore, in the matter of the value of products, the manufacturing state of Massachusetts does not show up along with the nine prohibition states of the Union. The per cent of increase for the last ten year period in the value of manufactured products in the state of Massachusetts was only 64.2 per cent, while in the nine prohibition states the increase was 116.3 per cent

LIQUOR AND POVERTY

Pauperism in Massachusetts as Compared with Prohibition States.

The last federal census report giving the statistics of paupers in almshouses in the several states shows that the number of paupers in almshouses in proportion to the population is very much less in prohibition states than in states where the liquor traffic is licensed. At the present time there are nine states under prohibition and the census report shows the number of paupers per 100,000 population in these several prohibition states to be as follows Georgia, 31.2; Kansas, 43.5; Maine, 127.23; Mississippi, 24.3; North Carolina, 63; North Dakota, 14; Oklahoma, 3; Tennessee, 71.8; West Virginia, 66.2.

Taking all of the prohibition states together, the number of paupers per 100,000 population, according to the census report, is only 46.5, while the number in the state of Massachusetts per 100,000 population is 194.7.

The church should not do less than it is doing along missionary lines, but the church and Christianity should do much more than they are doing along the lines of temperance reform, for if the church can solve the liquor problem in America within the next few years, it will succeed in overcoming one of the greatest present obstacles to the church's effort to send the gospel of peace to all the world.

An Embarrassing Mistake

Consequent on a Football Game

By OSCAR COX

"Cuthbert!"

Cuthbert Brown lay abed, oblivious to the call and the shaking he received simultaneously. He had been playing right tackle with his team in a championship game of football the day before and was ready for a twenty-four hour sleep. He had taken six of the twenty-four when his sister entered his room and tried to awaken him.

"Cuthbert, get up! You're wanted to go on an errand."

"What's the matter?"

"Our next door neighbor is dying. They want you to go for a clergyman."

There was something sufficiently impressive in this to awaken Cuthbert. He lay for a moment gathering his faculties, then sprang out of bed, put on his clothes and while passing out asked:

"What clergyman shall I go for?"

"Any one. Make haste!"

Cuthbert Brown, now thoroughly in possession of his faculties, hurried along the street till he came to St. Mark's church, with the name of David Hathaway, pastor, on a board on the wall. He stopped at the rectory beside it, rang the doorbell and was immediately admitted by some one whose figure he could barely distinguish to be that of a woman, for the light was turned low. He was ushered into a parlor without an inquiry as to whom he wished to see or any other question for that matter and was left alone in a room still darker than the hall.

"That's queer," he remarked to himself. "I suppose she's the maid and knows that no one would call at a clergyman's house at this time of night unless he wanted to see the parson himself."

The maid went upstairs and in a few moments came down again and said that the doctor would be down soon.

Cuthbert settled himself in an easy chair and sat wondering what it all meant. Presently he fell asleep.

Then he dreamed that some one shook him; that he stood upon his feet. He heard words mumbled that sounded like parts of the marriage service; he felt a delicate hand in his; some one thrust a ring upon him and a finger was slipped into it; he dimly saw the figure of a woman leaving the room.

Was this a dream or a reality? He remembered nothing more of it or how he got out of the house, home and into his bed. He did not awaken till noon the next day, when the events of the night were much blurred in his mind. His sister awaking him, the walk to the rectory and his admission to the house he remembered with tolerable distinctness, but the rest of it was very misty.

He called his sister, took a roundabout course to find out from her what he had done and discovered that some one else had procured a minister for the dying man. The rector of St. Mark's church had not responded. There remained that singular dream of a marriage, or whatever it might be, of which his sister was not supposed to be cognizant, and Cuthbert said nothing to her about it. If he had been sure that it was a dream he might have told her of it, but he had a feeling that it was not a dream; that while sitting in the rectory something like it had happened, that somebody had been married, and he could not divest himself of a consciousness that he had been mixed up in it.

That day was Sunday, and Cuthbert, having nothing to do, thought continuously of his singular experience. A dozen times he resolved to put it out of his mind. It would not stay out. Then he thought that he would go to Dr. Hathaway and ask him for an explanation. But the matter seemed too ridiculous to warrant an inquiry. Ask a clergyman if he had taken part in a marriage when half asleep? Absurd!

There is nothing so worrying as that which needs an explanation. Cuthbert Brown fretted over the matter for three days; then one afternoon he called on Dr. Hathaway. He was received in the doctor's study, and, being unknown to the clergyman, the latter waited for him to speak.

"Doctor," he began, "I have come to ask"— He stopped short. He was going to ask if the doctor had married him, but, not caring to be taken for a lunatic, he desisted. He began again: "Last Saturday night about 12 o'clock I came here to ask you to go to the house of a dying man. I was left in your parlor by a maid and, being very tired, fell asleep."

From the start the doctor pricked up his ears. When Cuthbert got this far he interrupted him:

"So, you are the party!"

"Party! What party?"

"Why the party that came instead of the right party. What object had you in stepping in between a bride and a groom in that despicable way? You have rendered yourself liable to criminal prosecution."

"Will you kindly tell me what I have done?"

"Done! Why, you married a young lady who came here to marry some one else."

"Great Scott!"

"Didn't you know what you were doing?"

"No."

"Had you been drinking?"

"No. I had been tired out by a big game of football. I was awakened in the middle of the night and came to you on an errand. I was left in your parlor by your maid and fell asleep. I dreamed something about a wedding ceremony."

"Wedding ceremony! Man, you were married!"

"I married!"

"Certainly. I received a telephone call on Saturday, asking if I would marry a couple late that night. I agreed. You came in and were supposed to be the groom. The bride came later and was so afraid that some one would see her being clandestinely married that she insisted on the light remaining as it was. I found you asleep, awakened you and married you. I thought at the time that there was something the matter with you, but the bride was very nervous, very much in a hurry, and insisted on having the matter over as soon as possible. I protested, but"—

"Then I am a married man!"

"You certainly went through a marriage ceremony. Wait."

The doctor went to a telephone booth, called up Miss Amelia Brooks and said:

"The man who married you by mistake is here."

"Thank heaven! How did you find him?"

"I didn't; he found me. He walked in here a few minutes ago."

"Was he intoxicated?"

"He says not."

"That's a comfort anyway. If it gets out it won't be quite so bad."

"Hadn't I better send him around to you? You'll need to confer with him, of course."

"I think I'll come to you. Where are you?"

"In my study in the church."

"Well, I'll come at once."

Cuthbert was informed that he was to meet his bride, and the doctor asked him his name that he might introduce him on her arrival. He and the clergyman talked upon the mishap till the lady came. Then the latter said:

"Mrs. Brown—I mean Miss Brooks—this is Mr. Cuthbert Brown, the gentleman who we supposed intentionally imposed on us the other night or was intoxicated. He has explained the mistake to me, so that I believe he is not to blame in the matter."

"That's all very well, but what are we to do?"

"Where was the man you intended to marry?" asked Cuthbert.

"He was delayed."

"Did you marry him when he came?"

"Marry him! How could I do that when I had"—

"I see. I'm very sorry. I couldn't help it. You see, our team relied upon me to carry them through. I'd been practicing for several days, been up nights and during the game made what was considered the biggest run of the season."

"Did you score a touchdown?"

"Yes."

"How about the kickoff?"

"I made that too."

"Good!"

"Are you fond of football?"

"I adore athletics of all kinds."

"Is your—the man you were to marry an athlete?"

"No; he's intellectual. That's the reason he didn't get here in time. He was working on a problem."

"I see."

Meanwhile the clergyman in order to leave the two alone together had gone out into the church. After having been absent long enough, as he thought, for them to find a way out of the difficulty he returned to the door of his study and listened. What was his astonishment to hear Mr. Brown giving the lady a graphic account of the game, including his part in it, between two rival teams, which had incidentally caused her to marry the wrong man. The rector waited awhile for a change of topic, then re-entered his study.

"Well," he said, "have you found a way out of the difficulty?"

"So far as I am concerned," replied Cuthbert for both, "I have no desire to find a way out of it, but I am willing to do all in my power to free the lady."

"I'm afraid," said Miss Brooks, "that I shall have to make a confession to papa. He will see his lawyer about it. It's awfully embarrassing. You see, papa wouldn't let me marry George. He calls him a bookworm. Papa wanted me to marry some man who would lead what he calls a strenuous life."

"Ahem!" said the clergyman. "I wish the matter might be settled without publicity. I fear I shall be greatly blamed."

"You may tell your father," said Cuthbert, "that if he wants a strenuous son-in-law"—

"That, of course," interrupted the clergyman, "would be the simplest solution if by any possibility it could be brought about."

"Oh, dear!" said the lady. "What an embarrassing situation! Well, I'll go home and tell papa. I'm sure that even if this marriage is annulled I'll not be permitted to marry George."

Addresses were exchanged, and a few days later Cuthbert Brown received a call from Edward Brooks, his wife's father. A long interview ensued between them, followed by other long interviews. Then one evening Cuthbert called upon his bride, and his call was followed by other calls. In time an engagement was announced, and one day at high noon, with plenty of light instead of midnight with a very small quantity of light, Dr. Hathaway in the presence of a fashionable assembly repeated the wedding between Cuthbert Brown and Amelia Brooks.

Woman's World

Mrs. George Law, International Beauty, a Red Cross Nurse.

MRS. GEORGE LAW.

American women who live in Paris and London have been leaders in relief work there. Money for the work, splendid mansions for use as hospitals and personal service have all been tendered to the Red Cross.

Mrs. George Law of New York, whose beauty has been the admiration of two continents, is one of the recruits. It is with the French Red Cross that she is said to intend to work.

Mrs. Law was Miss Alga Smith. In 1894 she married George Law, who made a fortune in traction interests. Her husband died in 1898, and she was left a widow at twenty-two years of age, with an income of $300,000 a year. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Law has lived in Europe, residing in Paris and London.

She has been presented at most of the European courts and was a friend of the late King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

At various times she has been reported engaged to the maharajah of Kapurthala, the khedive of Egypt, Count de Dion, Count Chasselon, Prince Fuerstenberg and Gerald Lefevre Pontalis.

THE BURDEN BEARERS.

In France It Is Up to the Women, Says a Correspondent.

"The women of France who paid the 5,000,000,000 francs of indemnity to Germany with their economies have announced their intention to harvest the fields and care for the country's herds and flocks while their husbands, sons and brothers fight the battles of the republic on Alsatian and Belgian battlegrounds," says Joseph Chamberlain in the New York Mail.

"There is no picture of human or public devotion in all history which surpasses in pathos and beauty the record of the women of France. It is they who have chiefly suffered by the wars of conquest or defense that their kings, emperors and presidents have waged, and it is always by their industry, their thrift, their quiet wisdom, that the ravages of war are repaired.

"For the French wife is the 'business man' of the household. It is generally she who carries on the little shop which keeps the family alive or makes it prosperous. It is she who makes the family's plans and advances its fortunes. Her economies make it possible for the French people to pay the heaviest taxes in Europe and to pay them without a murmur.

"And it is she who will stand in the gap and save the home industries and the production of France in the present crisis."

Some two months ago the French suffragists held their parade in Paris. No police protection was given them, but the usually excitable Paris crowd watched in silence and respect. No police were needed.

HOW TO EAT PEACHES.

Always Discard Skins, as Physicians Pronounce Them Unwholesome.

The aristocrat of fruits, tracing its lineage far back to China and Persia, the peach, is now with us and at its very best. While a ripe, fresh peach peeled and eaten out of hand can scarcely be improved upon, desserts, salads and other dishes run a close second. The skin never should be eaten under any circumstances, but the flesh of a ripe peach is permitted by up to date physicians as entirely wholesome—so much so that very young children and even typhoid patients are allowed its use. One well known physician goes so far as to declare that to dysentery troubles the peculiar acids of the peach, when ripe and sound, was better than any medicine that could be suggested. It would, however, be on the side of safety to consult one's local doctor before admitting peaches ad lib. to any patient.

Lace Plate Covers.

Covers for plates of cakes and sandwiches are made of fiet lace, mounted on wire frames to give them the proper form. Some are square, some round and some domelike, and they are made in various sizes. For refreshments served on the lawn or veranda these lace covers are most useful, for they protect the cakes or sandwiches or biscuits under them from flies and dust.

LOTS COMING

"Has Tom made the last payment on his automobile yet?"

"Lord, no! It has just commenced to break!"

Above All Price.

Gold and silver may supply us with the necessaries of life, with food and drink, clothes and houses; but they can not give the joy of a kind look.—Lord Avebury.

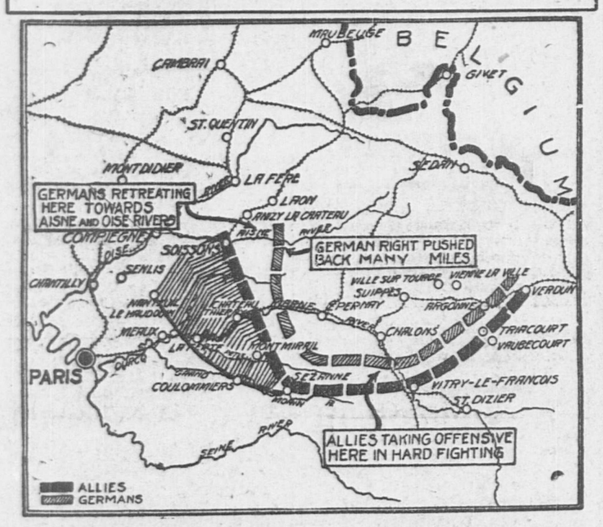
Map Showing How Germans Were Forced to Retire From Paris.



This map shows the respective positions of the allies and the Germans after several days of fighting which marked the turning back of the kaiser's troops from Paris. There was severe fighting along a battle line of 150 miles, the Germans gradually retreating and the allies advancing. The scene of the hardest fighting on the French left was in the region of La Ferte Gaucher, at Esternay and Montmirail. In the center there was a hard struggle to the north of Sezanne and Vitry-le-Francois. The French troops operating to the north of the Marne and to the west of the Ourcq forced the enemy to retreat toward the Aisne and the Oise.

PASSENGER CAR ON FIRE

Was on the 10.07 Train to Boston Last Night

Chief Billings and the Central station auto chemical responded on a still alarm at 10.15 Wednesday night for a fire in one of the passenger coaches of the 10.07 inward train. When the train pulled into the Quincy depot it was discovered that the roof of the second coach was on fire.

The station agent telephoned to the Central fire station, and in the meantime the coach was uncoupled from the train and run onto the siding near the Quincy Beef Co. plant.

When the auto chemical arrived it was found that a lively little blaze was in progress on the top of the forward end of the car. A line of hose was run from the hydrant on Depot street, but was not used, the fire being extinguished by hand extinguishers.

It was necessary to chop away some of the inside of the car before the seat of the fire was reached. The fire was probably caused by sparks from the locomotive alighting on an exposed place on the roof of the coach. The loss may amount to $25.

BUNGALOW PARTY.

Twenty friends of Miss Edith Johnson gathered at her home in the "Bungalow" at Adams shore, Wednesday evening to assist in the celebration of her 20th birthday. The evening program was entirely informal and included dancing, games, and other entertaining features, including an impromptu musical program. Refreshments were served just previous to the party adjournment at midnight.

AUSTRIAN ARMY SHUT INTO BOGS

In Position Where It Had Hoped to Entice Russians

CUT OFF FROM THE CENTRE

Investment of Strong Fortress of Przemsyl Makes It Impossible For Dankl's Forces to Seek Safety There—Russians Report Enemy's Losses Are Becoming Colossal

Petrograd, Sept. 17.—With Russian troops closing in on the strong Austrian fortress of Przemysl and the fortified positions along the San to Jaroslav, and with Grodek and Miseiska already occupied by the czar's troops, it was announced at army headquarters that the main objective of the Russian-Austrian campaign is rapidly coming to a successful conclusion.

Strong detachments of Cossack cavalry are reported to have penetrated to the westward of the San river fortifications and to have reached as far as Jaslo. This indicates that the advance against Cracow is not to wait on the result of the operations along the San, but will be pushed independently while the San river positions are enveloped by a superior force. The Austrian force that has been cut off in the triangle formed by the junction of the Vistula and the San is reported attempting to break through the cordon that surrounds it, but it is believed certain here it must soon surrender.

It was officially announced that in the capture of Grodek the Austrians lost 400 light field guns and twenty howitzers.

There is little information obtainable of the situation in East Prussia where the Germans, heavily re-enforced, are endeavoring to assume the offensive. It is stated that the Russians are now maintaining their new positions and that they have succeeded in checking the German advance, but rumors persist that the army of General Rennenkampf has been very badly cut up in the latest fighting.

In an official statement the war office declares that the investment of Przemysl will prevent the Austrian army of General Dankl taking refuge there. It says:

"The forces of General Dankl have been entirely cut off from the Austrian centre and will be unable to reach Przemysl, which is now completely invested by the Russians. The army of Dankl is now completely cut off in the bogs into which it had hoped to entice the Russians. The fragmentary details as yet available show that our forces have already achieved the greatest success ever recorded in warfare. Archduke Charles Francis Joseph is reported to be with the routed Austrian forces and his capture is looked for."

The Battles In Galicia

The following summary of the recent fighting in Galicia, from the Russian point of view, has been made public in Petrograd through semi-official channels:

"Russian troops are pursuing the Austrians with energy, and the defeat of the enemy continues. Certain Austrian army corps have been virtually annihilated. Russian forces have passed the river San.

"The eastern Russian advance guard is approaching Przemysl. The rapidity with which military operations are being conducted has made it impossible to determine accurately the losses of the enemy, but it may be said they are becoming colossal.

"According to such information as has come to hand the Austrians have lost in the neighborhood of 250,000 men in killed and wounded, this in addition to 100,000 prisoners, 400 pieces of ordnance and a number of standards. In all directions the roads are crowded with artillery, transport wagons and arms and ammunition which have been abandoned in mass during the precipitate retreat of the enemy.

"On the river Vistula, Russian troops have taken possession of an accumulation of material for bridge building, and they destroyed several steamers, one of which was armored.

"The desperate efforts of German troops to save the Austrian army from utter rout should be recorded. The active participation of the German army corps in the fighting has been revealed at several places along the Austrian front. The Russians captured thirty-six pieces of long range German artillery, in addition to some 5000 German prisoners at Tourobine. At other places on the front several dozen large German guns, many of which had been prevented by lack of time from taking part in the fighting, fell into their hands."

In conclusion this announcement of Russian successes declared that the succor sent by Germany did not save the Austrians, and that the heavy defeat inflicted upon the Germans has contributed to the brilliancy of the Russian victories.

Among the 400 guns taken from the Austrians in Galicia are more than thirty-six heavy German cannon bearing the initials of Emperor William. These came from the regions occupied by the Sixth German corps. More than 4500 German prisoners have arrived at Lublin, in Russian Poland.

G. A. R. COUNTY CONVENTION

W. R. C. Also Met at Weymouth Yesterday

The quarterly meeting of Norfolk County Association of G. A. R. and W. R. C. was held Wednesday at G. A. R. hall and Odd Fellows Opera house at Weymouth.

The morning sessions and dinner served by Corps 102 was at the Opera house and was followed by a camp fire in the auditorium.

Both bodies elected officers for the ensuing year. With Commander Poole presiding the G. A. R. elected the following:—Commander, C. O. Norcross of Post 43; S. V. C. George W. Read of Brookline; J. V. C. Richard P. Boynton of Norwood; Adjt. William W. O'Connell, Hyde Park; Q. M. James S. Mitchell of Hyde Park; Surgeon W. B. Denton of Weymouth; Chaplain, Thurston F. Wellington of Norwood; O. D. William B. Gould of Dedham; O. G. Oliver Houghton; S. M. Herbert O. Holmes of Stoughton; Q. M. S. Charles E. Palmer.

Special guests at the camp fire, who had seats of honor, were D. C. John M. Wood, A. A. G. Wilfred A. Wetherbee; Comrade Wade, Surgeon of Plymouth County Association; Chaplain Theodore F. Wellington.

The W. R. C. had as special guests D. P. Mrs. Laura I. Smith who is also N. P. I., D. C. Mrs. Hattie M. Tuttle of the department Executive board; P. I. Mrs. Carrie Loring; Past N. P. I. Mrs. Lou Stuart Wadsworth; president Miss C. Maude Holmes of Plymouth County Association.

The W. R. C. presided over by Mrs. Jessie M. Young of Dedham elected the following members: Mrs. Jennie L. Loring of South Braintree; S. V. P. Mrs. Margaret Webb of Stoughton; J. V. P. Mrs. Fannie Clifford; Chaplain Mrs. Marion Baker of Quincy; treasurer Mrs. Minnie Scott of Hyde Park; secretary Mrs. Mary E. Mahoney, East Weymouth; Conductor Mrs. Della Mann of Randolph; Guard, Mrs. Cora Parman of Quincy; A. C. Mrs. Linda M. Miles of Randolph; A. G. Mrs. Kate A. Blaisdell of Quincy.

The ceremony of installation was performed at the camp fire by D. P. Mrs. Laura Smith, chaplain Mrs. Hattie Tuttle; conductor Mrs. Carrie Loring, and color bearers, Mrs. Alice Leibeck, Mrs. Mae Barrows, Mrs. Sadie Wolfe and Mrs. Maria Belcher, the regular color bearers of Corps 102.

The morning session, other than election was occupied by reports from various Corps. The sympathy of the convention was extended to Comrade Dunbar on the death of his wife.

An efficient committee under the able leadership of Mrs. Ellen Kidder, Chairman provided an excellent dinner, which was served in the banquet hall at the Opera house to 310 members and guests.

The most pleasing feature of the camp fire was at the opening when after a medley of patriotic airs by the High School orchestra, P. I. Mrs. Margaret Culley, assisted by P. P. Mrs. Mary E. Mahoney, presented through Corps president Mrs. Agnes Baldwin a beautiful bunting flag, to Rev. Rufus H. Dix, who is leaving his pastorate here for a wider field at Newton. The flag is complete with pole and halyards.

Department Commander John M. Wood, told of the royal welcome the city of Detroit extended to the recent convention when $50,000 was appropriated for expenses. 600 Boy Scouts, every one a gentleman, were ready to answer the call of any whom they could serve.

A. G. Wilfred A. Wetherbee told of the unanimous vote of the convention that our national anthem "The Star Spangled Banner" should not be played in a medley, or at a banquet, but should stand out alone.

A. G. Wetherbee told of scenes witnessed on the return trip at Quebec which were reminiscent of Civil war days. 40,000 troops being assembled and waiting the call to depart for Europe. His anecdotes regarding fellow comrades were received with laughter and applause.

D. P. Mrs. Laura Smith had traveled 100 miles, to be present, and told of her pleasure in hearing the reports of Corps in the county. Mrs. Wadsworth called attention to the beautiful bracelet presented by the reception committee to Mrs. Smith at the National convention for "good behavior."

Miss C. Maude Holmes was by vote of the convention made an honorary member. Other speakers were Mrs. Carrie Loring, Mrs. Jennie Loring, Mrs. Lue Stuart Wadsworth, Mrs. Jessie M. Young, Dr. Wade, Mrs. Hattie Tuttle.

Two verses of America and flag salute closed the convention, and an informal good time with dancing followed.

MUCH ACCOMPLISHED

sociation and Port Directors was successful in having specified the use of granite to a large extent in the proposed new dock.

We have not been as successful as we would wish in the establishment of new industries in Quincy. We have no intention of excusing ourselves, living under a charter which specifically prohibits the remission of taxes, with practically no available vacant building, and with small funds to assist in financing, new industries, we have been largely handicapped, but a beginning has been made. The establishing of the Means & Thatcher Paint Co., at Norfolk Downs can be traced absolutely to the Quincy Board of Trade.

Now gentlemen, I could go on much further, and tell you of many attempts the Board has made in which we have not been successful, but each reverse makes us more determined that in the next attempt we shall triumph, and I say to you that if the Quincy Board of Trade has done nothing else, it was successful in retaining to Quincy the Pneumatic Scale Corporation, and it gives us reason to hold our head very high. This matter is now history, but the Pneumatic Scale Corporation is firmly established in Quincy for many years, and that such is the case is due absolutely to the activities, at the time of their proposed removal, of the Quincy Board of Trade.

H. F. McINTIRE.

Herman F. McIntire, a real estate developer and the man who conceived the idea of advertising the city in the Quincy Metropolitan dailies, talked on the value of publicity to a city.

He said few, hardly himself, realized what the Board of Trade had accomplished. He said money was necessary, but that it could be obtained. He spoke of erecting signs advertising the city, so that travelers would know where they were when in the city, and not after they had passed through.

Weymouth he said is a good town. Some didn't know it until they saw the illuminated sign at the entrances of the town. I believe if you go into a hotel, no matter how good or bad it is, you feel a little more at home if a dog wags its tail.

Many think Quincy is a disease. It is all because they know nothing about it. We should advertise. It is never a bad idea to let people know we are on the map.

The money for our advertising campaign was easily raised and there was no concerted action. There is a balance of about three dollars I propose to give it to the Salvation Army or some other organization.

A large proportion of our city is Wollaston and Wollaston is Boston. Many of the residents are not interested in the city in which they reside. I did not find Quincy needed to go into the discard.

JOSEPH A. SEDGWICK.

Joseph A. Sedgwick, secretary-treasurer of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation and vice president of the Board of Trade said Quincy, pointing at his audience, is your home city.

The five principles underlying the advance of a community are: beauty, health, intelligence, honesty and industry.

Beauty costs less than ugliness, health less than sickness, intelligence less than ignorance, honesty less than drunkenness, industry less than laziness.

Why should not Quincy lead other cities of its size in beauty? Its hills, valleys and sea shore cost nothing, but the intelligence of its citizens to make it first. In my ten years residence I have learned Quincy is one of the first in health. Serious epidemics have no place here.

In fire conservation, Quincy is not first and improvements can be made. (Mr. Sedgwicks figures are off, as will be seen by a Ledger editorial today.)

Cleveland only lost $2.15, and Berlin, Germany, 15 cents per inhabitant. In the international contest among fire fighters the Germans made their run and connection in eight minutes Great Britain was second in two minutes, and the firemen of this country did it in 20 seconds. The former can afford to be slow for they take it out in conservation.

In touching on the intelligence of the city, Mr. Sedgwick said he was proud of the school system; its Institute and High school. He said, "it breaks my heart to see a child going to work instead of to one of these places. We have something to improve upon along that line."

Honesty is the records of the police court, and the morality of the city is on a high plan compared with other places. The cost of intemperance alone for each individual of the country is 24 cents, and if the residents of Quincy spent that much, over a million a year would go that way each year.

Industry is up to the citizens. Are all doing the best they can to advance business in competition with your fellows? If so you add to your part of the city progress.

We can be first in all of these things largely through the efforts of successful organizations like the Board of Trade, and I would not give one rap for any organizations that will make no mistakes. Without them they are doing nothing, but in making them once in a while the nail will be hit on the head and something will be accomplished.

A man is worth $1000 to Quincy. In maintaining health you are preserving that value, in convincing a man he should not move away, in securing a new resident. With all assisting, Quincy should be at the top where it should be placed.

At the close of the speaking, Charles J. McGilvray, chairman of the membership committee, got busy and passed application blanks among those present. Copies of the address on "Loyalty" given by Rev. Adlebert L. Hudson at the annual banquet of the Board were also distributed.

President Hamilton gave a description of the Board of Trade building which it was hoped to erect. It was reported that as a result of the meeting fifteen applications were obtained, and President Hamilton stated that he had five more tucked away in his pocket.

NEW BOULEVARD TO BOSTON

Quincy Boosters Should Favor a Route on the Ocean Side of the Railroad

Boston Papers Say the Boulevard Will be Soon Built

The Traveler says:

QUINCY will rival South Boston as a summer resort when the new proposed eight-mile boulevard between Old Colony avenue and the QUINCY Shore drive is completed. At present the route of the boulevard is being kept secret to prevent any exorbitant increase in prices of real estate along the line of the route.

The Globe says:

"The route for the boulevard to connect the Strandway in South Boston with QUINCY, was agreed upon this week at a conference between Mayor Curley, Corporation Counsel Sullivan and Commissioner Rourke, in behalf of the city of Boston, and the Metropolitan Park Commissioners.

The new route, while following in the main the original plans, provides increased bathing facilities at Savin Hill Beach and greater availability to the Neponset Playground. The plans also provide for the construction of a new bridge between Neponset and QUINCY.

This boulevard will, when completed provide about eight miles of delightful drive for automobiles and other pleasure vehicles. It will connect also with Old Colony avenue recently rebuilt at a cost of $14,000.

The Daily Ledger hopes this boulevard may enter QUINCY by a new bridge on the ocean side of the railroad, say from Commercial Point, Dorchester, to the Aviation field at New Squantum.

It would be the greatest improvement to QUINCY in ten years. Any route that used the present Neponset bridge location would not be half as good.

QUINCY Boosters this is your opportunity to get busy.

WHY PERMIT WAS REFUSED

Congestion About Fountain Square Is Dangerous

Some talk has been made because Mrs. Catlin Claiborne was not granted a permit to speak in City Square near the fountain on Wednesday evening on equal suffrage for women. Acting Mayor Crane said this morning that permits to speak in City Square near the fountain were refused everybody, for the reason that it was a congested place and for this reason accidents were likely to happen. This reason he says was explained to the party who applied for a permit for Mrs. Claibone to speak, and that a permit was issued to her to speak on Depot street. The young woman, however, started in to speak near the fountain and had spoken some minutes before warned by an officer, at which she moved to Depot street, the location stated in her permit. Had she gone there in the first place there would have been no trouble.

HEARD VOICES IN NIGHT.

Mrs. Henderson of North Weymouth made an attempt to take her own life Wednesday night during a fit of mental depression. She was discovered by the family, however, in time to save her life. The attempt was made by slashing her left wrist with a razor. Mrs. Henderson said her reason was that she heard voices in the night and that she did not want to become a source of worry to her husband and children. She was examined by physicians and will probably be committed.

Miss Helen Bromley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Bromley, has gone to New Britain, Conn., where she will teach.

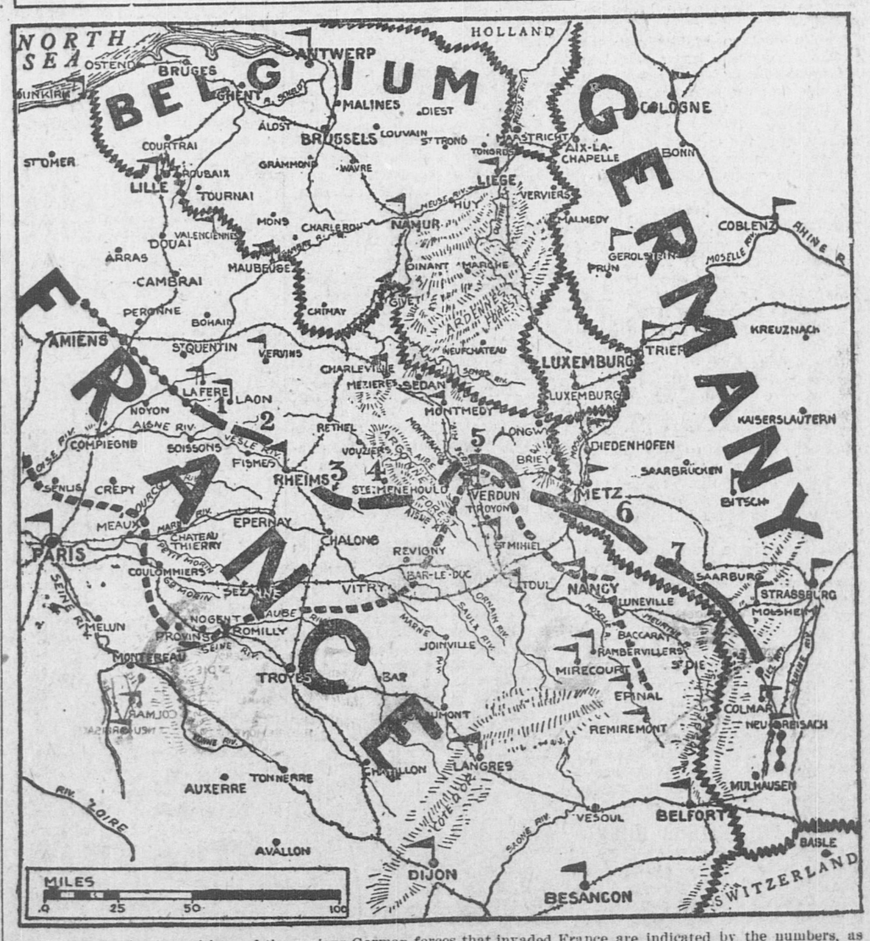
New Map of Theater of War In France, Showing Position of German Forces After Long Retreat.



The approximate positions of the various German forces that invaded France are indicated by the numbers, as follows: 1, General von Kluck's army; 2, General von Buelow's army; 3, General von Hausen's army; 4, army of Grand Duke Albrecht of Wurttemberg; 5, Crown Prince Frederick William's army; 6, army of Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria; 7, General von Heeringen's army. Covering forces on the two flanks are indicated by connected dots. When the Germans retreated to this position their defense stiffened, and they prepared to make a stand.

DEER FALLS INTO MANNEX QUARRY

Was Startled by the Blasts at the Quincy Quarries at 7 O'Clock

Mannex Quarry One of Deepest in City--About 400 Feet

A handsome two year old doe, frightened by the shrill blast of seven o'clock whistles in the quarry district, met its fate this morning when in trying to escape its unseen foe it attempted an impossible jump across a wide cavern and was dashed to death on the rocks in the bottom of the Mannex quarry, 400 feet below.

The deer, which had probably wandered from the Blue Hills reservation adjoining the district, broke cover when the first whistle sounded, and rushed to the narrow strip connecting the Swingle and Mannex quarries. Rapidly surveying the surrounding country it made its way to the top, and there poised on its highest pinnacle like the deer in the famous painting "Monarch of the Glen," it prepared for the impossible jump. The leap into space and the rapidly falling doe was seen by a score of workmen, and Hugh Hunter, foreman at the quarry, immediately directed them to go to the succor of the prostrate animal.

They rapidly made their way to the bottom of the quarry, but found life extinct. One leg had been torn off, and gaping wounds covered the body.

The body was taken to the top of the quarry and the Fish and Game Commission were notified of the affair. They will direct what disposition to make of it.

George Elcock of West Quincy, who has tracked more deer and wild animals than any man in the city, was one of the first to hear the story. He went to the quarry and made an examination. He found every bone broken.

TAX BILLS OUT KICKERS IN

People Want to Know Why Valuations Were Increased

The first lot of tax bills were sent out Thursday night and this morning the first lot of kickers arrived at City Hall. One of the first to arrive was a man who had a bill for $66 for a personal tax. He said that he did not own an automobile, no stocks or bonds, had no money in the bank and no personal property, and he wanted to know why he was assessed.

The second man said that he owned a small boat. That the mast was broken out of it last spring and that it was partly burned, yet the Assessors had seen fit to raise the valuation on the boat. He could not understand why this should be, and he wanted to know. He said that some one had told him that it was probably in anticipation that he intended to rebuild the boat.

It took place at the home of the bride 31A Granite street at 7 o'clock, by the Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, pastor of the Bethany Congregational church.

APPLE TREE IN BLOSSOM

A handsome apple blossom, plucked from a tree in the yard of James Irwin of Foster street, was prominently displayed in the Hancock street store of the Walsh Drug Co. on Thursday evening. The blossom peeped from the centre of a small branch of velvet green leaves and more than one breathed in the softness of its fragrance. While it is not unusual for a hardy vigorous young tree to bear a second crop of blossoms the occasion are rare. It is thought that the Indian summer season has considerably effect on its budding.

TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION.

From every section of this country speakers are now on their way to Massachusetts to take part in the big temperance demonstration which is to be launched, commencing next Monday, by the Anti-Saloon League of America acting with the Massachusetts League.

F. S. Spence of Toronto, Canada, will be the representative of the Dominion in the big crusade. He is the head of the Canadian Anti-Saloon League and the United States leaders assert that if this country does not move swiftly on temperance reform, Canada will win ahead of the local forces.

Seventeen rallies are planned to take place in Boston on Sunday, September 27. At these rallies all of the big speakers will be present. There has never been a greater aggregation of temperance orators in this state in its history. In fact, there has never been such a large corps of speakers in the state on any single issue before.

By Sunday the entire state will have been covered by the speakers. All the week long they will work inward from the outlying sections for the final demonstration in Boston. This demonstration will rightly continue two days, as one of its spectacular features will be the mass meeting to be held on Boston Common, Saturday Sept. 26, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

One hundred thousand people are expected to attend the big Common meeting. The speakers want Boston people to hear their message on National prohibition. They will call upon Greater Boston temperance followers to join in the multitude on Boston Common and show the real interest which is behind the movement. Already thousands are pledged to respond. During the coming week the speakers will continue to spread the word.

At the meeting to be held in Hingham next Tuesday night, the Hon. John D. Long will officiate and introduce the visiting orators. Many Boston men of wide reputation will be included in the list of speakers as the week progresses.

Cards for the Boston mass meeting are being circulated and in some places newspaper advertisements and posters will be placed under the auspices of local churches who are handling their local publicity.

LIKELY TO BE THE BLOODIEST OF THE WAR

Terrific Battle Is In Progress Along the River Aisne

EACH SIDE PREPARING FOR THE DEFENSIVE

General Uncertainty Over Situation, Both Invaders and Defenders Having Their Lines Strengthened by Thousands—More Than Two and a Half Million Men Engaged In Conflict In Which Allies Fail to Start Another Backward Movement of the Enemy—Artillery Duels More Terrific Than Those at Opening of Battle of the Marne—Army of German Crown Prince Still Safe

London, Sept. 18.—Pressed so closely by the allies that a further retreat of the German host had become perilous, the invaders have summoned up re-enforcements by thousands. The battle of the Aisne has developed into a struggle as desperate and as important as the previous battle along the Marne.

The German lines have given slightly in several places, notably on the long battered right wing and on the far away frontier separating France and Alsace.

But the advantage gained by the allies have not yet proven decisive enough to start another backward movement of the enemy.

The plight of the invading armies is so evident that they are throwing practically their entire force in the west into the fighting lines. Even an indecisive defeat for the allies will not enable the Germans to retake the offensive, while a decided victory for the French and British will imperil the whole right wing and the right centre of the German forces.

German Lines Strengthened

The battle of the Marne would probably have ended in a complete withdrawal from French soil of the German armies had they not called upon the forces that were sent so hurriedly to the east to oppose the Russians in East Prussia.

It is reported that fully eight entire army corps, about 320,000 men, have either arrived at the scene of conflict in France or are on the way from the east to the scene of battle. And despite the statements of the Belgians that many thousands of Germans are still in that distracted country, it is presumed that the real fighting force has been withdrawn to aid General von Kluck on the German right wing.

Nothing else can explain the sudden stiffening of the defense here. The demoralized army that fell back precipitately from the southeast of Paris to Noyon is withstanding the heaviest assaults of the allies. Here and there are signs of wavering in the German ranks, but nowhere in the five days of fighting along the Aisne have the allies been able to drive back the invaders sufficiently to compel a real break in the staunch lines.

Fighting at Close Quarters

The British and French are undoubtedly seeking to flank the forces of Von Kluck, but no reports of their progress have been made public. In the face of a terrific fire from the well concealed German artillery, the allies have been able to throw the bulk of their men across the Aisne. The fighting is now at close quarters and it has thus far been so indecisive that it is only natural that no details have been received from the front.

The artillery duels that heralded the beginning of the battle of the Aisne were more terrific than those of the first hours in the battle of the Marne. The German retreat had been so rapid that the main armies had caught up with the great howitzers that were being brought forward to level the forts of Paris, and these leviathans, cleverly concealed in thick woods, were used effectively by the Germans.

Despite the terrific losses, however, the allies succeeded in crossing the Aisne at a dozen or more places. The fighting now going on is like that witnessed at Vitry-le-Francois a few days ago, fierce charges directed against formidable entrenchments. The positions, however, are reversed. The allies are on the offensive; the Germans are behind strong barricades.

Millions Are Battling

Despite the fearful losses sustained by both sides in the battle of the Marne, it is believed that there are more men fighting in this second great battle on French soil than were engaged in the first. The allies probably have 1,500,000 men in line, about the number that they used in the first battle, the gaps in the ranks having been filled by fresh French and British soldiers and by several thousands of native troops from India. The Germans are believed to have 1,100,000 men in line, probably about 200,000 more than in the battle of the Marne.

Everything points to the probability that the Germans meant only to wage a rear guard engagement on the Aisne to safeguard their retreat to a line of defense with a pivot at Mezieres, nearly on the Belgian boundary. But the allied advance was so swift and the flanking movement threatened to become so fatal that the retreating forces were hurled back into line to stem the tide of French and British victories.

Although the number of men engaged is greater than in the battle of the Marne, the battle line is shorter, causing a tremendous massing of troops beyond anything known to historians.

Losses About Equal

Like the allies in the battle of the Marne, the Germans have delivered numerous counter charges after each assault of the allies has been driven back. But these have been ineffectual in budging the French and British. So far as can be learned, the losses are about equal.

The fact that in a few places the troops of von Kluck have wavered leads naturally to the belief that the present battle may prove similar to the earlier one—that the right will be at last compelled to give ground and that the pressure on the centre and left will bring about another general withdrawal.

Much depends upon the allied force from Amiens that is endeavoring to smash in the extreme right wing—just as the garrison of Paris battered that end in the battle of the Marne. Outside of a brief message received from Amiens nothing has been heard of this movement. That dispatch insisted that the flanking movement had been completed, but no confirmation has been received.

Germans strong In Centre

In the centre the German lines are holding as strongly as they did at Vitry-le-Francois in the early days of the battle of the Marne. Assault after assault has been delivered against the heights held by the invaders north of Rheims, but without result.

The army of the crown prince, which has been driven back faster during the last few days than any others of the German forces, has been holding fast between the northern Argonne forest and the Meuse. Progress of the allies all along the line must be slower than was the case farther south, for the Germans are not only stronger numerically but they are also better off in heavy artillery.

The general uncertainty over the situation is perhaps best reflected in the preparations of both the French and Germans for defensive warfare. On the Rhine, the Germans are throwing up entrenchments and strengthening the fortified cities that will oppose an invasion of the allies. At Paris, thousands of men continue to work on the fortifications, although the invading army has been pushed backward so rapidly.

TO FIGHT WITH ALLIES

Belief That Decision Has at Last Been Reached by Italy

Italy is on the verge of declaring war against Austria and Germany. All indications point to Sept. 28 as the day Italy will definitely throw in her lot with the triple entente. A member of the French chamber of deputies received private information from a source close to the Italian cabinet that changes in the cabinet are imminent and that within two weeks the military and naval forces of Italy will be added to the strength of the allies.

The determining reasons for the forthcoming declaration are that Italy owes a duty to civilization to cast the weight of her power against German militarism, now that the issue is in the balance, that Italy will certainly be the victim of German vengeance if the triple entente is overwhelmed, that now is the time to recover ancient Italian territory now held by Austria, and finally that the public opinion of the country can no longer be restrained. The developments of the past days all point to the abandonment of neutrality and to the active participation of Italy.

THREE FREIGHTERS SUNK

British Ships Victims of German Cruiser Off South America

The British freight steamers Holmwood, Bowes Castle and Hyades were sunk off the South American coast by the German auxiliary cruiser Luxembourg, according to the story told by Captain Davis of the British freighter Anselma de Larrinaga, whose vessel arrived at Boston from Buenos Ayres after a 150-mile chase by the Luxembourg.

The Larrinaga was holding her own against the cruiser off St. Lucia when a British warship and a French cruiser appeared on the horizon and then the Luxembourg became the pursued.

SAFER IN AMERICA

Our Foreign-Born Citizens Are Advised to Remain at Home

The state department at Washington reiterated former notice that naturalized Americans should refrain from visiting their "countries of origin or countries which are at war therewith," because it apprehended that "naturalized American citizens may experience difficulty in establishing satisfactorily their disinterestedness and neutral position, as well as their American citizenship."

The statement adds: "The department's notice was intended simply as a warning and not as a statement limiting in any way the protection which this government extends to its citizens abroad."

SEGEE BEGINS SENTENCE

Boston, Sept. 18.—In the superior criminal court the three-year sentence imposed upon Samuel A. Segee, former assessor at Revere, for forgery to the town's tax books, was officially confirmed and the stay of sentence granted him was revoked. Segee was committed to Deer island.

Early in 1913 Segee was arrested through the district attorney's office, following an investigation which disclosed irregularities in the Revere books. His conviction followed and sentence was stayed to permit the filing of exceptions by his counsel. A few days ago these exceptions were overruled by the supreme court.

However, other injections were made previously as a precautionary measure."

CATHOLICS GOOD CITIZENS

Address on "Our Country and Our Creed"

"Our Country and Our Creed," a refutation of the oft repeated calumy that a good Catholic cannot make a good citizen, was the subject of an eloquent address by State Secretary Daniel J. Gallagher to over 100 members of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, in Colonial hall, on Thursday evening.

Mr. Gallagher, previous to his elevation as a state officer, was district deputy supreme knight of the council. His talk of over an hour thrilled his hearers with an eloquence which lost no force in the directness of the development of his topic.

His address followed the regular meeting at which two committees were appointed to submit a list of nominees for the offices to be filled at the annual election at the next meeting.

Grand knight William A. Carey presided and announced that he would not be a candidate for re-election, owing to the pressure of business requiring his entire time.

Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor of St. Johns parish, and chaplain of the council, was the special guest of the evening. He gave a short address in which he touched briefly on the loyalty of members.

In addition to the many members of Quincy council, there were visitors present from Ave Maria, Braintree, Weymouth, and other councils.

The total number of witnesses summoned in the six cases was 125, and included Hon. Samuel W. McCall, the Republican candidate for Governor. Mr. McCall was in the automobile with Mr. Gale, the party being on their way to the fair at Marshfield. The auto turned onto the railway tracks to avoid a vegetable wagon, and was run into by an electric car coming from Nantasket. Mr. McCall had a narrow escape from being seriously injured in the accident and only saved himself by throwing himself to the bottom of the car.

YACHTING PARTY.

The last pleasure trip of the season was taken by Commodore Frank Burgess in the good ship Katherina on Thursday when he had a congenial party aboad. His guests were Rev. and Mrs. I. W. Sneath, Rev. and Mrs. T. W. Davison, Secretary and Mrs. A. F. Bromley, Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Prescott, E. W. Campbell, H. B. Bryant, Miss Mills and C. E. Bolster of Clinton, who is a guest of Rev. Mr. Davison. The Katherina sailed around the German ships at anchor in the lower harbor and then to Hingham bay. When the wind was light the 40-horse power auxilliary was used, which propelled the craft at nine knots, so there was no danger of becoming becalmed. It was a delightful afternoon to be upon the water. This week the Katherina will go into winter quarters at the Baker Basin. During the season Mr. Burgess has visited the Maine coast two or three times, and many have enjoyed his hospitality in sails along the North shore and South shore and in the bay.

NEED OF FAT AS FOOD.

No Difference to the System From What Source It Is Obtained.

The trees in a Syrian garden are an important and practically necessary part of the nutrition of the people. Combined with grain in the form of coarse bread, the tree products make a balanced and wholesome ration. For large elements of the population, at least one meal a day is commonly composed of bread and walnuts. The walnut is rich in both protein and fat, so that this combination virtually duplicates in nutrition our occidental sandwich of bread, butter and meat.

The oil to which the scriptural writers so lovingly referred is still important in that land, and the olive tree that produces it is almost as useful to the Syrian as the cow is to the American. The cow gives butter and drink, and the olive tree gives butter and food. When the workman on the Mediterranean goes from home for a day's labor, he often takes a pocketful of olives and a piece of bread for his lunch. Remove butter, breakfast bacon and fat meat from our vocabulary, put olive oil in their place and we shall begin to think the thoughts of Mediterranean cooks.

Once cooks and palates are educated, the blood does not know the difference between the rich globules of fat that come to it. It is fat that the human system wants, and it makes no final difference whether it comes from butter, bacon, lard, olive, cocoanut, goose or bear. Fat is fat, once it is in our blood. The source from which we shall get this fundamental of nutrition depends in part upon our bringing up, but eventually our getting it depends upon the ease of winning it from our environment.—Atlantic Monthly.

HOW TURNER FIRED A GUN.

An Impromptu Effect That Startled His Fellow Artists.

Turner's impromptu effects were at times consternating to his fellow painters. Mr. Randall Davies, quoting from Leslie, gives in "Six Centuries of Painting," Constable's experience in 1839, when he exhibited his "Opening of Waterloo Bridge." It was placed beside a gray sea piece, by Turner, which lacked all positive color.

"Constable's picture seemed as if painted with liquid gold and silver, and Turner came several times while he was heightening with vermilion and lake the decorations and flags of the city barges. Turner stood behind him looking from the 'Waterloo Bridge' to his own picture, and at last brought his palette from the great room where he was touching another picture, and, putting a round daub of red lead, somewhat bigger than a shilling, on his gray sea, went away without saying a word. The intensity of his red lead, made more vivid by the coolness of his picture, caused even the vermilion and lake of Constable to look weak. 'He has been here,' said Constable, 'and fired a gun.' On the opposite wall was a picture by Jones of 'Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego in the Furnace.' 'A coal,' said Cooper, 'has bounced across the room from Jones' picture and set fire to Turner's sea.'"

Next time Turner came in he glazed the scarlet seal and shaped it into a buoy.

Glazed Earthenware.

Glazed earthenware was long supposed to be of no more ancient date than the ninth century, but the discovery of glazed ware in Egypt, of glazed bricks in the ruins of Babylon, of glazed coffins and enameled tiles in other ancient cities proves that this is not the case. The Arabs seem to be entitled to the credit of having introduced glazed ware into modern Europe. The Italians are said to have become acquainted with this kind of ware as it was manufactured in the island of Majorca and gave it the name of majolica. The French derived their first knowledge from the Italian manufactory at Faenza and christened it falence.—London Saturday Review.

Liszt's Rude Host.

High society has its crude personalities, if a story in one of the magazines is true. At a dinner given to the famous pianist, Liszt, his host, Count Ludolf, right in the middle of Liszt's most exquisite playing, said in a loud voice, "If any one wishes to have a game of whist there are tables in the other room." Liszt, says the narrator, stopped short, but as no one moved he consented amiably to remain at the piano. The amount of wine that had been consumed by Liszt's host on this occasion is not stated.

If It Must Be.

After a thorough examination, the physician remarked:

"What you need, my dear sir, is an operation."

"Very well," replied the patient resignedly. "Which operation are you cleverest at?"—New York Post.

Sarcastic.

Dr. Pillem—My dear, sir, it is a miracle that you are alive today. Patient—Yes, that's what my friends said when I told them you were attending me.—Life.

THE PLAYHOUSE

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

A packed house Thursday night witnessed with delight the great gloom-dispelling show playing for the last half week at Quincy's pretty playhouse. Harry Burkhart & Co., presented a pleasing sketch entitled "His Best Friend," which quickly made friends with all. The Great Rodnick proved a pleasing entertainer, showing great skill and strength in his several stunts. Staymen & Lynden in their songs and music making made a great hit. Alice Farrell, the girl with the violin, stirred up a storm of applause with her well rendered selections.

As usual the two reels of the "Million Dollar Mystery" were greeted with applause and watched with keen interest throughout. The comedy pictures were the cause of screams of laughter, and Pathe Daily News was closely followed and greatly enjoyed.

Manager Wardwell announces another splendid list of attractions to appear the first three days of next week at both afternoon and evening performances. The 3 Bannons have a comedy offering of unusual merit. Fields & Hanson will cause lots of laughter and make music well worth coming to hear.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

The Majestic Theatre in Boston will be reopened Sept. 24 with "The Trap," fwhich will mark Arthur Hammerstein's entry into the field of drama as a producer. "The Trap" is described in the advance literature as a play by Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Hoodman. Mr. Hammerstein has seen fit to keep from the public the plot of the play, declaring he would much prefer not to herald its good qualities, but to let the audience discover them for themselves. Mr. Hammerstein predicts that the play will be one of the greatest sensations of recent years. It will be presented by a cast such as has not been seen many times on the American stage. Among its members are four leading men, the largest number that has ever appeared in a single production. The whole nine foremost principals who will be seen in "The Trap" have names which will be readily recognized by every theatre-goer in every part of the United States. The leading female role is taken by Janet Beecher who will be remembered as one of David Belasco's most celebrated stars of several years. The regular Wednesday and Saturday matinees of "The Trap" will be given at the Majestic.

WILBUR THEATRE.

William Hodge is about to enter upon the third week of his remarkable new success at the Wilbur Theatre, Boston, where "The Road to Happinesss" seems destined to repeat the record run of "The Man from Home." All the Boston play reviewers have praised in the highest terms Mr. Hodge's unique supremacy in the footlight interpretation of the Yankee type. As one of them, Mr. Harkins, of the Boston Journal, has pithily put it, "Mr. Hodge is as American as circus or baseball." Certainly his work from Freeman Whitmarsh in "Sag Harbor" and Mr. Stubbins in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" up to Daniel Voorhees Pike in the Booth Tarkington drama and his Jim Whitman in his present big play success amply warrants the claim so often made for him that he is the lineal successor on our stage of the late James A. Herne and Sol Smith Russell. "The Road to Happiness" itself is also thoroughly American in its homespun sentiment and native humor. The dialogue is said to keep the audience overbubbling with laughter throughout the four acts, although there is abundant heart interest to mingle tears with smiles and three love romances besides. The Wednesday matinee is at popular prices.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

"High Jinks," the reigning sensational musical comedy success at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, will enter upon its fourth week Monday. It is one of the most delightful entertainments seen in Boston in many years. All of the critics agree that it stands alone as a genuine success. "High Jinks" takes it name from a marvelous perfume which makes everybody happy. Otto Hauerback wrote the book and Rudolph Friml the music. To the novelty of the perfume thought Hauberback and Friml only had to add Paris—before the war, of course, and then it was up to produce Arthur Hammerstein to hire the hands. "Among the help are: the Mayhew and O'Rourke children, Billie Taylor, Elizabeth Wood, a pretty girl with a pleasing voice, Philip Ryley, Paul Porcasi, Bernard Gorcey, Emma Francis, a dancer of the Adelaide type, and a chorus that is not only easy to look at but also pleasing to the ear. Is Stella Mayhew were a Boston girl, home after a ten-years' absence, and if it had suddenly been discovered that she owned the Braves and had guaranteed the expenses of the Floating Hospital of 1915, she couldn't have been received more royally.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Blanche Walsh in a magnificent revival of Clyde Fitch's greatest dramatic triumph, "The Woman in the Case" will be the attraction for the coming week at the Boston Theatre. The announcement of Miss Walsh's appearance will be welcome news to playgoers because of her immense popularity and long absence. Her last Boston appearance was made nearly eight years ago. The engagement of Miss Walsh, who has for years maintained a foremost position in the ranks of leading American stars, will mark an epoch in the stock theatrical history of this city as it will signalize her initial appearance at popular prices. Miss Walsh will appear in her original creation of Margaret Rolfe. The piece is presented in four acts and offers opportunity for excellent acting. The production will be staged under the personal supervision of the popular star "The Woman in the Case" displays Fitch in his most prolific work. It is a drama full of tensity and the character in which Miss Walsh will appear enables her to display the full strength of her versatility. Her magnetic charm, force and personality was never so apparent as in the role.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

"Sari" begins the fifth and final week of its Boston engagement at the Colonial Theatre next Monday. Every advance indication is that the size of the audience for this last period of the operetta's stay will serve to make the entire visit of five weeks an engagement of record-breaking proportions. "Sari's" initial performance at the Colonial was given Aug. 24 and there has not been a performance since given before an audience which did not actually tax the capacity of the big playhouse. The wonderful music of the "Sari" score; the delight of Mizzi Hajos' performance of the titular role; the unusual excellence of the presentation by the other members of a cast of vocal and histrionic note; the beauty of the scenic production; the elaborateness of the costuming all are elements of "Sari" which considered in combination could make for nothing else than emphatic success. During "Sari's" last week a new member of the cast will be heard, J. K. Murray, probably the most popular singing actor in Boston today. Mr. Murray's great personal following, built up by his triumphs with the Castle Square Opera company and other opera organizations of prominence, will welcome the opportunity of hearing his really wonderful voice and watching his careful and impressive performance of Racz, the Gypsy leader, who is in reality the most important male figure in the piece.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE

"Broadway Jones" has been amusing large houses at Castle Square Theatre all this week and the general verdict is that nothing Mr. Craig has put on provided better entertainment than Cohan's clever farce. Opening in Jones extravagant apartments in New York, just as the young spendthrift has blown in his last ten dollars, the play shifts to Jonesville Ct., where the sudden death of an uncle makes him heir to a large Chewing Gum Plant. Jones wants to turn everything into money and return to the White Lights, but he finds himself tempted to stay by a pretty little lady accountant, who has been the real brains of the organization for years. So it is good bye to the Great White Way and onward and upward up the straight and narrow for Jones. Miss Young gave an attractive study of a modern young business woman who sees no reason for not wearing pretty clothes just because she has to carry colums of figures in her head. As the Prodigal Jones William Carleton acted in his usual boyish and good natured fashion, Dudley Hawley as Wallace, the faithful friend affording a clever contrast. An especially good scene was the interior of a typically old fashioned New England home, played by Morrill Morrison, Mabel Colcord and Robert Capron.

Next week comes the much discussed play "Kindling" chosen by the Drama league of America as its first printed play, and never given in Boston till now. Its production in New York raised a storm of comment, in which many ministers and settlement workers took part, and none who care for vital drama will want to miss "Kindling."

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

"Along Came Ruth," the comedy that has made the Plymouth Theatre the laughing centre of Boston, Monday starts the fourth week of its successful engagement in that city. Since the opening the piece has steadily increased in popularity and seems likely to repeat its big New York success. The play is produced by Henry W. Savage in the remarkably skilful manner that has characterized all his productions. Holman Day, the author, has drawn a number of interesting and true New England types full of wit and humor. The story is woven around Ruth Ambrose, a young American girl, fresh from school, who, by the force of her charm and personality awakens a little Maine town. The opening scene shows the furniture emporium of Israel Putnam Hubbard at Oldport, Maine. Hubbard represents one of the most amusing characters seen on the stage in years. His business has gradually declined. In fact so much so that at the opening of the story the sight of a customer is as rare as hen's teeth. Ruth, imbued with all the progressive spirit of the modern girl, and in search of a position is taken on, and from that moment his fortunes begin to rise. The play, as a whole, represents the efficiency of the modern school and emphasizes the advantages of the boom spirit. It is a great, big wholesome comedy with plenty of hearty laughs and just the sort of play for a delightful evening's entertainment.

RESIGNATION AT MILTON

Joseph Manning Retires as Fire Engineer

Milton residents who have felt the past year that more politics were being played in their town than any in the state, were given an unexpected surprise Thursday when they learned that M. Joseph Manning of Thatcher street, who was appointed a member of the Board of Fire Engineers April 30 last, has resigned his position for personal reasons.

The news of the resignation spread like wildfire, and more than one group of voters were seen with their heads together discussing the latest turn in town affairs.

The appointment of Mr. Manning, followed the controversey over former Chief Edward A. McCue, against whom charges were made by the Selectmen, and which were not sustained. Mr. Manniny was named to fill one of the places on the new board of engineers.

EIGHTY DEGREE DAY.

Climbing, still climbing, is the mercury, and today's temperature at noon was the highest point that has been reached since the mercury began to climb upwards Sept. 10. On that day the glass registered 62 at noon, and since then it has gradually climbed upward, first to 64, then 65, 74, 75, 79 and 80. Tomorrow's weather promises to be pleasant, and it may be still higher at noon than today.

BRAINTREE GIRL MISSING

School Miss Dropped Out of Sight on Wednesday

The Quincy police have been asked by the police of Braintree to see if they can locate in Quincy, Annie, the 13-year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Otis, who has been missing from her home on Pleasant street, Braintree, since Wednesday noon.

The girl attended the Hollis school and that day she was taken to task for some slight misdemeanor by one of the teachers. She left the school at the noon recess and dropped out of sight, and all efforts to find trace of her since that time have failed.

She is described as of average height, and has light hair, made up in two braids which were tied together with a large bow of white ribbon. When she left home for school last Wednesday she wore a white muslin dress, a gray raincoat, tan shoes and brown stockings.

Her mother is prostrated over her disappearance, and now fears that something has happened to her. Truant Officer Galivan has notified the police of Quincy and surrounding towns and requested that they watch out for her.

DAILY LEDGER
SPORTS
All of Local Interest

"Ted" Keohane of Atlantic, one of the fastest dash men in the state, has enrolled as a student at Dartmouth, and on Monday will enter the college for the first year of a full course.

Mr. Keohane is perhaps best known to the general public as a sprinter. From boyhood he demonstrated marked ability in that direction, but it was not until a year ago Fourth of July that he competed in amateur events as a registered athlete. Since then he has secured places in every evnt in which he has competed.

His value to the track team of Dartmouth, on which Quincy has been gloriously represented the past three years by the Marceau brothers, is inestimable. Possessing the fine physique of an athlete, and a young man of exemplary habits, it would not be surprising if in a few years "Ted" equaled the record for the century dash so frequently mentioned by Arthur Duffy in his stories of his appearances.

"Ted" after graduation from the Quincy school entered Adams Academy where he remained for two years. He finished his preparatory course at Quincy High school. He has since then engaged in business, being associated with one of Boston progressive houses. He is a popular resident of his ward, and was one of those instrumental in the organizing of St. Kevins court, M. C. O. F. of which he is a past chief ranger. He is also a member of the North Quincy Club. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Keohane of Newbury avenue.

LAST GAME OF THE SEASON

Div. 22, A. O. H., will play the Redmen on Saturday for the second time this season. On Labor Day the Indians won 4 to 3 in ten innings. The Hibernians expect to have a stronger team Saturday. The game will be played at Ward Three.

There is a possibility that Knight may pitch for the Hibernians. The other players may be Little,cf; DeCoste, 2b; Desmond, 3b; Mulligan, ss; Duane, 1b; Sid Duggan, c; Elcock, rf; Hebert, lf. If the strike-out wonder does not twirl then McPherson the regular, may see the game through.

This may be the final base ball game of the season in Quincy.

MILTON ACADEMY SCHEDULE.

There are some difficult games on the schedule including Brown & Nicols, Milton High, Volkman School, and Saint George's Academy. All the games are at home excepting the one with Groton Academy, Oct. 17. Milton Academy does not open until Sept. 23, so no practice of the candidates has been held yet. The schedule is as follows:

Sept. 30—Allen School at Milton.
Oct. 3, Roxbury Latin at Milton.
Oct. 8—Brown & Nicols at Milton.
Oct. 12—Milton High at Milton.
Oct. 17—Groton Academy at Groton.

CALLING OFF OF GREAT WAR

Will Aid Plan of Disarmament In Europe, Says Germany

ATTITUDE TOWARD MEDIATION

Willing to Quit Fighting, but Will Continue Conflict While Allies Demand War to a Finish and Complete Crushing of Germany—Empire Must Remain Intact and Be Let Alone by Other Powers Around Her In Future

Washington, Sept. 18.—Germany has acknowledged the United States' informal inquiry concerning further peace overtures with a non-committal comment, President Wilson told callers. He declined to disclose the comment. The reply came from the German chancellor.

The German government has made known to the American government its attitude toward mediation for peace in Europe. It is said on the highest diplomatic authority that the kaiser's attitude is as follows:

First—Germany would be glad to listen to mediation suggestions, but is absolutely prohibited by the attitude of England.

Second—Germany will not stop fighting so long as England declares this must be a war to the finish.

Third—Germany can take up the question of mediation and peace only when the allies are willing to assume a like attitude of conciliation and consideration.

Fourth—If this is to be a war to the finish, as England declares daily, then Germany will fight on. If the allies are determined to crush and dismember her, then she will fight to the last man.

Fifth—If the world at large hopes for disarmament, then the crushing of Germany is the poorest way to accomplish it. Crushed, Germany will repeat the era after the Napoleonic wars and arm every man and child in the empire for the day of revenge.

Sixth—Germany is willing to call the war a draw. Such a solution, she maintains, would be most conducive to future peace in Europe and to disarmament. Complete victory on either side would not lead to stable conditions.

There are three perequisites to Germany's consideration of peace negotiations:

First—There must be something more substantial in the offer than the mere tender of good offices of the United States. While recognizing the kindly interests of the United States government, yet it contains no assurances from the allies. England must forego her demands for war to a finish and the complete crushing of Germany. As long as that attitude is persisted in Germany will be compelled to turn a deaf ear to all friendly offers.

Second—Germany in Europe must not be dismembered. While negotiations might be considered concerning colonies, the German empire must remain intact.

Third—Germany must be let alone by other powers around her in the future. Every man in the empire believes sincerely and honestly today that the war is one of self-defense against the hostile encroachments of Russia, France and England. Live and let live is the policy that Germany wishes its enemies to observe.

The kindly offer of American mediation is declined by Germany because there is no assurance from the allies that it would be considered by them.

ENGLAND APOLOGIZES

Alleged Interview Given by Carden Was Not Authorized

Washington, Sept. 18.—Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, called at the state department and formally expressed his regret for the publication of an interview attributed to Sir Lionel Carden, British minister to Mexico, criticising the United States for withdrawing troops from Vera Cruz.

The ambassador also declared that if the interview had been given by Carden it was contrary to all the usages of British diplomatic custom, and in utter violation of the regulations of the diplomatic service. He communicated the text of the interview he was able to secure to the British foreign office, where it will be brought to the attention of Carden as soon as he arrives in England.

RUSSIAN RUSE AIDED FRENCH

Victories Gained by Weakening of German First Line

SENT TO CHECK RUSSIANS

Attack on East Prussia Hastened by Czar to Weaken Armies Battling With Allies—Germans Also Lost by Withdrawing Crack Austrian Corps From Alsace to Galicia

Petrograd, Sept. 18.—That the Germans will not attempt any invasion of Russia in force, although they probably will seek the occupation of parts of Russian Poland to protect their own frontier, is the opinion of military officials here.

Official advices from the front indicate that the Germans are withdrawing part of their first line troops which were rushed into East Prussia a fortnight ago and starting them back west, presumably to aid in reenforcing the lines in France. Half a dozen active army corps are reported now in transfer and their places are being taken by troops of the second line.

It has rained very heavily along the frontier for several days and the country in the north generally has been transformed into a bog which makes the movement of troops very slow and laborious. Because of this it is believed Germany will depend on her second line troops, now in the field, to oppose the Russian movement while she will throw her entire first line army into action against the allies in France in another supreme effort to destroy the French opposition.

Russian officials declare the attempt must fail. The German general staff, they say, made a fatal error when it weakened its army of invasion by withdrawing more than 300,000 men to send to East Prussia and to aid the Austrians. It was in the hope that the Germans would do this, it is stated, that the Russian movement in East Prussia was attempted long before the Russian army was completely mobilized and ready for service.

The ruse worked. General von Hindenberg and several of the foremost strategists on the German general staff were rushed into action in the east. Traffic was hurriedly suspended while army corps after army corps was rushed to the east. And, as a result, while the attempt to crush the French with the forces available was attempted the battle of the Marne followed and the Germans were decisively defeated and compelled to retreat from in front of Paris.

Not only did the Germans withdraw their own troops, but they permitted the transfer of the Austrian Fourteenth army corps, the crack corps of the Austrian army, which was doing great work in upper Alsace and was responsible for the defeat of the French at Mulhausen, to Galicia, where it has been overwhelmed in the general misfortune that met the Austrian arms.

The Russian war office has received information that the Austrians are concentrating at Cracow and that they will have the assistance there of German forces that could not be sent forward into eastern Galicia. It is stated, however, that no opportunity is to be given the Austrians who have been so badly defeated to retire in order from the San river positions. Instead the Russians are crossing the river in force and planning a general attack on the flanks of the retreating Austrian armies.

Prisoners who have discussed the defeat of the Austrian forces declare it was chiefly due to the number of untrained troops amalgamated in the active armies. When the fighting began in Galicia the best of the Austrian troops were in the extreme south fighting against the Servians and two crack corps were in Alsace, where they had been sent to the aid of the Germans.

In order to present a defense along the Galician frontier, Austria rushed troops from the mobilization centres. Included were thousands of raw levies who had been rushed to the front. They also did not know their officers and the result was that when the test came they failed. Then, instead of sending the first line troops to hold Lemberg, they were rushed north to aid in the invasion of Russian Poland. In consequence, Lemberg, with its enormous supplies, fell before the Russian advance.

The Pearl Scarfpin

It Proved a Dead Giveaway.

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

Jack Herkimer was a very pleasant fellow. He was popular with both men and women. Flaxen haired, blue eyed, a boyish face on a massive figure, good natured, careless of everything except the feelings of others, he drew about him so many friends that he found it difficult to avoid distressing them from an inability to accept and return all the favors they lavished upon him.

One day Jack was sitting in a street car when a young lady got in. She sat for a few moments oblivious to the fact that persons are not expected to ride in street cars for nothing, then made a dive for her portmanteau, supposed to be contained in the bag she carried. There was a succession of dives, each more spasmodic than the last; then she arose and started to leave the car without stopping it.

Jack interposed. "Pardon me," he said, placing himself in front of her, lifting his hat and smiling benignly; "if you are without change for your fare I will pay it for you. There is no need to get off."

He held in his hand a quantity of large change and picked out a nickel from among the coins. The young lady, apparently reassured, refrained from her attempt to commit suicide for the want of 5 cents and sat down. But she was still too flustered to thank Jack for the loan. The conductor received the fare, passed on, and the young lady sat trying to regain her equanimity. Presently a thought struck her all of a sudden. It was that it behooved her to make some arrangement for the payment of the debt. She was a young woman and had not the experience adequate to the occasion.

"How am I to—to get it back to you?" she asked Jack.

"There's no need to get it back to me at all," he replied, with that winning smile of his. "But if you insist upon doing so"— He hesitated. He would have liked to add, "I'll call for it if you'll give me your address," but it occurred to him that if the young lady did not consider this taking an advantage of her youth there were doubtless members of her family who would, so he finished the sentence by giving his own address, at the same time begging her not to take the trouble to return so small an amount.

By this time the girl had so far recovered her composure as to say, "Thank you very much." She would have liked to return Jack's smile, for it was catching, but she was only sixteen years old and had been brought up to give no encouragement to a stranger.

Jack, who was feasting his eyes on her beauty, passed far beyond the point where he had intended to leave the car. When the girl arose to alight she was apparently in doubt whether or not it would be proper for her to nod an adieu to the handsome young fellow who had befriended her. She decided in the negative, and Jack, who was about to go out before her in order to hand her off the step, sat still. The episode was ended, but left a very pleasant sensation in the young man's breast.

That night when Jack went to sleep he was paying the girl's fare again and again and assuring her that a nickel was of no consequence and she must not think of returning it to him.

The next day Jack received an envelope addressed in a man's handwriting containing a bit of paper and postage stamps to the amount of 5 cents. On the paper within in the same hand as the address was the word "Thanks." Evidently the girl's father or brother had taken the matter off her hands. Jack felt sorry. He had hoped to receive from the young lady something that would have given him the semblance of an excuse to take another step toward an acquaintance. This return of his loan by one other than the creditor herself ended the matter. And in a week Jack, who had bouquets of smiles thrown at him from pretty girls, forgot all about it.

One day a little box, addressed in a feminine hand, came for Mr. Herkimer by post. Jack was the recipient of so many favors from young ladies that he naturally supposed it to be from some girl with whom he was "spoons." He did not recognize the handwriting, but quite often his favorers who wished to conceal their identity had addressed him through an amanuensis, and he thought nothing of it. Opening the box, he found nestling in cotton a scarfpin set with a single pearl.

Jack ran over all the girls to whom he had recently made love—that is, all he could remember—with a view to getting a clew as to the sender. He formed an opinion that she was one of three, but he could not tell which one. He would await developments, being well aware that no woman was likely to so favor him without in due time getting credit for her gift. Whenever he met a suspect he would put out feelers with a view to testing her as to whether she had sent the scarfpin. But week after week passed and there was no clew. Jack wore his pearl ornament for several years, studying the face of every woman who fixed her eyes upon it, hoping for a betrayal, but found no one who gave any indication whatever that she had bestowed the favor.

One September day Jack, who had gone to Europe with the American summer hegira, was in a compartment of a railway carriage in Germany on his way to Hamburg when an elderly man handed a lady into the car, then got in himself. The girl was a beauty, and it seemed to Jack that he had seen her before. It was some time before the gentleman got his hand baggage stowed away in the racks and the lady had settled herself in her seat. Then she looked about among her fellow passengers. Jack from the time he had received the mysterious scarfpin had never worn any other. He saw the girl's eyes hovering upon him and finally light on the ornament. Immediately the blood left her cheeks, then rushed back a crimson flood.

There was no more doubt in Jack's mind that the young lady was the donor of the scarfpin than that she was present before him. But who was she? Certainly not one with whom he had been on intimate terms. He was quite young enough to remember faces, especially of those with whom he had an acquaintance. But no racking of his brain served to bring forth the identity of this lady who had sent him an anonymous gift. And yet something had passed between them, for he was sure he had seen her before.

The train was an express and connected. As soon as it was well under way the conductor came through for tickets, and the first person he approached in the compartment was the young lady in question, who referred him to the gentleman who accompanied her.

If it were not for suggestion our world would be a very dull one. Seeing the girl ask for her ticket brought back to Jack Herkimer a picture of her when, three years younger, she had started to leave a street car in America for lack of fare. The riddle was solved. She had rewarded him for what she doubtless considered a favor of importance, sending the reward anonymously.

Jack was a man of quick resource. What he would do flashed upon his brain with electric rapidity. He began to fumble in his pockets for his ticket—that is, in every pocket except where it was. The conductor stood before him, waiting. Jack continued the search until, pretending that the ticket was not forthcoming, he said to the conductor in the only language he knew, English:

"I've lost my pocketbook, with my money and my ticket as well."

Naturally, every eye in the compartment was turned to the unfortunate man, the girl's included. She was not the unsophisticated creature she had been when Jack had paid her fare, and it did not take long for her to become aware that he was enacting this scene on her account. To conceal a smile she turned her face to the window.

"You are an American, are you not, sir?" said the young lady's companion.

"I am."

"If you will tell me what you require I will be happy to oblige you."

"I need only my fare to Bremen, where I will take steamer for home."

"In that case the matter is simple. I sail on the Crown Princess tomorrow morning."

"I go by the same steamer. I have the documents by which to obtain all I need from the purser."

The gentleman paid Jack's fare. Jack asked for his name and address and was given a card bearing the name of Farnsworth. Then the passengers, having lost all interest in the matter, settled down to their various ways of passing the time. There was one person who, not being deceived by this audacious imposture, continued to look through the window at the scenery as though she would not lose any of it for a fortune. At last she turned, but carefully abstained from meeting the gaze of the unfortunate man who had lost his valuables.

Americans abroad come at once to a friendly footing. Jack Herkimer was profuse in his thanks to Mr. Farnsworth and, taking a seat opposite him, talked about everything he could think of, expatiating especially on that confidence those born under the stars and stripes have in one another, and so ingratiated himself into the favor of the old gentleman that the latter at last said, "Permit me to introduce you to my daughter, Mr."—

"Herkimer. I am John Herkimer of Troy, N. Y."

That was the trying moment of Miss Farnsworth's life. She felt a great impulse to fix her eyes on Jack's scarfpin, and Jack threw open his coat that she might get a good view of it. A half vexed, half amused smile played over her features like a fitful breeze among flowers. Jack gave no outward sign of ever having met her before, but there was a happy triumph within that was as plain to Miss Farnsworth as it was unobservable to the others present.

As soon as the steamer was reached Jack, after a pretended visit to the purser, paid his indebtedness and tipped the head steward to put him at table beside the Farnsworths. After such adventures with a young lady and a week's voyage ahead of them it would be absurd to suppose that the principal actors would cross the Atlantic ocean without a love affair. Indeed, the gift of the scarfpin made it plain to Jack that a conquest had been made long before, and he found love-making dead easy. Fortunately he had found a girl he wanted and, as he expressed it, "wanted her bad." An engagement occurred on the steamer, and the wedding followed in due course of time.

Good Form

Bohemian Supper.

The invitations to a Bohemian supper are supposed to go to only one's most intimate friends and those who are talented, for people who can "do things" to entertain others are always in demand.

For the true Bohemian supper one must be the possessor of enough individual chafing dishes, silver, copper or aluminium to go around, for each guest may choose and prepare his or her own special dainty undisturbed when the spirit moves and while the entertainment progresses. If one has not a large stock they can always be rented for the occasion.

The lights are all yellow shaded, the flowers are yellow and those in season that are most decorative. Each chafing dish outfit is on its tray. The hostess presides over one large dish, which contains usually her favorite lobster a la Newburg, and many guests prefer it to making a dish for themselves.

On the sideboard should be ingredients for a number of dishes. These may include mushrooms, sweetbreads, minced chicken, oysters, clams, lobsters and other well known foundations, with sauce accompaniments known to international cookery. In the center of the table is the revolving relish dish, surrounded by crackers, cheeses and various breads.

National drinks that go with the edibles are in evidence. The final thing to be served is the Turkish coffee with its spiced and burning brandy, and it is accompanied by Turkish candy, which is generally partaken of by all present.

Gossiping In Public.

One of the most common habits that is reprehensible is that of discussing personal affairs in public. They may be your own affairs or they may be matters that concern others. At any rate, they should not be discussed in the hearing of strangers.

The withholding of names is no excuse. Very frequently a listener has been able to follow a conversation and to know perfectly the ones under discussion. Women who have the habit of talking in this way in public seem to think that no one knows anything but themselves.

Street cars, railroad trains, elevators, restaurants and the promenade where there are crowds are places where the conversation should be restrained. Keep your gossip if you must indulge in this evil practice for your own home.

Even then it will probably be repeated with a different accent and given a different interpretation. Generally speaking, gossip brings a punishment on the one who is responsible for it as well as working incalculable harm.

Timing House Guests.

It is good form and entirely correct to make the dates for visits from your friends suit your own convenience, with due regard, of course, to when it will be possible for them to come. You can say: "Can you spend the last two weeks in September with us? I have invited Miss B and her brother, Mr and Mrs. C. and Mr. F., so, you see, we shall be a party of eight, just enough for tennis, rowing, etc. Do send me a line to say you will be here the 15th, and we will meet you," etc. Such an invitation leaves no room for doubt as to length of visit.

Your friend will understand that she is expected to arrive on the 15th of September and stay the fortnight, expiring on the 30th.

Dinner Service.

Where the hostess has a handsome set of silverware it is customary to place it upon the sideboard, and also any silver or ware that is to be used during a formal dinner is placed ready to hand. The observance of this saves much tribulation of spirit for hostess and help. If her help is trained she knows there will be no gap in the service. If untrained, a half hour lesson to initiate them will be well spent.

As Honor Guest.

When a young lady is the guest of honor at any entertainment given for her every one should be presented to her, older or younger, for the reason that her host and hostess are making her their honor guest and others they wish her to know are invited to meet her.

Clearing the Table.

A waitress should be instructed not to pile up dishes when clearing the table, but to set them noiselessly upon a large platter; also to remove everything not pertaining to dessert and to remove the crumbs from the cloth before serving the last course.

Crochet Bonbon Baskets.

Crochet bonbon baskets are shaped like the little French gilt baskets and are three inches tall from the bottom to the top of the handle. They are specially designed to use with the Irish crochet doilies and centerpieces.

When Toasted.

When a toast is given the person honored should remain seated while the guests are drinking to her. When they have finished she should rise and thank them. If she has the ability she should make a suitable speech.

PLEASED TO BE CORRECTED

Small Fire Loss Indicates Efficiency of Department

Editor Ledger:—

I am glad that you corrected my statement before the meeting of the Board of Trade in regard to the fire loss per capita in the City of Quincy from $15.00 to $1.44 per annum. My statement was based on the Chief of Fire Department's report of 1912, as contained in the City Report of that year, wherein under the head of "Alarms and Losses" there is given the item "Amount of property at risk $545,857.00"

I see now that this item refers to the destruction which might have occurred from the fires during that year. Your figures showing that the loss was only about one tenth of this amount, indicates the efficiency of our Fire department, but still we should have more conservation against fires on behalf of our citizens.

Property taking fire to the value of $545.000 in one year in our city is too great a possible waste. Lack of fire prevention by the people only results in high insurance rates, increased expenditures for fire apparatus and fire fighters.

Let us make Quincy first in fire prevention, which will result in less cost to our people and greater safety.

Another correction,—Instead of 24 cents, as reported by you, per individual for intemperance, I stated $24.00 was the average for the United States per individual per year. Quincy would spend $940,000.00 a year for intoxicating liquors if our people were up to the average of the United States.

Thanks to No-license, an intelligent poll, and a fair enforcement of the license law, the average for Quincy is very much less than $24.00, and this money is going into new houses and homes instead of drink. It is not surprising under such conditions that we average a new house for every day of the year. Keep our city clean and watch it grow.

J. A. Sedgwick.

LIVELY CONTESTS FOR COUNCILLOR

There are three Guy's who are candidates at the State primaries next Tuesday for the Governors Council. One of these is Guy A. Ham who this year says he prefers to be known simply as "Ham," also Charles W. Guy, the Quincy farmer; and Elbridge G. P. Guy of Worcester a brother of the Quincy Guy, but a candidate on the Republican ticket. Both Guy's in their campaign literature claim to be "direct descendants of the Timothy Guy who gave the warhoop for the Poston Tea Party Dec. 16, 1773."

The Quincy Guy is looking for a second term. A year ago when the Democratic nomination went begging throughout the district, Charles A. Guy stepped into the breach and by a mix-up in the similarity and much to the surprise of everybody he was elected.

This year, however, his success has resulted in several other Democrats coming forward who would like to pass the winter months in the Governors Council. Whether or not the Quincy Guy will be lost in the shuffle next Tuesday is at present problematical.

His brother, E. G. P. Guy, is running for the Republican nomination in the 7th district and in this district neither the Democrats or Progressives have filed nomination papers, so there is a possibility of one of Timothy Guy's descendants being in the Governors council just the same.

Guy A. Ham, or "Ham" who was considered one of the ablest members of the council the year he served, and withal one of the most brilliant orators among the Republicans of the state, took his defeat good naturedly last year, and feels sure that the mistake in similarity of names a year ago will not be repeated this year. Besides being an eloquent orator, he is also an able attorney, for while in the office of the district attorney he made a record for himself that immediately created a demand for his services as counsel, so that today he is counsel for large insurance and trust companies.

He however is to have some opposition at the primaries, for Senator William A. Bellamy of Taunton also wants the Republican nomination. Frederick H. Bishop of Quincy will receive the Progressive nomination.

CANDIDATES ENTERTAINED.

Many candidates for public office were entertained Thursday evening by Alfred N. LaBrecque at his home at Sea street and Albatross road, Adams shore. The affair was a stag party and politics were barred. Prominently displayed over a fireplace was a sign which read "neutrality must be maintained—don't start anything."

Powers, mayoralty candidates.

BRIDAL COUPLE DETAINED.

Among the witnesses at the inquest on the death of James E. Fallon, held at the District Court this morning were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Paradis who were married at St. Mary's church on Wednesday morning following a nuptial mass.

They planned to leave on a honeymoon trip after the wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Clarkins. A summons to appear as witnesses at the inquest served a few days before the ceremony was performed, obliged them to postpone their trip.

They now expect to leave within a few days and on their return will reside at 2 Quarry street. Mr. Paradis and his bride who was Catherine V. Clarkin were both passengers on the electric car which struck and caused the death of Mr. Fallon.

OFFICER WALSH.

John Walsh, who retired from police duty after 35 years service as guardian of the peace in the South Station, and who died suddenly on Wednesday, was well known in this city.

Patrolman Walsh was 67 years of age. In his younger days he lived here. He was a granite cutter by trade and was employed for some few years with the firm of P. McDonnell & Sons.

He was then an enthusiastic member of the Niagara fire company and run with the old hand tub whenever it responded to alarms. He was very popular among an almost unlimited circle of friends and associates. His funeral was held this morning.

Here Is Good News for Stomach Victims

Some very remarkable results are being obtained by treating stomach, liver and intestinal troubles with pure vegetable oils, which exert a cleansing, soothing and purifying action upon the lower bowels, removing the obstructions of poisonous fecal matter and gases and preventing their absorption by the blood. This done, the food is allowed free passage from the stomach, fermentation ceases and stomach troubles quickly disappear.

George H. Mayr, for twenty years a leading Chicago druggist, cured himself and many of his friends of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles of years' standing by this treatment, and so successful was the remedy he devised that it has since been placed in the hands of druggists all over the country, who have sold thousands of bottles.

Though absolutely harmless, the effect of the medicine is sufficient to convince any one of its remarkable effectiveness, and within 24 hours the sufferer feels like a new person. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by Clyde T. Cox and druggists everywhere.

Everyone must realize that a new life has been enthused into the citizens of Quincy during the past few weeks, and that the citizens today are coming more and more to realize some of their possibilities. There is per- not know him personally or by reputation.

haps no better way in which the interests of the city can be furthered than by having a resident sit in the halls of Congress at Washington during the next two years.

It is generally known that Quincy has a candidate for the nomination for Congressman from the Fourteenth district in the person of Frank Fessenden Crane, Quincy's energetic, and wide-awake dock and water front commissioner. It is doubtful if there is a voter in the city who either does Tuesday. Of course registered Democrats can not vote for him at the primaries, but as he is almost certain to receive the nomination every voter of the city, whether he be, Democrat, Republican or Progressive should get out, and work for, shout for and vote for Mr. Crane.

Republicans should go to the polls next Tuesday determined to give Commodore Crane such a vote as was never before given a candidate. It should be a unanimous vote. If the residents of Quincy support him, his nomination is certain.

Two years ago Quincy had an opportunity to elect a resident to Congress, in the person of Col. Henry L Kincaide and had they done their duty, he would have been elected. After the election was over they were sorry. Do not let history repeat itself in this matter this year.

As to what the genial Commodore has done for Quincy it would take volumes to tell. Everybody knows. As this is the booster season, get into line, follow the crowd and work for, shout and vote for Frank Fessenden Crane.

The Russians, according to the latest reports, have driven the Austrians from their advance positions in Russian Poland back upon the fortress at Przemysl and to the west of the San river. They have suffered so severely in this retreat that it is believed that it is only a matter of a short time until the shattered remnant of the army will surrender to the Russians This will open up the Russian way to Berlin by way of Breslau Russian cavalry has already been reported near this city and Posen. After the capture or isloation of Przemysl the Russians have yet to capture Cracow, one of the strongest defenses in Austria. Breslau is not a fortified position, but about thirty miles to the south is Neisse, one of the strongest defenses of Silesia. The Germans are advancing a large force into East Prussia, and the Russians admit that they are retiring, but claim that the withdrawal is merely to secure a more advantageous position

QUINCY BOOST AT CALIFORNIA

Moving Pictures Taken Here For Exhibition

Jones S. Brown, Jr., representing the Thomas A. Edison Co. is in town today making photographs of prominent places about Quincy. The Edison company have a contract for 16,000 feet of moving picture film, for the Board of Panama Pacific managers, which will be shown at the exposition in California.

Among the pictures being taken in Quincy are scenes about City Square, the birthplaces, residences and burial places of the two Quincy Presidents of the United States, and other prominent residences of the city, as well as views of some of the quarries which were taken from a boat lowered to the bottom of the quarry.

Of the 16,000 feet of film 9,000 feet is to be devoted to scenery in different towns in Massachusetts, and 7,000 feet to reproductions of scenes like the battle of Bunker Hill, the ride of Paul Revere Boston Tea party and the Deerfield massacre. These will be shown daily in the State building at the California exposition. The State building will be a replica of the front of the State House at Boston. It will have an assembly hall with a seating capacity of 500.

At the publicity bureau at the exposition, publicity matter from the different cities and towns in the state will distributed. Particularly valuable will be the booster matter that has been used in Quincy during the past few weeks.

REOPENING OE FIRST CHURCH

Preparations Being Made to Observe Anniversary

The First Parish in Quincy will resume services on Sunday morning. Three weeks later, on Sunday, Oct. 11 it will celebrate its 275th anniversary.

In European countries, whose history antedates the Christian Era, 275 years does not seem a long period. But in American cities it marks the time of beginnings. And in point of fact the story of the gathering of this ancient church marks also the beginning of permanent settlement on the site of the city of Quincy, then commonly spoken of as "The Mount." It is also true that for more than 150 years the history of the parish and the town are one.

About a century ago the Congregational churches of New England divided into the two wings, Unitarian and Trinitarian. And most of the original Pilgrim and Puritan churches including those in Plymouth, Barnstable, Duxbury, Scituate, Hingham, Quincy, Dorchester, Roxbury and the First and Second churches in Boston, adopted the Unitarian faith. With the growing spirit of religions toleration in New England other denominations also established churches here, until now the First Parish is one among some thirty or more Christian churches within the limits of the City of Quincy.

But its traditions are still dear to the people of the city. Its old families, its distinguished names, and its noble lives are identified with much that is best in the history of city, commonwealth and nation, and the many evidences of growing prosperity, enterprise and unity in this ancient parish will be regarded with sincere pleasure by loyal members of other churches as a helpful factor in developing that spirit of hearty cooperation which is so much needed today in order to promote the welfare of all.

It seems quite timely and appropriate that Mr. Hudson should have chosen as the subject for his sermon on this opening Sunday of the New Church Year the question: "Is Unity possible in the Modern World?"

HAPPY OVER HOME RULE

J. O'Connor, an 84-year-old native of Ireland, and a well known resident of Atlantic, gathered more then a dozen friends about him in his home on Madison street Friday evening to celebrate the placing of the Home Rule bill on the statute books.

Mr. O'Connor has been a resident of this city for many years, having come here about 1850. When a boy he heard his countrymen discussing home rule; and he has eagerly followed its progress over the long stretch of years. The news that the signature of King George V had been appended was a big surprise, and no sooner had he learned the news than he sent invitations broadcast to his friends.

Among those who responded was Past Vice President Richard Gray and Vice President Sam T. Drew, active members of Quincy Branch 61, United Irish land league, the oldest existing branch of its kind in the country.

The celebration took the form of a reunion, during which luncheon was served and stories of eviction and other historical events were related.

Now that the rebuilding of the A. O. H. block on Franklin street is completed, there are two good halls to let, which will be known as Quincy Adams hall and Franklin hall.

THREE SECTIONS WANT SCHOOLS

Several Lots Offered as Sites in Ward Two

The City Council Committee on Public Buildings gave a public hearing Friday evening on the question of a site for a new school building in the Ward Two district. During the afternoon the committee visited the ward and inspected several sites that had been offered.

The hearing in the evening was well attended and the needs of the district were forcibly set forth. Thomas B. Pollard, master of the Washington school, spoke of the crowded condition of the school and gave a detail account of the children of school age in the different sections of the ward.

The general impression of those present was that the new building should be somewhere in the centre of the section about South street, several being in favor of having the westerly line of the new district include Quincy avenue. It was announced that the school committe had considered moving the present westerly line of the Washington school from Pond street to River street.

Several lots of land were offered to the committee varying in price from 5 cents to 15 cents per square fot.

The committee also heard persons present relative to securing school sites in the Norfolk Downs and Squantum districts. The urgent need of new school buildings in both of these sections was set forth. This was particularly true in regard to Squantum. It was said that there are nearly 100 children from this section attending the Quincy school, and that during the winter months they had to ride in cold cars to school, and at noon eat cold lunches in the basement of the school. It was quite a hardship for these children.

It was also argued that a suitable site could be purchased at the present time at a reasonable figure, and that it would be good business policy for the city to purchase the land in both of these sections at the present itme, and later, when ready to build, it would not have to pay a large price for land.

The committee gave everybody who desired an opportunity to speak, after which it went into executive session to consider the several matters which had been referred.

LIVE UP TO REPUTATION

That Is Why Our Schools Attract to Quincy

John D. Mackay, the chairman of the School Committee writes:

The editor has done me the honor of inviting me to contribute an article to the series of "boosters" at present running in the Daily Ledger, and he has requested that whatever I may write be relative to our public schools.

Commendable efforts are being made by the Ledger, the Board of Trade and other organizations and individuals to bring to the attention of outsiders the desirability of QUINCY as a place wherein to live or do business, and doubtless those efforts will bear some fruit. In any event, QUINCY is bound to continue to grow.

With increase of population there inevitably comes increased complexity of public questions and one of the questions ever before us and becoming more important and serious every year is the question of furnishing facilities for public education. We no longer discharge our full duty in this behalf by looking after the interests of the children. Certain of our industries have brought, and are steadily bringing to our city, men who are unacquainted with our language, our laws and our social customs.

Our own protection,—to put the matter on no higher plane,—demands that QUINCY furnish encouragement and opportunities for those people to improve their minds, and the maintenance of evening schools suggests itself as the thing needful in this connection.

THE WAR SPIRIT.

There are people who claim that the war spirit is manifest all through daily life in this present crisis. There are always many cases of fisticuffs on the ball field. Some people assert there have been more than usual since the war started. Their theory is that people are reading so much about fighting, that every one feels personally on the verge of battle, is quick to take affronts, and resent real or supposed injuries.

Anyway, the newspapers do report a good many cases where arguments about the war result in battered heads Within a day or two it was noted that 50 lumbermen in the Maine woods squared off at each other over this issue. Guns were drawn, and before peace was restored, one man was dead and three injured.

To a great many of our people, the war is no mere impersonal spectacle. Everywhere around us are natives of these warring nations, who have relatives and friends in the thick of the horror.

A maid of one of the alien races was seen crying a few days ago. Asked what was the matter, she replied in her lame English, that she had had no letters from her home since the war began. She had two brothers who were in the army, and her home had been in the province of Galicia, now harried by the cruel tooth of war.

There are hundreds of thousands of just such cases. What a tragedy it all is to these isolated young people, who have penetrated to the strange scenes of this new land, leaving behind loved friends in the calm security of peasant life. In a moment this hell has flared loose, and the little home in the old country may be a blackened ruin, and its occupants dead.

It is no wonder, with all these personal relations to the great tragedy, that feeling sometimes blazes up into battle. It is a time when one may well feel a special sympathy for, and interest in, the alien population who are swarming over our fields and towns.

MEN'S DRESS.

One of the humorous phases of the clothes question is the uniformity of men's styles. This varies in inverse proportion to age. Your little man in the grammar school is most subject to this rigidity. If all the other boys are wearing caps, it is a terrible trial to him to appear in a hat.

You may prove to him that your selection is the latest New York style. But if the boys in his home set are not wearing it, it becomes obnoxious and hated. His feeling is judicious in a way. If the hat varies but a trifle from the accepted form in his particular circle, it is sure to find its way to the mud puddle, and that speedily.

When you get up to the age of the college boy, the same spirit is nearly as powerful. All the boys will be found wearing the same thing under the same circumstances. If one is wearing a derby hat on the opening day, all of them are doing so. At negligee hours, all are roaming about in most nondescript knock-abouts.

Men still have certain rigid epochs of dress. The straw hat is supposed to be very largely called in on Sept. 15. Within a few days, they mysteriously disappear as if by universal agreement. On the stock exchanges, an offender against this code is assisted to confrom to the universal practice. In other circles, the wearing of a straw hat a few days too late, makes one the subject of derisive remarks.

As men grow older, they have more individuality in dress. And this individuality is growing. The soft hat, for instance, has a far wider vogue than it had a few years ago.

Any man can improve his appearance, by fitting his clothes to his own personality and physique. Some years ago, thin men were made ridiculous by conforming to the rage for tight clothes. Now a slender man can present a rather rugged appearance, by a well fitted suit built on full lines.

BATTLE FOR HOURS DURING THE NIGHT

Most Desperate Engagement During the Present War

UNEXPECTED ATTACK IS MADE BY INVADERS

Ten Most Furious Charges During Rain Storm In Which Germans Are Driven Back With Tremendous Losses—Mowed Down Mercilessly When French Rapid-Firers and Three-Inch Guns Secure Exact Range—Fierce Hand-to-Hand Battle In Eleventh Charge at Break of Dawn—Germans Driven Back Seven Miles When Conflict Ends—Allies Have Advantage Thus Far of Battle of the Aisne

London, Sept. 19.—The most desperate and audacious assault of the whole war, hurled by the Germans at the French lines north of Rheims and rolling westward almost to the extreme ends of the hostile armies, has been foiled by the courage and resourcefulness of the French and British.

Only meagre details have slipped by the censors, but the setting of the clash emphasizes the chances that the invaders are willing to take to break the stalwart lines of the allies.

The attack was the most unexpected and the most brilliantly conceived onslaught of the war. It was delivered in total darkness, in a driving rain.

French Roused From Sleep

The action began late Wednesday night in front of the allies' lines north of Rheims. After a day of hard fighting and of long tramps through mud ankle deep, the French were sleeping soundly. Although they had been engaged nearly every hour of the day, they had not faced such desperate charges as had their comrades on the extreme right and left wings, where the German armies of General von Kluck and the crown prince were in the greatest peril.

Suddenly the warning shouts of sentries were heard, followed almost immediately by the crackle of rifles. The French lines had hardly been formed behind their entrenchments before the Germans were upon them. The invaders had marched silently southward from their trenches, drenched to the skin and splashing through pools that sometimes came above their boots.

The attack was so unexpected and so furious that, had it occurred in the Franco-Prussian war, it would probably have resulted in a French disaster. But the French today are prepared for every movement of the enemy.

Fire Quickly Answered

Before the defending lines were reached, the fire of the Germans was answered by the French. It was blind work, with no animated targest in front. Wherever guns flashed, guns were turned against them.

The German lines were unable to reach the French entrenchments, but fell back slowly. Again, after reforming their lines, they charged, but with no better success. For mile after mile toward the west the battle line extended until the British and French on the left wing of the allies were engaged.

Hour after hour the battling continued, vivid gleams of light revealing the positions of the embattled troops. Between the assaults, nothing could be heard but the patter of the rain, interrupted now and then by the boom of the great guns far back of the struggling lines.

No less than ten times did the invaders try to rush the allied lines. The French and British were content to beat them back, not attempting to leave their entrenchments, where they had a tremendous advantage.

French Guns Get Into Action

Just before dawn Thursday morning the final German charge swept forward, the last desperate sortie to pierce that line that would not give. The fighting during the day and the nine charges that had already met with defeat had not taken the heart out of the Germans. They came on in wild fury, thousands of men, rushing forward through the rain against an enemy that could not be seen.

The onslaught was so vicious that here and there the French lines seemed to give slightly, but by this time the rapid-fire and three-inch guns had secured an exact range and they mowed down the foe mercilessly.

It was no disgrace to the Germans that they could not withstand that wilting fire, for the artillery of the French showed in the battle of the Marne that it was more deadly than anything hitherto known in the annals of military history. In the darkness and the confusion, it was the German lines that finally broke and retreated, falling back along roads and through fields, leaving behind a terrible toll of dead and wounded. Rheims, one of the most important fortified places in France, had been saved.

Then, as the dawn began to break, the allies broke out from their shelters in the eleventh charge of that terrible night. They could not pierce the German lines, but here and there they drove back opposition. The flashes now revealed bayonets, especially along the British lines, where that method of fighting, not relished by the Germans, has been employed effectively in nearly every encounter.

Here and there German forces fell back, dismayed by the reckless, almost suicidal, courage of the allies. Wherever a wedge was driven into the invaders' lines, a slight falling back was made necessary for the troops at either side. The sight, dimly visible in the gray of the dawn, gave renewed vigor to the assailants and smash after smash, in the hope of driving straight through the defenses, was delivered with terrific violence.

German Lines Do Not Break

Yet, although the German lines clearly bent, they would not break. At daylight, when the firing at last ceased, it was estimated that about seven miles of French territory had been won back from the invaders.

News of this sanginuary conflict did not reach London until yesterday, and not until last night were enough details furnished to make it possible to piece out a fairly complete story. Even now, nothing is reported of the countless little incidents in that night of horror that must have made the engagement memorable above all other fighting of the war.

Yesterday the fighting was furious upon the wings, but last night a temporary lull ensued. Both the allies and the Germans are clearly exhausted by the struggle of the last five days.

The chances seem to favor a gradual falling back of the invaders within twenty-four hours, for a tendency to recede is plainly evident. It is not a retreat but a palpable falling back at several widely separated places.

SWITZERLAND NEAR RUIN

Suffers Almost as Much as If Actually Engaged In War

Orders were issued at Berne retiring the Swiss army, which has been kept mobilized since the outbreak of hostilities in order to prevent violation of Switzerland's neutrality.

The total daily expense to the nation for the period of mobilization is estimated at $300,000. To this amount must be added the cost to the national industries, most of which have been ruined. The export trade is entirely at a standstill.

The great hotels, usually filled with tourists, have been forced to close their doors. The situation from the economic standpoint is admittedly desperate, and Switzerland is suffering almost as much as if she actually had engaged in the war.

TOADSTOOLS POISON FAMILY

For a second time within a few days, Italians have been poisoned by eating toadstools. The people were inmates of an Italian boarding house at 53 Willard street. The sufferers were Domenico Bomoni, the boarding housekeeper and his wife; his mother, Mrs. Monica Bomoni, and two boarders, Gaetano Comoletti and Domenico Frasca.

Having a desire to taste mushrooms parties in the house went out during the afternoon to gather some. By mistake toadstools were secured and were later cooked for supper by Mrs. Bomoni. All partook of them and soon after were taken ill. Physicians who were summoned worked over the victims until nearly midnight when they were pronounced out of danger.

FIRE PROBABLY INCENDIARY

The alarm from Box 138 at 12.10 this morning was for a fire in a stable at 102 Intervale street occupied by Israel Sternberg and Bernard Francis.

Norman McGee a resident of Intervale street rang in the alarm and later rescued two horses from the burning building.

When the department arrived in response to the alarm they found that the building had been practically burned out, and but little more than the frame remained.

Officers Malone and Corbitt, who responded to the alarm, claim to have detected a strong odor of kerosene at the back of the stable and reported the facts to Chief Billings, the deputy fire marshal for Quincy, who will make an investigation today. The loss is estimated at $800.

NO FAVORS FOR COUNCILMEN

General Increase on Their Property Reported

One Councilman, who got his tax bill on Friday, and found that the Assessors had jacked up the valuation of his house $800, said it may be all right on the face to say that Quincy has a tax rate of $22.20, but it might as well be $30 on a lower valuation. Another Councilman said that his house had gone up $300, and still another $500, and so it was all along the line.

It has been suggested that the Assessors mount some rapid fire guns in those two windows recently cut from the corridor to their office as they will be needed to keep off the people who will besiege their office next week.

The amount allowed for abatements is small.

MISSING GIRL IS LOCATED

The family of Annie Otis, the little Braintree girl who has been missing since last Wednesday noon received a letter this noon from her aunt, Mrs. Martha Martin of Lincoln stating that the girl was at her home.

The little girl left school last Wednesday noon from school and had not been heard from since. The Braintree police have dragged ponds, and the police in surrounding towns have been searching high and low for the girl. The letter did not state how she found her way to Lincoln.

QUINCY TEAM WINS.

The All Stars of the Wardwell alleys beat a representation from the Casino alleys of Boston in this city Friday evening. The match was for pinfall, the score being 1432 to 1403.

Harry Paine, formerly of this city, got the high single 134 and best total, 316. Failure to buy up a spare in the ninth box cost him the alley record.

Ross was high man on the local team. He made 120 in his second string, passing Smith's 112. The most consistent performer of the evening was Bergfors whose total of 303 followed three pretty strings.

The match was witnessed by a large gallery which included many Quincy friends of Mr. Paine. Owing to the lateness of the hour his quartette of bowlers did not harmonize.

MacPherson, anchor man on the visitors had his usual run of hard luck which follows his appearance here. "Mac" can flirt with a high average in the fastest of the metropolitan leagues but when he bowls here instead of getting the hits he cuts out the pins and is obliged to work for every drop.

A return match will be rolled within a few weeks, unless the Quincy team is admitted to the Boston league when the Casino team will be their frequent opponent. The summary:

Quincy	483	505	444	1432
Casino	490	445	468	1403

SCHOLARSHIP.

J. Weston Pratt, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Winthrop Pratt, has been awarded, by the faculty of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, the scholarship of the Massachusetts State Pharmaceutical Association. The scholarship is the highest that can be obtained in this state. Mr. Pratt is a member of the class of 1915 and will resume his studies Monday. He was graduated from High school in 1911 and was one of the most popular boys of his class.

MUSIC SCHOOL A SUCCESS.

Claude Hackelton, director of the new Quincy Pianoforte School announces that the first week was a great success proving that such a school was needed in Quincy. It has been his ambition for years to open a school of music as the advantages are manifold. Mr. Hackelton is better known in Boston as a pianist and teacher, having conducted a private studio there for the past decade, but hopes to give Quincy people a music school where the advantages and instruction will be as good as can be obtained in Boston.

DAILY LEDGER SPORTS

All of Local Interest

The football team of Quincy High school are playing their first game at Wellesley today, and should give a good account of themselves. The squad which left Quincy at noon consisted of 21 men, the pick of the 45 candidates who reported for practice.

One side of the line will be made up of veterans, the other will consist of new material to get its baptism of fire as well as to demonstrate its worth. The line will weigh 160 to 192 pounds, the average being about 170. The backfield shows unusual promise.

Coaches Frank L. Mansur and H. W. French, members of the faculty, together with rooters and other teachers accompanied the team.

The formidable soccer team of the Fore River shipyard will play at Brockton today in the opening game of the season in that city. The fine performance of the local boys since their reorganization is taken by many to mean that the glories of the past are to be again gathered.

George Finlay of this city has been elected captain of the football team of Williston academy which plays its opening game today. Finlay was graduated from Quincy High school in 1912, and has made a fine record in football, the only sport he has participated in the past few years. He is the son of A. W. Finlay the well known yachtsman.

Peter Chapman of Wollaston has also returned to the academy, and it out for the football team. His stronghold however is base ball, his season's performance in the box speaking for itself.

Williston Acedamy the past ten years has had many Quincy boys as students, all of whom have contributed to its athletic success, among them being "Duke" Donovan, "Bert" Barry, and "Billie" Weston, best known here as basket ball players.

BATTLE ALONG THE SAN RIVER

Russians Are Now Facing Combined Austrian Armies

GERMANS DIRECT THE LATTER

Vienna Thinks Russian Invasion Will Be Checked, Having to Contend Against German Artillery—Fighting Continues With Unabated Ferocity—Movement at Vienna For Peace

London, Sept. 19.—It was officially announced at Vienna that German high officials have joined Grand Duke Francis Frederick, in command of the combined Austrian armies, and are directing a great battle now in progress west of Lemberg all along the lines of the San river.

The Russian attempt to carry the fortified lines extending from Przemysl to Jaroslav by storm failed. The Austrian lines held fast and the Russians were thrown back with enormous losses. The fighting is now general all along the line. The Austrian armies have combined and are heavily re-enforced. They are following out lines of defense determined upon by the German general staff, which has now accepted the responsibility of directing the campaign in Galicia.

The Russians are in great strength, but they are facing the first real defense by the Austrians. Heretofore the Austrians have been fighting in the open country, where the superiority of the Russian artillery has placed them at a material disadvantage.

Not only are the Austrian armies united, but they have been re-enforced by first line German artillery and it is believed they will now be able to check the Russian invasion. Meanwhile it will be the object of the Austrians to harass the Russians and prevent them concentrating their enormous armies until the combined Austro-German line is strong enough to withstand the shock of a general assault.

Advices from East Prussia show that General von Hindenberg is making a supreme effort to annihilate the Russian armies of General Rennenkampf. His troops have succeeded in driving a good part of the Russian force into marshy lands.

It is plain that it is the intention of the Germans to invade Russian Poland and the activity in East Prussia now is for the purpose of so crushing Rennenkampf's armies that there will be no danger of a Russian attack on the German flank when the Germans move against Warsaw.

The Russians are admitted to have occupied part of the Przemysl defenses to the south of the town, but so far thy have been unable to make any impression on the main defenses.

The Austrian right wing, now commanded by General Boroevio, centres at Drohobycz and holds the railway line from there to Cracow, thus insuring an excellent line of retreat should it be too hard harassed by the Russian armies reported advancing from Stryj. The left, commanded by General Dankl, who now has the assistance of Archduke Francis Frederick, maintains a position extending from the Vistula river, near the Russian frontier, to the extreme left of General von Auffenberg's central army at Jaroslav.

The fighting continues everywhere with unabated ferocity, but the Austrian war office denies that at any point have the Austrian forces been routed.

General conscription under the decree signed by the Emperor of Austria is now in progress. The new recruits will be rushed to the front just as soon as they can be equipped. There is a general movement at Vienna toward peace, the newspapers containing veiled suggestions, but up to the present there has been no official declaration of any kind. The economic conditions continue to grow worse.

Official reports from Petrograd say that the Fourteenth and Sixth Austrian army corps, which have been doing the bulk of the fighting protecting the Austrian retreat, were badly cut up in Thursday's fighting. General Rouzsky's reports show that he took 5000 additional prisoners, fifty-three guns and large quantities of arms and ammunition.

SEMLIN EVACUATED

Servian-Montenegrin Attack Will Be Centred Upon Bosnia

In pursuance with the general plan to concentrate the Servian attack on Bosnia and not to move into Slavonia, the entire Servian army has been withdrawn from Semlin. The Austrians have reoccupied the town, but have made no effort to cross into Servia.

The advance of the combined Servian-Montenegrin armies on Serajevo is reported as progressing uninterruptedly, the Austrian opposition crumpling in front of the determined attacks of the combined armies.

DOLLAR MILK IN EUROPE.

Alice Hultman Eckert Writes from Austria

Mrs. Alice Hultman Eckert writes from Fiume, Austria, that the effect of war is keenly felt by all classes, rich and poor alike, and that although she is desirous of leaving the region where famine must be prevalent (although she does not say so,) she considers it safer to remain than board any ship that would attempt to negotiate a passage out of the mined harbors on the coast.

Daily, writes Mrs. Eckert, over 10,000 heads of cattle are driven past her home on the way to Pola for distribution among the soldiers. In telling of the value of footstuffs in the city she states milk is sold at a dollar a quart, and that corn meal brings 50 cents a pound.

The husband of Mrs. Eckert is superintendent of the Whithead Torpedo Works at Fiume, and previous to accepting that position he held a responsible position with the Electric Boat Co., at the Fore River shipyard in Quincy.

William E. Hingston of Wollaston received word through the State department at Washington on Friday, that Miss Julia B. Hill, a sister of Mrs. Hingston, for whose safety they have been somewhat in doubt was in Brussels, Belgium and was safe and being cared for.

Miss Hill, who makes her home with her sister, went to Europe in the summer on a tour, with Greece as her objective point. Just about the time that war was declared a letter was received from Miss Hill stating that she was in Belgium. This country had not declared war when her last letter was written although it was at war before the letter was received ine Quincy.

One letter has been received since then stating that she was all right. The letter was brief however, and as it was some weeks ago since it was received her people became anxious about her and instigated an inquiry through the State department.

Among those who have arrived home from Europe during the past few days are Mrs. John Montgomery of Granite street and party who included her daughters Mrs. A. M. Mitchell, Mrs. William A. Fromm and her niece Miss Catherine J. Argo. They were in England when war was declared and left for home as soon as possible, arriving on the Saxonia, in New York, this week. They saw considerable of the war spirit that was shown in England when war was declared, and also saw many of the troops leaving for the front. They are however very glad to get back to America and Quincy once more.

NO LEGAL SEPARATION.

Editor Daily Ledger:

My wife did not secure a legal separation from me as advertised in your paper, and there is no divorce case. The judge of the Probate court, after hearing the witnesses, gave us a week in which to come together, and he said if we didn't do so he would make an order for the support of the two children. Later he ordered me to pay $4 a week, which is fair enough and I did not appeal. I am paying $4 every Saturday. That is the whole story.

LIVE UP TO REPUTATION

We have just begun to govern ourselves accordingly. Classes for non-English speaking people are being conducted and with encouraging results. The scope of the work should be enlarged. Bewteen the needs of the foreigners and those of the childrn QUINCY has a large educational problem constantly before her.

No other institution contributes so largely to the well being of a community as does the school. To maintain an adequate and creditable system of public schools should be the first concern of the municipality and, indeed, so it seems to be. Unless the school accommodations and facilities are ample and efficient, we shall invite new-comers of the desirable kind in vain. The state of education in any city, as in any country, is a pretty accurate indication of its general tone It is one of the first things that an intending settler inquires about, whether he is looking for a factory location or a flat to live in.

Therefore, as one way the "boosting" QUINCY, we must continue to expend (efficiently and economically, of course) a large portion of our revenue on the erection of school buildings and the maintenance of schools. If QUINCY would attract people from outside, she must live up to her reputation in regard to schools. The cost is considerable, but the investment is safe and the dividends are assured.

☞ Apropos of the increase in cost of many articles especially those of foreign origin, we have received direct information from Sir Joseph Beecham, proprietor of Beecham's Pills, that he has not increased his price to the trade and will not do so, and that there is no reason why any increase should be demanded by anyone.

CAMPBELL FOR MAYOR

Wollaston Men Prevail Upon Him to be Candidate

There was a representative gathering of gentlemen interested in the Quincy Mayoralty contest at Wollaston last evening. All were favorable to Chester I. Campbell of that ward as the most desirable candidate, but it took some time to convince Mr. Campbell that he should enter the fight. Personally he is not seeking the office ,but he finally consented to allow the use of his name if his nomination papers were largely singned.

CHESTER I. CAMPBELL.

The fact that Mr. Campbell has been interested in big enterprises, which have been successful through his efforts, make him just the man who is wanted, his friends say. Now that they have secured his consent to be a candidate, they propose to organize a big committee with ten or more from each ward, and will make an active campaign. Most of his supporters were prominent in the campaign which elected Mayor Miller a year ago.

Rev. R. E. Armstrong, rector of Christ church, and Mrs. Armstrong, were tendered an informal reception last evening by the Reapers circle, King's Daughters, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Wilson, 43 Saville street.

The evening proved a delightful one to all and many regrets were expressed at their leaving Quincy. During the evening there was choral singing, and light refreshments were served.

One of the pleasant events was the presentation to Rev. Mr. Armstrong, by the circle of a gold piece. Mrs. Armstrong was presented a bouquet of roses. MISS CALLAHAN PASSES AWAY

Miss Catherine Callahan, one of the most popular young ladies of this city, died at her home on Bigelow street this morning after a long illness.

Miss Callahan was the daughter of Mrs. Virginia and the late Timothy Callahan. She was a graduate of the Washington school and Quincy High school, completing her course at the latter in 1908. For many years she was employed as a bookkeeper at the store of Henry L. Kincaide & Co.

Miss Callahan was in her 24th year and a few years ago developed a sickness which gradually brought about her death. The past four summers she spent in Maryland but owing to her poor condition she remained in Quincy this summer.

Her death while not unexpected was a surprise to her many friends who knew her as one of the most charming members of the younger set in Quincy.

She leaves her mother, one sister, Helen Vaughan Callahan, and three brothers, William of Springfield, Claude and Robert of this city.

QUINCY MADE BEST SHOWING

In its review of the earnings of the Massachusetts Gas Companies a Boston paper says:

"The Quincy company made the best showing among the gas subsidiaries in the past year, being the only company to maintain its dividend rate, the Boston Company reducing from 9 per cent to 8 per cent; Newton from 11 per cent to 9 per cent, and East Boston cutting from 12 per cent to 11 per cent."

LARCENY OF COAL.

That boys will steal fruit is almost too well known to need repeating, but this week two boys branched out in new line and as a result they were rounded up by the police charged with the larceny of coal from the Quincy Coal Co. One boy gave his age as 12 years and the other as 14 years. Being juveniles their cases will come up in the juvenile session next week.

His associates are the best men in the United States.

That they appreciate his ability is shown by his elections as Vice-President of the Atlantic Deeper Water Ways association, and as director for the North Atlantic seaboard of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

As a producer of business for the district he is a wonder, his ten years experience in Rivers and Harbors work at Washington make him the strong man to represent the district.

Why not nominate the man of proven ability for this kind of work and not an unknown and untried proposition.

BIRTHDAY OF G. A. R. MAN.

Henry K. Ellis Sr., of 30 Apthorp street, celebrated his 83d birthday on Tuesday. He is as active, and full of life as many of his friends at 38. His friends gave him a little surprise and numerous presents, and all spent a pleasant evening wishing him many more happy birthdays. The Relief Corps of Middleboro sent him a nice basket of fruit, as he is an old comrade and member of Post 8, G. A. R., of Middleboro.

CONGRESSMAN CRANE OF QUINCY--THAT SOUNDS GOOD

QUINCY SHOULD HAVE ILLUMINATED SIGNS

So Says Delcevare King, and He Also Has a Suggestion for the Board of Trade

Citizens in General Should Also Co-operate

Delcevare King is one of Quincy's live wires and today he joins the long list of Quincy Boosters. He writes as follows.

Editor Daily Ledger:

Allow me through your columns to congratulate H. F. McIntire and the others who took the leading part in putting that strong and telling advertisement of QUINCY in all the Boston papers. It was an admirable thing to do.

I want also to congratulate the QUINCY Daily Ledger on the way it at once took up the idea and has pushed it forward.

Now these two definite lines of publicity work should be continued,—

1. Letting people outside of QUINCY know all about QUINCY and its advantages.

2. Getting QUINCY people together to work for progress—business progress, civic progress.

With reference to the first of these, to my mind the most effective next step would be to have strong and big signs—signs which should if possible be lighted at night—at each of our railroad stations.

Each of these signs might well be headed "QUINCY has five stations; this is ——" and then there should be some short, crisp statements as to QUINCY, past, present and future.

The majority of people who come into a city come by a railroad station; thousands who do not enter the city, stop at a station long enough to read a sign; and I believe telling signs at all stations in a city are basic things in a publicity campaign. I well remember the big chair which is at the Gardner station, telling of the principal industry there.

General Joffre In Field With His Aids and Map Showing Stages of Retreat of Germans.

The accompanying illustration shows General Joffre, commander in chief of the French army (at right), talking with his aids in the field. They are discussing the war moves against the Germans. The illustration also shows a specially drawn map indicating the position of the German army from the time the retreat from Paris began until approximately the present. The Germans were practically at the gates of Paris when suddenly the allies changed their tactics and hurled their full strength upon the kaiser's men. The long German retreat then started.

STONE NOT CANDIDATE

Contest Will Be Between Johnson and Campbell

Former Mayor Eugene R. Stone in an authorized statement issued on Sunday states he will not be a candidate for Mayor this fall. The headquarters he had rented in anticipation of his being in th field will be turned over to the Republican City Committee.

Considerable pressure has been brought to bear on the former executive to be a candidate, mostly among those who were not re-appointed to office under Mayor Miller. After a weeks consideration the decision was reached.

Charles H. Johnson and Chester I. Campbell of Wollaston may be the only candidates in the Republican primaries.

FIREMAN AT HOSPITAL.

James P. Dillon, of the Atlantic combination went to the City Hospital this morning where he underwent an operation for gall stones. Fireman Dillon has been complaining for some time, and recently he has been getting worse. On consulting a physician a surgical operation was advised. The men of the department hope for his speedy recovery.

AUTO WRECKED WOMAN KILLED

Edward Magann of Brighton, formerly of this city, who was operating the auto which was smashed in a collision with a stone wall near the Villa Napoli at Nantasket on Sunday, following which Mrs. Jennie Snyder of 9 Goldsmith place, Roxbury, died from a fractured skull was arraigned in the Abington District court this morning on a charge of operating a machine under the influence of liquor. His case was continued to Oct. 2, bail being set at $3500.

The condition of Michael Feeney who is at the Hull hospital with a fractured skull is critical and little hope is held out for his recovery.

Both were members of a party of seven which hired Maganns machine to go from Roxbury to a camp at Weir river, Hingham. They were returning from breakfast at Nantasket, running at speed estimated at 55 miles an hour when the machine left the roadbed and struck the stone wall, dislodging some of the stones. Magann, Jerry Sullivan of Cambridge, Edward Duffy and Joseph Hanrahan of Roxbury, although thrown out escaped injury.

Another woman, whose name is Lombard, is said to have been in the machine and she was painfully injured She was treated at a neighbor's cottage. The machine was wrecked beyond repair.

REINSTATED AT ALMSHOUSE

Warden and Mrs. Vaughn Go Back Oct. 1.

What is probably one of the final chapters in the celebrated Vaughn case, was written by Acting Mayor Crane this morning, in a letter sent to William J. Vaughn, directing him to resume his position as warden of the almshouse Oct. 1. The letter which was brief and without comment was as follows:

Quincy, Sept. 21, 1914.

Mr. William J. Vaughn, Wollaston:

Dear Sir:—You are hereby directed to resume your position of Warden of the Almshouse on October 1, 1914. Kindly acknowledge receipt of this communication.

Yours truly,
(signed) EMERY L. CRANE,
Acting Mayor.

When asked if he had anything to say in regard to the case the Acting Mayor said no, that the letter was all the explanation necessary.

PROSPECTS ARE GOOD FOR F. F. CRANE

Unanimous Vote of Quincy Will Nominate Him in the Fourteenth Congressional District

May Possibly Defeat Howard in His Own City

Frank F. Crane, Quincy's candidate for Congressman, was at Stoughton on Saturday night, the guest of the Business Men's club of that town. During his visit in Stoughton he was taken in hand by John J. Rogers, a fellow real estate man, who introduced him to many prominent citizens of the town.

Mr. Crane when seen this morning said that the reports which he had been receiving were more than encouraging. From Brockton came the word that he would split even with Harry Howard, if he did not beat him.

From Hyde Park came the word that the Republican committee of that ward had taken a hand in the campaign and had forwarded by mail to every voter, cards setting forth Mr. Crane's candidacy, and reasons why the Republicans should give him their unanimous support at the polls on Tuesday. Let Quincy do its part in rolling up a big vote for its home candidate.

Congressman Crane looks good, and would be an honor to Quincy and the fourteenth district.

The Daily Ledger is enthused because of the general response which came to the suggestion on Saturday—"Let us have a Quincy Congressman. Make it unanimous for Frank Fessenden Crane."

The American troops merely cleaned up Vera Cruz's disease germs before leaving. Over in Europe they do a more thorough job, burning the whole city.

When a lot of closed cars go through a town it is much more interesting to believe that they contain East Indian troops bound for the war, than that they are merely loaded with hogs for the packers.

It is said "The Daily Ledger has given Quincy a big boost." Yes, and we intend to keep up the good work. Everybody boost.

Don't expect to see much evidence of rusticity at the county fairs. Uncle Reuben has learned that he can sell just as many goods even if he does wear a high collar and a French cuff shirt.

The Maine election seems to be a blow to some one, but each party can show good reasons why the returns are a stunning rebuke to the vicious principles of their unscrupulous opponents.

Business men who expect to have to pay a dollar war tax on any particular article are now figuring out how they can make the consumer pay two dollars more for it.

BETTER TASTE.

A lady who had occasion to look over a lot of samples of wall-paper a few days ago, remarked afterward that never had she seen so much tasteful material for sale. A few years ago, it seemed as if 95 per cent of all the samples were made up of great coarse and staring figures. This year, she thought the patterns are more harmonious. The great majority of all that she saw could be used by tasteful persons. They were largely made up of closely woven figures, in which no one color stood out in ugly prominence, but all blended together.

It looks as if the manufacturers of wall-paper and other house furnishings were at last employing better designers, and striving after artistic effects.

Good taste does not cost a cent more. Often the wealthiest people have the ugliest houses. A great many persons with narrow incomes have keen eyes for colors and forms that fit and blend. Their homes are more beautiful than more spacious and costly mansions.

OPENED WITH RUSH.

A Memorial hall, Melrose Sunday afternoon, Dr. H. H. Russell the founder of the Anti-Saloon league of America, opened the temperance campaign to be waged throughout Massachusetts this week.

The hall was filled, although a fire directly across the street from the meeting place and a band concert were attractions which were unexpected in the program as mapped out by the Anti-Saloon League officials who are promoting the demonstrations.

Nearly a thousand people, however listened to the opening address of Dr. Russell. In it he outlined the fight which the Anti-Saloon League is going to make for National Prohibition.

At Monson, Dr. A. C. Bane, financial secretary of the National League, made an address at the Congregational church. In the evening the Opera House at Palmer was crowded with an enthusiastic gathering. The up-state campaign started with a tilt which was gratifying to the leaders.

The Rev. Harold Marshall opened the meeting at Melrose in the afternoon. After a short address he introduced Dr. Russell.

In his address Dr. Russell stated that 50 years ago the churches were divided by sectarian antagonisms while the north and south were embittered by warfare. He declared that today all these barriers against the battle with the liquor traffic had been swept aside, and that the South was leading in the fight for the abolition of slavery. He also stated that it was the firm belief of the temperance advocates that the prohibition of the liquor business was only a matter of a short time, in view of the tremendous organization which was arrayed against it.

The evening meeting was held at Melrose Highlands at the Green Street Baptist church.

TICKETS FOR THE CAUCUSES

Most of The Contests Are Among Republicans

Today candidates for nomination on the party tickets are clearing the deck for action for the primaries on Tuesday. In Quincy the polls open at 12 o'clock and close at 9 o'clock.

REPUBLICAN CONTESTS.

Samuel W. McCall is the unopposed candidate as nominee for governor, but one of the hottest triangular fights ever waged in the political history of the party is scheduled for the lieutenant governors nomination. Three men, all able campaigners and favorites in the ranks aspire to the nomination. They are Grafton D. Cushing of Boston, speaker of the House of Representatives; August H. Goetting of Springfield, councillor of the eighth district, and former state treasurer Elmer A. Stevens of Somerville.

Albert P. Langtry, former secretary of state, seeks the nomination as secretary, against Frank L. Brier and William S. Kinney of Boston.

Frederick E. Pierce of Greenfield and Charles L. Burrill of Boston are the candidates for State treasurer.

For auditor there are two candidates, Alonzo B. Cook of Boston and Joseph Monette of Lawrence.

There are five on the attorney general slate, Henry C. Atwill of Lynn, John A. Curtin of Brookline, James M. Hallowell of Newton, John J. Higgins of Somerville and James A. Stiles of Gardner. All except Curtin are district attorneys, while he is a member of the House of Representatives.

The congressional fight in the 14th district will be even hotter than the fight for the second place on the state ticket, Frank Fessenden Crane of this city being the unanimous choice of the Quincy Republicans. Opposed to him are Robert L. Raymond of Milton, an attorney, and Harry C. Howard of Brockton, a large contractor.

Guy Adams Ham, who lost to Charles W. Guy in the councillor fight last year makes his indentity bomb proof this year by using his middle name. He is opposed for the nomination by William A. Bellamy of Taunton, senator of the first Bristol district.

Senator Louis F. R. Langelier, of Quincy has no opposition and in the face of the hard cold facts parading the district there is no doubt as to his re-election, many Progressives flocking to his standard.

And then again, the contest grows warmer for in the Fifth Representative district, Councilman Charles A. Ericson and Otto Gelotte are being worried by Albert L. Whitman of Quincy Point, the "Safety First" candidate.

In the sixth representative district, Edward J. Sandberg is the candidate for renomination.

John F. Merrill of Quincy is the unopposed candidate for re-election as county commissioner, and as yet the Democrats have found no man strong enough to give him a fight.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The ballot of the Democrats is the greatest endorsement ever given office holders of that party, the absence of contests pointing to solid ranks.

Gov. Walsh, Lieut. Gov. Edward P. Barry, Secretary Frank J. Donahue, Treasurer Frederick W. Mansfield, Auditor Frank H. Pope, Attorney-General Thomas J. Boynton are all before the voters for re-election.

Richard Olney, 2nd of Dedham is the sole congressional candidate. He met defeat two years ago at the hands of Edward Gilmore of Brockton who was elected. His success this year depends entirely on the choice of the Republicans.

Five are entered in the fight for the nomination as councillor. Charles W. Guy of this city, a self designated farmer but one of the most progressive merchants in the state up to his retirement a few years ago, and the bearer of the endorsement of Gov. Walsh, heads the list. A quartette of vote getters follow him, Thomas J. Halpin, the runner; William Louis Murray of Boston, John P. Rattigan of Hyde Park and George W. Reed of Boston. What will happen is a mystery, to be solved when the votes are counted.

Charles W. Proctor, of Randolph, a member of the House of Representatives is out for the senate. Quincy friends of Senator Langelier feel somewhat concerned over his strength. Bearing in mind that voters confused Guy Ham and Charles W. Guy last year they will take notice of the fact that the senatorial candidates both wear their hair pompadour and act accordingly.

Councilman Daniel Corcoran is the candidate for representative in sixth district. The younger men will rally to his standard and it is up to himself to gain the friendship of the older men. He is now waging his campaign against Representative Sandberg. As in other cases his success depends on the showing made by the Progressive party nominee.

PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

Whether or not the Progressives will figure as a live party this year is an open question, but it is not denied that their showing lessens the Republican strength and opens wider the chances of Democratic victory.

Joseph Walker of Brookline, who is in Switzerland is the choice for head of the ticket. James P. Magenis of Boston is unopposed for the nomination as lieutenant governor, Russell A. Wood of Cambridge for secretary, Daniel J. Murphy of Lawrence for treasurer, Frederick P. Glazier of Hudson for auditor, John Hildreth of Holyoke for attorney general and Edwin C. Reed of Atlantic for congress. The latter is a Washington resident and has been a voter of this city a short time. He has not made himself known to the district as yet, probably awaiting the actual campaigning before he opens his artillery.

Frederick H. Bishop of Wollaston and Guy Adams Ham oppose each other for the councilor nomination. Ham is the regular candidate of the Republicans and he seeks the Progressive party endorsement.

There are no candidates for senator county commissioner, state or ward committees or delegates to the State convention.

The only candidate for representative is Herbert O. Cassidy of Wollaston.

Considerable planning is being done in the party to throw the endorsement to Michael T. Sullivan, the Democratic representative, but astute Republican leaders declare it will not happen At any rate it offers them an opportunity to jump into the inner Progressive workings.

There are no contests for ward committee, state convention and committee delegates in the Democratic party, and the same holds true in the Republican party. The Progressive party have few names on their ticket.

FUNERAL OF MISS CALLAHAN.

Sorrowing relatives and friends attended the funeral of Miss Catherine Callahan, one of the most popular young ladies of the city, held from the home of her mother, Mrs. Virginia Callahan at 53 Bigelow street this morning.

The high mass of requiem at St John's church was celebrated by Rev Fr. Florence McCarthy. The regular choir rendered Schmidt's mass under the direction of John Mahon, organist and the soloists were Miss Eva Rice and Mrs. Mary Burns King.

The profusion of floral remembrances arranged in tiers about the casket at the home and on the grave in St. Mary's cemetery in Randolph were an eloquent tribute of love and affection to the young lady whose death followed a prolonged illness.

The bearers were James Callahan, James Sullivan, George Costello, William Histon, Ted Keohane and Henry Shea.

Talking Shop.

Enthusiastic interest in one's occupation is always an advantage, but, on the other hand, it is not well for a woman in business to talk of her work at all times and places. Naturally, the thing that we do constantly is our most absorbing interest, but we must remember that other people have other things to talk about.

REVENUE TAX WILL HIT MANY

The emergency revenue bill which will probably be passed by Congress will hit some local industries. Gasoline which is used in large quantities by automobile owners will be taxed two cents a gallon. Liquors of all kinds and tobacco also come in for a tax. Bankers will be taxed $2 per $1,000 capital, while brokers will pay $50 each.

Proprietors of theatres, museums concert halls in cities of 15,000 population or over, which means Quincy, are to pay $100 each, bowling alley and billiard room proprietors will also pay a tax of $5 for each alley and each table.

There are many moving picture shows and public halls in Quincy which will be hit hard by this provision, and it may put some of them out of business. This is also true of billiard and pool rooms. At present there are many small stores whose proprietors add to their revenue by a billiard or pool table located in their store. A tax of $5 in addition to the license fee charged by the city will make quite a burden and will doubtless close up some of them.

Bonds and notes are also to be taxed 5 cents for each hundred dollars involved and freight and express receipts one cent each. Telephone messages out of the State are to pay a tax of one cent on all toll messages of over 15 cents or more, and telegrams on cent.

Life insurance policies carry a tax of eight cents for each 100 and fire insurance policies a tax of one half cent on each dollar. Parlor car seats are to be taxed two cents each and passage tickets from one port in the United States to a foreign port from $1 to $5 according to the value of the ticket.

These are but a few of the things that will be hit by the tax, in which Quincy people are interested, and it might be said that every resident is hit in some way by the tax.

BRAINTREE SCHOOLS.

The elementary and grammar grades of the public school will have two sessions each day commencing this morning, hours 9 to 12 and 1.30 to 3.30. Since the opening of schools Sept. 8, only one session was held each day that the teachers might give more time to some pupils who needed special help. This plan has been a decided success.

At a meeting of the school committee on Monday, Sept. 14, it was voted to give William Orr a one year leave of absence. Mr. Orr has been the popular janitor at the Jonas Perkins school for fifteen or more years and it is with regret that he is taking an enforced vacation on account of illness. The committee have not yet decided who will substitute for Mr. Orr All applicants are requested to procure an application blank from Supt. R. L. Wiggin and file it with Mr. Hayes, chairman of the school committee.

The next meeting of the committee will be on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 13, for Monday the regular day will be a holiday.

The invitation of the Pure Food Exhibition committee of the Mechanics Fair Building, Boston, inviting the school committee, teachers and pupils to attend the fair was accepted. The superintendent was instructed to set aside a day in October after the fourth.

Miss Florence Robinson of 31 Adams street, a very successful teacher in drawing the past five years has accepted a position in Lynn.

PRIZE GARDEN.

One of the beauty spots of the city is the garden of the Parsons children, Madeline, Theodore and Thomas, on School street, and all three are receiving many fine compliments on their success at the recent public exhibition of the products of Children's Gardens held in City Hall. The three children received nine awards, one special, two firsts, three seconds and four thirds.

Both flowers and vegetables are grown in the small plot of land under cultivation. It is entirely an experiment and its success prompts them to promse renewed efforts next year. People from all parts of the city have visited the grounds, many of them children who were attracted by the fine specimens placed on exhibition.

The high cost of living has been solved according to Theodore, the oldest boy, who expects a bumper crop of vegetables next year.

SLIGHT FIRES.

The alarm from Box 62 at 8.50 Saturday night called the department to a lively blaze in the upper part of a house at 52 Hancock street, occupied by Mrs. Katherine Shea. The fire started, in a closet off the sleeping room, and the flames had worked into the chamber and had burned part of the mattress on the bed when the department arrived. On the bed was a leather bag of Mrs. Shea's in which was $26 in money. One end of the bag had been burned when it was rescued by the firemen. The loss on the building will not exceed $50.

The alarm from Box 57 at 9.08 Sunday night was a false alarm. The Wollaston apparatus arrived at the box in unusual good time and finding the alarm false sounded the recall.

In addition to the false alarm from Box 57 Sunday night, the apparatus responded on two still alarms. The Atlantic chemical went out to a dump fire on Warwick street at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

At 9.45 in the evening the Central station combination responded on a still alarm for a slight fire in the house at 23 Albertina street occupied by John Williams and his wife Annie. Both Williams and his wife were found in an intoxicated condition, the woman lying on the mattress which was on fire. They were taken out of the house and the police patrol called. In the meantime the fire was extinguished by hand chemicals. There were two young children of Williams in the house which the neighbors said had not been fed since morning and they were in a pitiful condition. They were taken to the almshouse for the night.

This morning Chief Billings appeared against Williams and his wife when they were arraigned in court for drunkenness and they were sentenced to one month in the house of correction.

ELM AVENUE PROTEST.

Sunday afternoon, the residents of Elm and West Elm avenues met at the home of John Hamilton to protest against the tearing up of the two avenues by the Teiephone Company, for the purpose of laying wires. Elm avenue has been in a continuous state of reconstruction for nearly a year, and at last is in excellent condition. The plan to tear up the street for this purpose, resulted in a storm of indignant outburst from the residents of that section. As a result of the meeting, it was decided that the men should attend the hearing in City Hall tonight to enter a formal protest.

ILLUMINATED SIGNS

As to the second idea getting QUINCY people together to work for progress, I believe our Board of Trade and citizens in general might well undertake a campaign to boom the circulation of our local papers, providing these papers would make a special price for new subscripttions. It means much to a community to have its local papers go regularly into its homes so people may know what their fellow-citizens are doing, and to have a means of communication by which they can reach one another. There should be many more of our families as regular subscribers of one or more of our local papers; and I believe that if the Board of Trade and citizens in general co-operate in bringing this about it would be of definite business and civic value to QUINCY.

Yours very truly,
DELCEVARE KING.

SQUANTUM'S NEW CHURCH DEDICATED

New Edifice Was Crowded to the Doors With a Enthusiastic Gathering

Starts With Debt of Only a Few Hundred Dollars

Squantum's first church, known as the First Church of Christ, was formally dedicated to the worship of God on Sunday afternoon, in the presence of a congregation that more than filled the edifice. The seating capacity of the new church is 300 and long before the hour for the service to begin that number had gathered. Additional chairs were brought in, but even then it was necessary for many to stand in the outer aisles.

The new church is a pretty one, built of cement and stucco, and is located on the site of the old Vacation House, in which the residents of Squantum gathered for public meetings and for worship until fire destroyed the building. The public spirited citizens of the peninsular, however, were not dismayed at the burning of their building, and under the leadership of Rev. Thomas W. Davison of the Memorial church at Atlantic, a movement was made to erect a new church. Rev. Mr. Davison had the unanimous support of the residents of Squantum, who not only contributed liberally of their money, but gave their personal labor, so that there arose on the site of the old Vacation House the present edifice. That the first home of worship should not be forgotten, the stairways of the old building were fashioned into a handsome altar, which now occupies a place on the platform.

It was a happy day indeed, Sunday for the people of this section, for they saw the crowning of their efforts, for in the words of Mrs. L. B. Titus' hymn of dedication:

"With the countless hosts behind us and troubled world before,
We have builded Him an altar here
on Squantum's sunny shore.
To His Holy name be praises, and the glory evermore.
God's work is marching on."

The services of dedication were conducted by Rev. Mr. Davison, with special musical selections by the vested choir of the Memorial church of Atlantic, with Mrs. Ethel Frank Brigham and William A. McDevitt as soloists, and Miss Frances Bean as cornetist. Miss Hazel C. Davison was the organist and Mrs. Ethel Jones Bostwick the accompanist.

There was but little in the way of decoration outside of the natural beauties of the church, and these consisted of wild flowers placed about the altar.

The services opened with an organ prelude, and the processional hymn "How firm a foundation" was followed by an invocation by Rev. A. G. Sporrong of the Swedish Congregational church, with response, a cornet solo "The Lost Chord," by Miss Bean.

Samuel Usher of the Home Missionary Society and Henry T. Richardson of the Congregational Church Union then spoke briefly. Mr. Usher said that it was a rare pleasure for him to bring the greetings of the two organizations, the Home Missionary society and the Congregational church union. Both had been interested in the church from the beginning. It was the policy of those two organizations to promote the establishment of regular Sabbath and week day religious services where these are not available. The needs of Squantum were realized and it came to be realized as a community without a Christian church, and he took it that now Squantum was complete as far as a desirable place of worship is concerned.

It is a significant thought, "What of my life; am I accomplishing the most possible in my life, and in the community in which I live?" It makes us sick at heart to think what is going on, at the other side of the world. We are actuated by the figure of millions of men in the field, but this whole thing will not be settled by the number of men. God rules, and eventually that for the best interest of the world will be accomplished. The plans of the Almighty will ultimately triumph. The plans that we are making here are in accordance with His will, and will endure.

You have given of the best that is in you to give your neighbors a place of worship, and you have accomplished great results. I believe that Squantum will grow and that this building will be felt in the life of the entire community. To this end you have labored.

The Home Missionary society represents all of the Congregational churches, and the Congregational Church Union all of the churches in greater Boston. They have been pleased to co-operate with you, and you can show your appreciation by accomplishing the largest possible results for the Kingdom of God. I congratulate you on the speedy accomplishment of this result.

Mr. Richardson said that at the time of the aviation field was being occupied a few years ago, one would have been a bad prophet to have said that such a building as this would have come to pass. You people have come to realize that it would not be possible to have a home here without a church, and the Congregational Church Union interested in Congregational activity saw that here was where homes could not be what they should be without a church.

The Congregational Church Union is composed of 150 churches in Greater Boston. You represent in a business way these churches. So they said here is another part of our common work. The churches of Greater Boston have seen the need here of an outpost of our faith. It must be held, and you are here to hold the outpost. You have certain duties devolving upon you. You are one of 150 churches doing the same kind of work. When you need help, sympathy and co-operation you are coming to us for advice. The idea of the union is to get together men, advice and co-operation. That is the message of our word. You are going to do your part.

Mr. Richardson then paid a tribute to the great work which Rev. Mr. Davison had been doing in this community. You should appreciate what he has done in your behalf. We appreciate it and you should. Do not forget him when you think of the people you want to thank. The Congregationalists of Greater Boston bid you God speed.

The hymn of dedication composed for the occasion, by Mrs. L. B. Titus, was sung to the tune of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," the words being sung by Mrs. Brigham and the chorus by the congregation.

The service of dedication followed, being a responsive service by the pastor and congregation.

The scripture lesson was read by Miss Maud E. Reed, being the 91st Psalm. The prayer of dedication by Rev. John J. Walker, was followed by a solo by Mrs. Brigham, after which Rev. Mr. Davison gave a statement of the financial condition. He said that the Congregational Church Union and Home Missionary Society had contributed $2,500. He spoke of the individual work of the contractors for the building, all of whom had placed their price at the lowest possible figure, which had made it possible for the church to be built. He also said that the architect had given the plans for the sum of $10 which hardly paid for the blue prints, the builder had worked night and day of his own time, as had also the plasterer, plumber and contractor for the electrical fixtures. He spoke of the altar which was made from the stairway of the old Vacation House by Mr. Johnson, and the handsome Bible the gift of Mr. Buswick. He paid a tribute to Councilman Carlson who had given the use of the Vacation House and who had contributed liberally of his money. He had also given a reed organ which would be in place next Sunday. The land cost $2,000 and the church about $2,800 but the debt was only $500.

Rev. Mr. Davison spoke of the people of the Memorial church, who had allowed him to give of their time for this new church and had encouraged and helped him in every way. He wanted to know if there were four or eight men present who would give $25 toward the debt. Two volunteered to contribute $25, a number $10 and quite a few $5. Just how much was volunteered was not announced.

Secretary A. F. Bromley of the Quincy Y. M. C. A. brought the greetings of the city. The association he said represented all of the churches in the city. He was sorry if some felt that they were not a part of Quincy. We want you to keep in mind that Quincy is a part of you, and is interested in your work. If the pastor needs help the Y. M. C. A. stands ready to give it to him.

DEDICATION SERMON.

The dedication sermon was given by Rev. Dr. F. E. Emrich, who took his text, from the book of Psalms. God's work, he said is yet being done in the homes, and there is a coming of a large conception of what is God's work. He spoke of the blessings that came from God. In the dark days of human affairs and national life some nation shall have to make a sacrifice. Some have not learned the great message, God will provide. It may not be my way or thy way. The speaker spoke of the great battles of Bibical times, and said there was a constant warfare of God against the evil of the world. This church stands for a constant fight for goodness and the masses against force and injustice. It stands for law and peace. The din and confusion of the world is not then the thing to be listened to. The Lord is peace. God smites in order that He might heal and not crush. When we dream of the best things to come we have all the hopes and aspirations of man. This church is to stand for the great abiding faith of God.

The services closed with a hymn, "The church's one foundation," with benediction by Dr. Emrich.

A general invitation was extended to those present to inspect the church at the close of the servics an opportunity which many accpted.

Rev. Mr. Davidson gave the announcements for the week, making special mention of the banquet to be given by the ladies on Wednesday evening. He also spoke of the number who had signified their intention of bcoming members of the church.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

There was a very helpful sermon preached by the pastor Rev. Joseph Walther at 10.45 Sunday morning. Subject: "The whole Christian Life in a nutshell." Text taken from 1st chapter 1st Thessalonians a portion of the 9th and 10th verses—Paul blessed God and gave a word of comfort and cheer to the people for having turned from a wicked idolatrous life, to God."

The Christian life can be summed up by first repenting of the old sinful life and turning to God, entering into a life of service; for there is something for every Christian to do, be it ever so small, and watching and waiting for the Lord's coming. Have you turned unto God? Are you serving Him? Are you waiting, looking, expecting him?"

A large number were present at this service, and also the Sunday School when 298 were enrolled. Amos D. Albee, teacher of the Albee class being away, Mrs. George F. Pinkham was invited to take charge. Mrs. Pinkham having had a long life of experience spoke in an interesting manner.

The Junior Endeavor meeting was in charge of Mrs. Joseph Walther, subject; "What to fear and what not to fear."

Y. P. S. C. E. meeting was in charge of Stuart B. Walther, subject: "Share your blessings."

The pastor took for the subject of the evening "What is a true Christian." The chorus choir sang morning and evening.

Wednesday, beginning at 10 A. M., the 66th anniversary of the Boston South Baptist Association will be held in this church. Rev. James A. Francis, D. D., will serve as moderator, and the following persons will take part: Rev. E. Stacy Harrison, Rev. W. F. Wilson, Rev. Charles H. Moss, D. D. Rev. A. A. Rideout, Rev. H. H. Hayes, Rev. Charles J. Burton, Rev. David Lockrow, Rev. J. M. Moor, D. D., Rev. C. C. Tilley and Rev. J. L. Campbell, D. D. The special topic to be discussed in all the sessions is "Evangelism." It is hoped the discussion will result in larger enthusiasm in all churches. A large attendance is desired at as many services as possible.

Thursday evening the regular meeting for praise, prayer and testimony, will be held in the chapel. Subject: "What we should believe about the Holy Spirit." All are invited to come and bring some thought. These meetings are interesting and you cannot afford to miss them.

Sunday evening Sept. 27, a union service in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition will be held in the Wollaston Baptist church. It is expected that Rev. M. J. Swearingen, evangelistic speaker and temperance orator, from Delaware, will be the speaker.

At the evening service the chorus choir sang "There is no name so sweet as Jesus." The solo portion was sweetly rendered by the chorus choir.

PARK AND DOWNS.

Rev. William B. Ayers at the Sunday morning service gave an exceedingly interesting and helpful informal talk to his congregation, taking his remarks from the 19th chapter of the Book of Kings. At the evening service the minister (continuing his War subject of the previous Sunday evening.) spoke on the science of neutrality, and its rights and duties.

He said there s no necessity for people here of mixed blood and social interests to become pugnacious and intrude themselves into a conflict on the other side of the ocean. On the other hand civilization has expressed itself in certain sentiments called International law. To this code there is nobody or power of enforcement save in the force of public opinion.

In Old World countries public opinion is practically broken down or subserviated to the interests of militarism, or so checked by censor and by the necessities of war, that it has little real value, and no adequate means of expressing itself. The one great people who can look upon this thing with sane and balanced vision, unhampered by fear and unmixed with blind and bigoted hate is the American people.

The nations abroad view with grave concern the trend of American thought and they seek by every agency to shape it. Both for the present and the future what America thinks of this war will be the standard of human judgment.

We should be neutral. At the same time we should not break the back of morality in being so. We can without doing violence to any high interests of neutrality, strike a high note for civilization, by placing ourselves on record as being against the violation of the codes of civilization, and being in sentiment at least, against brutality and unreasoning and unnecessary barbarity in warfare.

It seems the thing to do, to allow America to express itself, as it is now doing, in a quiet and peaceful way.

Taking up the history and civilization of the different countries involved. The minister considered the history and diplomacy of Germany for the last half century. This part of the sermon was full of interesting facts and illustrations. He also pointed out German tendencies revealed in her literature and the growth and self-expression of the national life.

Reverting to his text the speaker said that when Jesus spoke these words he doubtless had in mind just such psychology of human nature. It is the nature of very few of us to stand alone, to do our own thinking and to act independently. Most of us are followers and once we fix our trust we follow blindly.

Jesus knew that what a man would become would depend on the nature of the thing to which he gave his allegiance. Any earthly relationship is but partial and full of pitfalls if we do not lift it up and subject it to the will of our Divine Parent who sees farther than earthly parents, or presidents or kings. Therefore, the only safe thing for men to do here is to say: "I will not be blindly guided even in my patriotism by the judgments and the commands of men. I will lift my patriotism and my love of home and ambition and subordinate these things all to the just will of God. Then in their name I can do no evil. I will let God breathe on my relationships his unselfishness and his purification." For we will be blindly and wrongly led unless we compel our leaders to baptize their leadership in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.

Text was Matthew 37. "He that loveth father and mother more than me is not worthy of me."

Arthur F. Capen, tenor of the First Congregational Church, Manchester, N. H., gave some very fine solos.

HALL PLACE M. E.

Rev. P. S. Neldon preached in the interests of National prohibition at the morning service of the Hall Place M. E. church.

Sunday school followed the close of the morning service. Mr. Harold Norris led the Epworth League devotional service. Miss Hilda Francis, 1st vice president presented plans for a Bible Study class for Epworthians.

At the evening service the pastor preached on the sins of omission, taking his text from James 4-17, "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

The work of this church has gone steadily on throughout the summer without interruption with good attendance at all the services.

The Sunday school members are working for a "cross and crown pin" given for 52 Sundays attendance in succession. Rally Day will be observed by the Sunday school in October. Beginning the first Sunday in October the whole school are to adopt the graded lessons.

The Epworth League has conducted their devotional services through July and August and the attendance and interest have been good. Sept. 6 was observed as League rally day at which time the various officers presented plans for their work for the coming year.

Monday evening the regular business meeting of the League will be held in the vestry at 8.45.

Tuesday evening the young ladies of the church between the ages of 15 and 25 are invited to the parsonage at which time Mrs. Coy of the Woman's Home Missionary Society will speak.

Wednesday evening the Ladies' Aid will hold their annual rummage sale at the corner of Copeland street and Furnace avenue. Anyone having goods they would like sent for can notify Mrs. William A. McCormick and a team will call.

Prayer meeting will be held Thursday evening at 7.30.

HIBERNIANS SCALP RED MEN

In the second game for the amateur championship of the season, Div. 22, A. O. H. defeated the Red Men 7 to 6, in a 10-inning game at Ward Three, Saturday afternoon. The contest was probably the last of the season, unless the managers agree to play off the existing tie.

The feature of the game was the showing of Sid Duggan who swung the willow with great effect. He got a single, two doubles and a homer, the latter breaking the tie in the last inning and copping the game.

Johnson of the losers twirled a pretty game, 19 of his opponents going out by the air route. He was hit nine times, Duggan being his arch enemy.

McPherson fanned 10 and allowed but five hits, few of them being at critical moments. The score by innings:

A. O. H.	1 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 1—7
Red Men	0 0 0 1 0 1 2 0 2 0—6

Batteries—McPherson and Duggan; Johnson and Moorhouse.

CARPENTERS WIN.

The Carpenters, by virtue of their win over the Electricians of the city a week ago, and a victory over the Plumbers last Saturday, are claiming the base ball championship of the crafts affiliated with the Building Trades Council, but the Plumbers dispute the claim and another game will be played Saturday at Merrymount Park.

Victory Saturday was the result of a long smash by Jack Fallon which bowled over the plumbers left fielder and cleared the bases with the three runs necessary in the last inning.

The games have been unusually interesting, the wives, children, brothers and sisters and sweethearts of the players being on hand to cheer their favorites. The score by innings:

Carpenters	0 0 0 1 1 0 0 2 0 3—7
Plumbers	0 0 1 1 2 2 2 0 0—6

Batteries—Erickson and Foster; Troup and Kelly. Umpire—George Fallon.

WELLESLEY VICTORIOUS

Quincy High Unable to Score in First Game

Quincy High lost its first game of the season to Wellesley High at Wellesley Saturday afternoon, by a score of 19 to 0. More or less fumbling marred the contest, but both teams put up a good early season game.

The first touchdown was scored in the first period, when Wellesley carried the ball down the field in a series of straight rushes. The third period netted two touchdowns through perfect forward passes and a cross tackle play by Finnerty.

Quincy held Wellesley for downs in the third period, and Finnerty again broke the routine by carrying the ball over on a fine dive tackle play.

The loss of the game to Quincy was the direct result of Crocker being obliged to retire because of a twisted knee. Sanborn who succeeded him proved to be inefficient, mainly because he lacked the experience necessary to play the position.

Bogan, Rasmussen and O'Connor will all be developed for that position, the former being the likely candidate. His position is half-back and his experience in the backfield should carry him over a wide gap.

The team played well, but Wellesley's backs were fast, although they were held for downs on the one-yard line twice.

A pounding practice will take place from now on to bring out the best in the ne material available. The summary

JAMES W. GERARD.

American Ambassador In Berlin, Who Is Attempting To Obtain Peace In Europe.

A message from the kaiser to President Wilson is expected to follow the informal conversation regarding peace possibilities which Ambassador Gerard had at Berlin with the imperial chancellor, Von Bethmann-Hollweg. In official circles the news of Ambassador Gerard's talk with the German chancellor is regarded as momentous. President Wilson, while attaching importance to the report from Mr. Gerard, considers that the statements of the imperial chancellor, because of their purely informal nature, offer nothing tangible on which to base a hope for early peace negotiations.

BUT TWO SURVIVORS

Over Seventy Lives Lost In Wreck Off Coast of Oregon

Astoria, Ore., Sept. 21.—Between seventy and eighty men, women and children, coastwise passengers and crew, were drowned when the steamer Francis H. Leggett was pounded to pieces in a gale.

Two men were rescued and carried to Astoria and Portland to tell how the sea tore the vessel to pieces and how the passengers were drowned, a boatload at a time, as the lifeboats put off, or met their fate a little later when the vessel turned over.

WOLLASTON'S CANDIDATE

Chester I. Campbell Prominent in Big Enterprises

It was only after considerable pressure that Chester I. Campbell of Wollaston decided to allow the use of his name for the office of Mayor of Quincy. He informed the committee that waited on him Friday evening, that if he was elected he would enter the office with absolutly a free rein, and with no strings attached, for his highest ambition is to give the City of Quincy one of the most efficient administrations, and he feels that if he went into office fettered with political promises it would not be possible to give the best that is in him.

In the business world Chester I. Campbell has demonstrated that he is a remarkable man. In every project that he has been connected with brilliant success has been attained. This is due to his remarkable energy, resourcefulness, tact and brains, and as a result he is today regarded as America's greatest exposition manager.

Chester I. Campbell is a self-made man, with only a common school education. He has forged ahead by sheer pluck and strength of character and brain force. One of his chief attainments is to gather around him the right sort of men, and the citizens of Quincy may be assured that if he is elected to the office every department in the city will be brought up to the highest efficiency, as Mr. Campbell will gather around him a coterie of men that will put Quincy city government in first-class shape.

Chester I. Campbell was born in Providence in 1869. He was educated in the public schools and was connected with the Bradstreet Mercantile Agency. When bicycles became the rage he was connected with this agency, but he went into the bicycle business and was successful from the start. When automobiles took the place of bicycles he followed the trend and represented a number of the most successful car builders in the pioneer days of motor cars.

Twelve years ago when the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association gave their first show in Mechanics Building Chester I. Campbell was elected secretary and general manager. It is a well-known fact that it was his brilliant administration which brought this institution to the point where it is the largest motor car show in the world.

He immediately launched into the exposition business and has successfully staged the National Motor Boat and Engine shows in Boston and Chicago, the National Textile exhibitions, National Flower shows, the Industrial show, Electrical shows, and his latest success was the management of the Rockingham Fair for 1914, which everybody agrees was the most wholesome out-door show ever given in America.

Mr. Campbell has numerous business interests. He is a director of the Fidelity Trust Company and a trustee of the City Realty Trust Co. of Boston and prominent in several other business organizations. He is president of the Men's Congregational club of Wollaston, a member of the Wollaston lodge, A. F. of A. M., the Odd Fellows of Providence, the Mystic Shrine, Boston Athletic club, Engineers' club, Boston City club, Sales Managers Club of Boston, and is very prominent in the affairs of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and the Pilgrim Publicity Association. He is also treasurer for America of the Egypt Exploration fund.

In the commercial world it is well known that anything that Chester I. Campbell has to do with is conducted upon the most efficient system. In fact many of the exposition managers from various parts of the country frequently visit the exhibitions managed by Mr. Campbell in order to get ideas on the systematic running of a big show.

His management of the Rockingham Fair was a remarkable instance of his systematizing. It required an army of almost 1000 men, a commissary to feed and house this crowd, and a police force much larger than that of the City of Quincy, yet everything went off with the precision of a well-oiled machine.

Chester I. Campbell is the type of man that would appeal to men of all political faiths. He is not a politician and frankly says he knows nothing of politics, and in entering this contest for the Mayor of Quincy he has made it clear to those who have urged him that they cannot expect any patronage from his hands, as he insists that if he is to be elected Mayor he must go into it with a free rein and give the City of Quincy the best that is in him.

MATTAPAN WON IN EIGHTH

East Milton Rally in the Ninth Was Too Late

The first game for the championship of Milton between teams representing East Milton and Mattapan was played Saturday afternoon at the Brook Road playground before 1200 enthusiastic fans. The score was very close up to the eighth inning when the score was 3 to 3. But during this inning Mattapan scored seven runs, while East Milton made six errors.

The East Milton players were the first to score making three runs in the second. Palucci pitched for the losing team and showed some fine form. He struck out nine of Mattapan's men and got two hits. But Miltons infield was weak and gave their pitcher hardly any support. There was some heavy hitting for the East Milton team but the winning team only was able to get five hits off "Ed." The big feature of the game was the wonderful catch of White, right fielder for Mattapan. Kane was at the bat and knocked out a fly away over on the car tracks, it sure looked like a home run. But the unexpected White stretching out his legs, got under the ball and caught it.

Chamberlain, who has been pitching for Cunningham Gym all season, pitched for Mattapan. J. Robertson made a very pretty double play in the fourth inning.

The score by innings:

Mattapan	0 0 0 2 0 1 0 7 x—10
E. Milton	0 3 0 0 0 0 0 0 4—7

COMMITTEES LIABLE.

Up to Saturday only ten candidates for nomination at Tuesday's primaries had complied with the new anti-corrupt practices act of 1914 and filed in names of their campaign committees, and especially of their chairmen and treasurers, with the secretary of the Commonwealth.

The law is explicit as to this and says: "No person acting under the authority or in behalf of such a committee (not elected by the voters of the Commonwealth) shall receive any money or other thing of value or expend or disburse the same until the names of the Chairman and treasurer and the names of such additional members in the case of committees not elected shall have been so filed."

Today is the last day.

The Fore Rivers beat Brockton 44 to 1 in a fast soccer game in the Shoe city Saturday. Brockton led 1 to 0 in the first period, but an injury to Rae, which caused his withdrawal, forced them to finish with 10 men, the visitors then scoring all their goals. Mayor Harry Howard kicked off the first ball.

HONESTY IN ADVERTISING.
Honest Policy the Only Successful Plan.

Business that would attain leadership in a competitive field must advertise. A big manufacturing concern doing business everywhere and especially one whose goods last so long that they sell each consumer infrequently, cannot afford the expense of having men everywhere on the ground to solicit orders at just the right moment. This causes a demand for the goods and big selling or jobbing concerns gladly do the rest of the work of delivering the goods and collecting for them. This makes the best and most economical way to do business.

Advertising effects a saving by economically paying the way for the sales manager to make sales quickly and easily by correspondence or the call of his salesmen. It picks out the real prospective customers and leaves out those who are not interested.

There are honest and dishonest kinds of advertising. Facts clearly and honestly stated are the best selling arguments in the world and make a healthy growth in business. Once a certain rate of progression has been attained on an honest basis, the business will generate its own power and ascend the hill of success.

If, on the other hand, the goods are misrepresented through dishonest advertising, the confidence of the people in that house will be shaken and ruin will soon come from the expense of the advertising without the necessary volume of business from happy customers to pay for it. Such experiences affect the confidence of everyone in advertising in general, and injure, to a certain extent, the honest advertiser.

Advertising, to be a success, must be honest, not only in big things, but in little things as well. The people may be fooled part of the time, but the time soon comes when a dishonest advertiser finds out he can't fool the people very long. This accounts for most failures in advertising.

There's a Certain-teed dealer in your locality. He will be pleased to give you further information about our extensive line of goods and will quote you reasonable prices on all of them. Be sure the goods are made and guaranteed by us.

GOETTING IN THE RACE.

While the Ledger makes it a rule not to play favorites among aspirants for office before the nominations are made, and will adhere to that policy toward the rival candidates for second place on the Republican ticket, we do not now hesitate to say that we are glad Col. Goetting has decided to stay in the race. He is fully entitled to do so. He made a plucky fight last year He came nearer success than most of his associates on the ticket. He has been a faithful worker in the ranks for many years, and deserves well of the party in the days of its prosperity. Other good men will be in the race, too. Let the best one win. But may the party, all along the line, not entirely forget in this year when its nominations are an asset, the men who bore them when they were a liability.

AUSTRIANS ARE DRIVEN BACK

Fighting Along Hundred and Fifty-Mile Front In Galicia

KAISER'S ALLIES ARE LINED UP

Von Hindenberg Brings Picked Corps From East Prussia to Make Demonstration Toward Warsaw—Przemysl Provisioned For Two Years—Further Russian Victories Reported

Petrograd, Sept. 21.—Russia's advance through Galicia continues, but the Austria-German army is preparing to make a strong stand on a line of which Przemysl is the centre.

All the villages along this strongly fortified position have been ordered evacuated and strong intrenchments are being dug all along the Austrian front. The fortress garrison of 60,000 men at Przemysl has been provisioned for two years.

The Austrian line now has a 150-mile front, and it has become clear the allies of the kaiser are not going to allow the Russian forces to enter Cracow without a struggle.

The disposition of the Austrian troops appears to be as follows: General Boycerics commands the right wing, the centre is held by General von Auffenberg, who has Tarnow as his base, and General Dankl has the left wing, with the German troops supporting his extreme left.

To save the Austrian army General von Hindenberg, instead of hastening to France with his picked troops, is reported to be turning southward from East Prussia to make a demonstration toward Warsaw. It is not believed that he intends to invade Russian Poland more than is necessary to cause a strong Russian force to be deflected in that direction. If he tried to push too far into that territory he would be menaced seriously by a new Russian army which is advancing from the Nemen river.

The official announcement of the general staff regarding the Galician operations says:

"The Russian troops have captured the fortified positions of Siniava and Sambor, in Galicia. The Austrian rear guard has been thrown back beyond the San river, in the region of Radymno and Medyka. The Austrians destroyed the bridges on the San in the region of Sandomir and Radomysl. The Russians captured 3000 prisoners and twenty-two cannon in the region of Memirov and have taken 3000 cases of ammunition."

The attack on Przemysl is expected to begin today. The entire left wing of the Russian army, under Generals Ruzsky and Brussiloff, is now before Przemysl and is ready for the task.

The Saxony cavalry division which recently arrived in East Prussia from France has suffered heavy losses. Near Sandomir, Russian Poland, the Russians have again defeated the broken remnants of the Second German landwehr corps under General Woirsch. Here, evidently, the Austrians had prepared to cross the Vistula river.

The czar has authorized the adoption of a new Russian flag to symbolize the union of the crown and the people. The new flag combines the national colors and the imperial arms.

AUSTRIAN LOSSES

Said to Have Reached Thirty-Five Percent In Galicia Fighting

"It is estimated that the Austrian losses in the great battle of Galicia are as high as 35 percent," says the Petrograd correspondent of the London Times. His dispatch continues:

"There is no reliable data regarding the Russian losses, but it is believed that they are not one-tenth of those sustained by the Austrians.

"This disparity is due in great measure to the superiority of the Russian gunners. All eye-witnesses agree that the Russian regiments are admirably trained in the difficult arts of controlling their fire and taking shelter."

WILL BE RUSHED THROUGH

War Tax Measure Will Raise About $108,000,000 a Year

Washington, Sept. 21.—In accordance with the wishes of President Wilson the war tax measure to provide revenue for the deficiency in revenue to this country caused by the war in Europe, has been drafted.

According to the legislative program outlined by its sponsors, the bill will be introduced into congress today by Mr. Underwood, chairman of the ways and means committee. It is estimated that it will bring in about $108,000,000 a year, which is more than President Wilson expected.

The bill will be submitted to the ways and means committee on Tuesday and will probably be reported back to the house on Thursday, and it is believed that it will be passed by Saturday night.

Got Away Easily With $2000

TRAINLOADS OF BATTLE RELICS

Cannon, Small Arms and Ammunition Brought to Paris

EVEN MOTORS AMONG BOOTY

Cannon and Sabres of Germans Are Highly Ornamental—Showy Appearance of Officers' Side Arms Evidently Out of Proportion to Apparent Use of the Weapons

Paris, Sept. 21.—During the last few days there has been a succession of trains bearing spoils of war to Paris.

The astonishing quantity of this booty is powerful testimony to the rapidity of the enemy's retreat. There are cannon, gun carriages, mitrailleuses, motor lorries and truckloads of small arms and ammunition. In fact it is estimated that since the beginning of last week about sixty cannon, thirty mitrailluses and forty gun carriages have arrived here.

The cannon seem very pretentious and massive by the side of the trim little French weapons. While the latter are perfectly plain, the former are usually ornamental, with garlands of laurel or oak leaves encircling some motto.

The pieces are stamped with the German imperial eagle and the number of the corps, or with the imperial crown. The essential parts for firing the weapons had usually been taken away before the capture.

The officers' sabres, which have been brought here as trophies, are also very much criticised for their showy appearance. This is out of all proportion to the apparent use of the weapons. The ornate handles, which are of wrought copper, usually more remarkable for the painstaking labor involved in its making than for any artistic character on the lacework design, and the big thong, with its gorgeous tassel of silver threads, do not compensate for the narrow, thin blade, often of inferior metal, not easily bending or regaining its form readily when once bent.

All souvenirs of the battlefield are eagerly sought here. This fact was taken advantage of by one ingenious street vender. This man was well dressed and had a mysterious air which made him noticeable to the easily interested habitues of the cafes of the boulevards, with whom he gradually entered into conversation.

He gave circumstantial details of some recent battle, which he said he had been allowed to witness by his influential relations, and then he hinted to the large, interested crowd that he had many sabres, casques, etc., that he was willing to dispose of for a small sum. His sales were so numerous that the matter at last came to the notice of the police, who found his precious trophies were all taken in 1870.

Belief of Pastor Russell, Who Opens Campaign In Massachusetts

Melrose, Mass., Sept. 21.—Dr. H. H. Russell, founder of the Anti-Saloon League of America, at Memorial hall, opened the temperance campaign to be waged in Massachusetts this week.

He declared that it was the firm belief of the temperance advocates that the prohibitioin of the liquor business was only a matter of a short time in view of the tremendous organization arrayed against it.

NEW PRESERVE AT HINGHAM

Will Be Closed to Hunting fo Five Years

Approximately 1000 acres of wood and brush land in Hingham are being posted with notices this week, says the Monitor, informing the public that a State reservation has been established and that no hunting or fishing is allowed. Mallard ducks and a few quail and partridges are about the only game on the area at this time, but the State fish and game commission is planning to stock it with pheasants, partridge and quail next year.

This land is set off for five years under the voluntary wishes of a number of citizens who jointly own the property. It is only under the control of the State commission, as the land still belongs to its individual owners. At the end of five years the fish and game restrictions are removed automatically unless extended another five years.

The owners of the property are also restricted from hunting within the area. This action of the State commission is made possible by an act of 1911 whereby a closed season of five years may be ordered upon any land petitioned for by the owners and after a public hearing has been held.

The commission has a number of other areas under consideration for reservations under the five-year provision.

One reservation has recently been set aside at Marshfield consisting of over 2000 acres. There was no objection at the hearing on this property nor on that in Hingham.

The owners of the Hingham land include Peter C. Bradley, William H. White, trustee for the Samuel Downer estate; Cornelius McCarthy, Murphy Brothers, Cornelius Foley, Jerome Breen, Frank H. White, J. A. Fotler, Ernest W. Lincoln, Samuel A. Litchfield, Walter S. Bouve and S. Henry Hooper. The reservation lies east of Lincoln street and southeast of the Weymouth Back river, and includes Squirrel and Baker hills west of Lincoln street.

NEW YEAR WITH HEBREWS

Anniversary of Creation is Being Observed

With the setting of the sun Sunday night the Hebrew synagogues and temples in Quincy ushered in with prayer and all the impresive ceremonies of the Hebrew ritual the 5675th anniversary of the creation of the world according to the Jewish calendar. At the beginning of sundown, laborers, merchants and professional men, the poor and the wealthy approached each other with the old greeting "l'shone Tovo T'kosev" "May you be inscribed in the Book of Life for a good year."

Rosh Mashanah," while ushering in the New Year, has greater importance attached to it because of its significance to the followers of Judaism, and is considered, together with "Yom Kippur," or the Day of Atonement, which comes 10 days later, as the most important holiday in the Jewish religious calendar. It is sometimes referred to as the Day of Memorial, for on this day the Jew is charged with the duty of seeking the Lord's grace and mercy, of trying to have the Lord remember him in the judgments and inscribe him in the Book of Life for a good and happy year.

Today will also mark the opening day of a period of 10 days of penitence After the New Year festivities are over the orthodox Jews will enter a period of reflection, during which they ponder over their relation to man and religion. This lasts until the 10th day, when all assemble again and make atonement for their misdeeds of the past year, as well as resolves for the next period.

There are several reasons why the Jews celebrate the new year in the fall. The month of Tishri is the seventh month in the year and yet on the first of this month the beginning of the synagogue year is celebrated, because the number seven has been sacred among the Jews from days immemorial.

The seventh day is Sabbath, the seventh year is the Sabbatical year, and at the conclusion of seven times seven years is the great jubilee year of release, when all slaves are set free. The seventh month is the holist in the year, and during the month all the principal holy days and festivals are observed, which includes the New Year, the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Tabernacles.

There is yet another reason why the fall was chosen for these observances. It concluded the agricultural season for the ancient Hebrews, and was a most convenient time for celebrations. Incidentally, the same is true today, It is the end of the vacation, and hence in a true sense the beginning of the year.

The services this morning were the biggest of the celebration. The "Shofar" or trumpet was sounded in all the places of worship, calling all the members of the faith to awake from their everyday life and think up their religion.

The reason for the use of the ram's horn, the real "shofar," is a traditional one, since it is this instrument which was used by ancient Israel to announce the issuing of proclamations or sound the call to arms.

This afternoon thousands of men, women and children of the Hebrew faith will flock to the water's edge and, with a prayer book in hand, will go through the ancient ceremony of shaking from their garments the sins which they have accumulated during the year.

New Year's cards containing the customary greetings and wishes, in both Hebrew and English script, are sent and received. So general is this custom of exchanging New Year's cards that it is estimated that about a million dollars' worth are annually sent out from this country to friends and relatives on the other side.

Divine services, in addition to the temples, synagogues and halls, will also be held at the State prison, the Massachusetts Reformatory and the House of Correction at Deer Island, provided there is a quorum of Jews which is required by the Hebrew law.

In addition to the services, it is understood that all the Jews, including the juveniles in every institution throughout the State, are to be excused from all work during the holy days.

Jewish soldiers and sailors desirous of attending service will when in uniform, be welcomed to every synagogue and temple of Greater Boston.

Special features of the observances of the New Year will be the special prayer for peace that will be offered by the rabbis during the services. The following prayer will be offered in the Orthodox congregation. It was composed by Rabbi Drachman, president, of the United Orthodox Hebrew Congregations of America.

WANTED TO SELL RING.

A young man, claiming Braintree as his home, is held at police headquarters while an investigation is being made as to how he procured a valuable diamond ring he tried to dispose of in several jewelry stores today.

He appeared about noon at the store of Sandberg Bros., and because he declined to make a full explanation of ownership, word was sent to headquarters.

The young man was placed under arrest while lunching with a young lady at the Thompson cafe. He claims the property is his, the ring being the engagement ring of his mother. The jewelers pronounce th stone as a valuable one.

On reaching police headquarters Lieut. Hanson, somewhat impressed by the story told by the boy, detailed an officer to accompany him to Braintree so the young man could have an opportunity to prove ownership.

THE CHURCHES

FIRST PARISH.

The Frst Parish church resumed services Sunday with an attendance more than twice as large as on any opening Sunday for many years. And there seemed to be among the people a feeling of harmony, enthusiasm and good will which indicated the beginning of a new era of growth and usefulness in the old church. The improvements made in the interior during the summer vacation, including the new carpet and pew racks, were a subject of much favorable comment among the large number who remained after the service to meet newcomers and greet old frinds.

The new hymn and service books were in use for the first time and the changes in the service, made necessary by the new books, seemed to give universal satisfaction. The new antiphonal services were most beautiful, and the service as a whole was simple, impressive and inspiring.

The minister, Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, preached upon the question "Is Unity Possible in the Modern World?" He drew a vivid picture of present conditions in the world; the European war with its world-wide consequences; the social chaos and industrial strife which are everywhere clogging the wheels of progress.

The unity for which Jesus prayed seems at first to be farther away than ever. But there are two significant facts in the present war: First, each nation engaged is trying to convince the world that its own cause is just and that its own part in the war has been in response to a righteous necessity. Now whatever may be the truth of these respective claims one thing is sure:—each one of these nations recognizes that there is today a world conscience which demands that war shall not be waged excepting for a just and righteous cause. One hundred years ago during the Napoleonic wars, when the same nations were engaged under a different aligment, no such world conscience was in evidence. But war was its own excuse for being; and the appeal was not to justice but only to "The heaviest battalions.

The other significant fact is that all of these nations, with evident sincerity, insist that when the end is finally attained it can only be on terms which will secure a lasting peace—not merely an armed truce, as in previous wars, with each nation obviously preparing to renew the conflict.

But wars will never cease, nor unity prevail, so long as selfishness, hatred and class or racial prejudice are the ruling motives. The remedy lies deeper than treaties and conventions. It must be formed in the spread of Christian ideals, the growth of reverence, the recognition of the gospel of Jesus Christ as the universal rule of conduct. To secure this result is the great function of the Christian church; and in this work the First Parish in Quincy, with its noble traditions, was destined he believed to bear an honorable part.

After the morning service there was a special meeting of the Young Peoples Religious Union, at which it was decided to hold the first regular meeting on Sunday, Oct. 4 at 4.30 P. M., instead of Oct. 11th which will be the date of the 275th anniversary of the parish.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

At the Sunday morning service the musical portion was rendered by the Girls choir, and the soloist Mrs. William A. Hodges of Weymouth. The pastor preached upon "Doing Justly," from the text "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with God."

This text, said Mr. Horst, is the finest definition of religion we have. Justice means giving every person his due. It is opposed to partiality and favoritism. We must be just to ourselves, as well as to our fellowmen,—just to our physical and spiritual nature. Justice requires that all passions and appetities should be subordinate to true self-love. It is right and just that we should love and respect ourselves. The second great commandment of Jesus is very definite, namely to love our neighbor as ourselves. But if we love ourselves none how can we love our neighbor?

No, we are to love ourselves and then make that the measure of our love for our neighbors. Some people are ready to do anything, if only they can avoid doing justly. No amount of philanthropy or almsgiving however, no singing of hymns to freedom or boasting of liberty, can take the place of justice, which as Emerson says "Satisfies everybody and justice alone." Let the boy and girl do justly in the schoolroom and on the playground, let men and women do justly in social and business life; let all live up to the Golden Rule, for we are instructed in our lesson today that "better is a little with righteousness than great riches without right. To do justice is more acceptable than sacrifice. Thou shalt not be partial, neither take a bribe, for a bribe doth blind the eyes of the wise and pervert the words of the righteous. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow."

A special parish meeting will be held Wednesday evening, Sept. 23, at 7.45 o'clock to hear the report of the Parish House committee.

The Unitarian Ministers' Institute, which meets biennially is held in Newport, R. I., Sept. 21-24.

At the union service of the Wollaston churches to be held Sunday evening, Sept. 27, at 7 o'clock in the Baptist church under the auspices of the Anti Saloon League, M. J. Swearinger of Delaware will speak.

The Sunday school sessions will be resumed Sunday, Oct. 3.

FIRE DANGER WILL BE REMOVED

Starting in bright and early Tuesday morning, Chief Engineer Billings, who has been appointed a deputy for Quincy by Fire Hazard Commissioner O'Keefe, with a squad of firemen, will make an inspection of the cellars of all business places throughout the city. In places where cellars are found to be cluttered up, the proprietors will be notified to clean them up, and will be given a certain number of hours in which to do so. If this order is not complied with, in the time specified, the Chief will put on teams and clean them up and the proprietor will have to pay the bill.

The Chief is also required under the new law to make a detailed report to Commissioner O'Keefe of the places inspected.

BADGER—MILLS.

Quincy people were interested and several from this city were present Saturday at the wedding of Miss Margaret Mills, daughter of Rev. Carleton Mills, a former rector of St. Chrysostom's church at Wollaston, who became the bride of Paul Badger of Yale '11. The ceremony took place at the Church of Epiphany, Winchester, the officiating clergyman being the bride's father, Rev. Carleton P. Mills, who is the educational secretary of the diocese of eastern Massachusetts.

The bride was attended by her sister Miss Dorothy Mills, as maid of honor and little Ethel Louise Kennedy of Plainfield, N. J., and Tristram McKinnon of Winchester, as ring bearers. The best man was the bridegroom's brother, Erastus B. Badger, 2d.

The ushers were Clarence Fultz of Cambridge, Walter Badger of Winchester, Irving Badger of Cambridge John S. Higgins of Winchester, Walter Logan of New York, John McDonald of Tulsa, Okla., John Dempsey of Cleveland O., and William Washburn of Brockton. Miss Mills is a graduate of Wellesley.

ROBERT L. RAYMOND OF MILTON

To the Citizens of Quincy:

It has been impossible for me to meet all the Republicans in the 14th District as I should like to do, and I must appeal to many by means of this advertisement.

I have conducted a vigorous campaign and am satisfied that my chances of obtaining the Republican nomination for Congress are excellent. I am confident also, that if nominated I shall be elected.

I ask for the votes of those who believe in liberal policies while insisting that stable government shall be maintained.

If chosen, I shall represent the whole District to the best of my ability, and I hope in the future to become better acquainted and better known in the important and beautiful city of Quincy.

NEW SCHOOL LOT IN WARD TWO

City Council Committee Report in Favor of Lowe Lot Off Washington Street

Protest From Elm Avenue Against Digging Up Street

There was considerable important business before the City Council Monday evening, but the business went through with dispatch and an adjournment was reached soon after 9 o'clock. It was what might be known as public hearing night, for hearings were given on several important matters. Among the new business was an order reported by the Committee on Public Buildings for a school lot in the Ward Two district.

The absent members were Councilman Bass and Sodergren.

JURORS DRAWN.

A venire was received for the drawing of eight jurors for the October term of the Superior court. Acting Mayor Crane, Assistant City Clerk Miss Lyons, and Councilman Little drew the following according to law: Horace W. Richmond, Harrison S. Loud, Herman Grages, Ralph E. Winslow, Warren H. Nelson, Walter H. Dunbar, Louis S. Cleaves and A. F. Bromley.

EXTRA APPROPRIATION.

A communication was received from the City Auditor asking for an appropriation of $100 for expenses of his office. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Bailey offered an order for that amount, charging it to unexpended balances of 1913. Referred to Finance Committee.

CEMETERY RECEIPT.

A communication was received from the Acting Mayor, inclosing a communication from the Managers of Public Burial Places, asking that the rent received from the old house on the Mt. Wollaston cemetery property be placed to the credit of that department. Referred to Finance Committee.

SCHOOL LOT OFFERED.

A comunication from James F. Burke Co., relative to a school lot in Ward Two was referred to the Finance Committee.

PETITIONS.

A petition of the Electric Light Co., for a relocation of poles on Fayette and Penn street, was granted.

Petitions of the Telephone Co., for attachments, were also granted.

Petitions of the Electric Light Co. for a location of poles was laid on the table until later, when Councilman Gilliatt offered an order for a public hearing which was adopted.

A petition of the Bay State Street Railway Co., for a relocation of poles, was granted.

ELM AVENUE CONDUIT.

A hearing was held at 7.55 on petition of the Telephone Co. for underground conduits on Elm avenue. Mr. Green of the company stated that the petition was in response to an order of the City Council to place its wires underground on this street.

There was considerable objection to the granting of this petition. John L. Hamilton representing the abutters stated that the street had just been rebuilt and the abutters objected to tearing it up again. He also presented a petition signed by a majority of the abutters. Hearing closed and order recommitted.

STREET RAILWAY HEARING.

Hearings were held at 8 o'clock and 8.15 on petitions of the street railway for a relocation of tracks on Hancock street, and for a branch off Sea street. The relocation on Hancock street, General Superintendent Conway said, was upon order of the Commissioner who was to rebuild the street.

When asked about the use of iron poles, Mr. Conway said that there were three companies now using poles on this part of the street, and to put in iron poles would mean another set of poles. The company also objected, for the reason that high ten-

America to Observe Special Peace Day For Europe on Sunday, Oct. 4.

"O God, who hast made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and who in thy Holy Word hast taught us that One is our Father, even God, and that all we are brethren: We pray thee in this dark hour of international strife that thou wilt open the eyes of the people and those who in thy Name are intrusted with the authority of governance to see and understand their right and true relation to thee and through thee to one another. Teach them by thy spirit that hatred and violence are not strength but weakness; that the true safeguarding of a nation is not to be found in weapons of war but in those eternal principles which make for righteousness and truth and brotherhood and peace. Give to those who shall suffer in the war which is raging now the consolations of thy grace. Heal the sick comfort the wounded minister to the dying and bind up the broken heart. Bring, we pray thee, to a speedy end this international strife and hasten the time when peace shall flourish out of the earth, and all shall dwell together in unity and love, and war shall be no more. We ask it in the Name of Our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen!"

Bless Thou Thy peo - ple as they strive The paths of peace to find. A - men.

The clash of arms will shakes the sky,
King battles still with king—
Wild through the frighted nir of night

The wise debate of statesmen and
The shouts of pioneers.

And stronger far the clasped hands

President Wilson by proclamation has set aside Sunday, Oct. 4, as a national peace day. Peace services will be held in churches throughout the land, irrespective of denomination. Sermons for peace in Europe will be delivered, songs for peace will be sung and prayers for peace will be offered. A hymn entitled "Peace," written by John Haynes Holmes and sung to the music of "St. Anges" by J. B. Dykes in 1866, here reproduced, has been recommended as the national peace day song by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and the Church Peace union. Among the peace prayers especially written for the day is one by Bishop Greer of the Episcopal church, also reproduced here.

WEDDING AT WOLLASTON

Miss Grace I. Bishop the Bride of Thomas L. Edwards

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Herbert Bishop, 182 Summit avenue Wollaston Monday evening, surrounded by the immediate family, their daughter Grace Irene was united in marriage to Thomas Lewis Edwards, son of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Dairymple Edwards of Princeville, Illinois. The ceremony was solemnized at half past seven by Rev. Carl G. Horst of the Wollaston Unitarian church, and was simple and impressive. The bride and groom were unattended except the bride's brother Francis Herbert Bishop was master of ceremony and the little sister Virginia held the bridal bouquet. She wore an imported dotted and flowered white muslin with white ribbons.

The bride was girlish and charming in a gown of white crepe meteor cut en train and trimmed with chantilly lace. The veil was caught up with a lace butterfly and lilies of the valley and the shower bouquet was of the same flowers.

Large bouquets of pink Rochester asters and green vines arranged by Luard of Wollaston made a pretty setting for the ceremony and the reception that followed from half past eight until ten o'clock.

The reception was very informal, the summer evening contributing to the enjoyment as not only the house but the piazza and lawn were used throughout the evening.

In the dining room the same color scheme was carried out the flowers being pink Rochester asters and the candelabras having pink shades. William E. Weston's orchestra stationed in the library played continuously. About 200 guests were present, all of whom inscribed their names in the bride's guest book which will be a pleasant souvenir in the years to come.

None of Mr. Edwards' people were able to come on for the ceremony as his father, as head of the Monica Grain Elevator, at this time of the year is unusually busy, however messages and gifts conveyed loving thoughts.

As the bride passed up the stairs to dress for going away she scattered her bouquet among her young friends, who later on reciprocated with a shower of confetti and good wishes as Mr. and Mrs. Edwards started on their wedding trip.

The honeymoon of two weeks is to be spent at Camp Pequasset, on an island in Lake Waukewan, near Meredith, N. H., owned by the Bishops.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are to spend the winter in Wollaston at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bishop, where on return from camp they will receive their friends.

The polls for the State primaries opened promptly at 12 o'clock noon, today, and immediately the Democrats, Republicans and Progressives began to have their say as to whom they desired nominated for the various offices. The voters today do not vote by precincts but by wards, and there is as usual a polling place in a central locality in each ward.

The polls will remain open until 9 o'clock tonight, and owing to a number of contests, especially on the Republican ticket, it will probably be late before final returns are received at the City Clerk's office.

The various candidates have put in a busy two weeks, and the state has

The principal thing that has happened in Europe since Aug. 1, according to the returning tourists, is the loss of their trunks.

Congress is now proposing to place a war tax on gasolene, in spite of its solemn pledge to abstain from assessing the basic necessities of life.

It is complained that school graduates can't write a good letter, but then they can tell the boss a lot on how to run his business.

The only way to find out what is going on in the United States now is to buy the home paper. The big metropolitan sheets look as if they were printed at London, Paris, Berlin, or Petrograd.

Some one asks what has become of the girl that used to play "Silver threads among the gold" on the wheezy old cabinet organ? Our impression is that about now she is grinding out the music of "High Jinks" on a $1000 mechanical piano player.

MOVING ON.

"Forty years ago the temperance reform was traveling at the pace of a prairie schooner along a western trail. Today its electric speed is the despair of the liquor dealer and foretells the early downfall of his trade."

These words from the address of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., at Chautauqua, N. Y., pictures graphically the then and the now of public sentiment on the liquor question. And speaking of the prospect for nation-wide prohibition in the near future, she said:

"National Constitutional Prohibition is a 'Safety First' measure and should command the earnest, active, untiring support of every Christian and every patriot. It is 'Safety First' for thousands of suffering women and children; it is 'Safety First' for the rising generation of boys and girls, our citizens of tomorrow who are entitled to this protection along life's treacherous highway; it is a 'Safety First' measure made absolutely necessary by the complex condition of the electric age in which we live, an age which must eliminate alcoholic poison if it would preserve individual and national life. National Constitutional Prohibition is an efficiency measure which must prevail in our great republic if we are to maintain our proud position among the nations of the world.

ATTENDANCE AT PRIMARIES.

In spite of all the efforts that have been made to liberalize the primaries, and to encourage the voters to take part in them, the reports from a number of states this fall are that these meetings are not well attended. Of course the war has, in a way swept politics out of the spot-light. But government must go on in this country, war or no war. As usual, a high price will be paid for misgovernment.

The attitude of people who refuse to attend and vote at primaries is not a little incomprehensible. They are usually good citizens in other respects. They reverence the flag of the country, and they are loyal to the state and home town.

But when it comes to the onerous task of spending a half hour at the voting booth, to do their part toward making their state and country powerful and efficient, they are not there.

A great many of these people are very keen critics of present methods of government. They rake the bosses with withering sarcasm. One man talking with the writer recently said that primaries were cut and dried affairs anyway. It was no use to go. Politics was a contest, he wanted to show his contempt for the whole system by staying away.

Funny, wasn't it? In order to spite the bosses, he did just what the bosses want! As long as he and men like him stay away, the bosses will retain control.

If a man's time is so valuable, if his public spirit is so feeble, if his mind is so sluggish, that the fateful and stealthy struggles of politics have no interest to him, and he feels that he can not spare the few moments necessary to attend both primary and election, let him attend the primary rather than the other. It is there that the real fate of good government or bad government is decided, rather than at election.

ALLIES CREEP STILL CLOSER TO GERMANS

Von Kluck's Advance Guard Is Driven Back Seven Miles

HIS ARMY PLACED ON THE DEFENSIVE

Heavy Fighting Continues Under Frightful Weather Conditions—Troops Often Knee-Deep In Mud Because of Constant Rains and Overflow of Rivers—Bombardment of Rheims Continues—Advantages Favor Allies, Although Battle of the Aisne Is Far From Settled—Hand-to-Hand Encounters Continue

London, Sept. 22.—After forty-eight hours of persistent hammering, the allied armies have put a large dent in the redoubtable right wing of the German invaders and have driven back the advance guard of General von Kluck's army for a distance of seven miles up the valley of the Oise.

This is a signal success for the allies in connection with the long continued movement to outflank the heavy German right, and means that von Kluck, who is anxiously lurking in his entrenchments between Noyon and Chauny, is in greater peril than ever of being surrounded by the English and French troops.

The advance just completed carries the allies to the heights of the little town of Lassigny, just west of Noyon, and, while by no means decisive, marks another step in the steady, almost inch-by-inch advance against that once formidable right wing which, three weeks ago, was expected to swing around and strike a fatal blow at Paris.

London Is Cheered

Not only this, but an advance of any kind at this particular point of the 100-mile battle line means encouragement and cheer to the allied armies and the nations back of them, and London is more cheerful at the idea that the monster German machine is being slowly driven back, even though it is realized that reprisals in the way of immense casualty lists will be inevitable.

Details of the victory are lacking, but the news comes direct from the battle front by way of Paris, and the fact that it has passed the French censorship, which has all along been conservative in claiming big things, is conclusive of its authenticity.

The position of von Kluck is now a degree more perilous and his army has the further disadvantage of being on the defensive.

Such figuting as has been necessary to drive back this army seven miles in forty-eight hours under frightful weather conditions is almost impossible to conceive. It has been like Titan against Titan, with a little touch of the superhuman of Hercules on the allies' side to give the necessary superiority in driving power.

Frightful Weather Conditions

It has been a battle in the mud. Probably never before in great world conflicts have big armies floundered and splashed in mud as those in France are now doing. Reports from Paris say wounded soldiers and couriers are arriving there from the battlegrounds of the Aisne and the Oise so beplastered and encaked with mud that they are scarcely recognizable as human beings.

Both the Aisne and Oise have overflowed their banks and the continual downfall of rain has so bemired the fields of battle that the troops are often knee deep, so that brilliant charges are impossible.

Further to the east on the allies' left, north of the Aisne and in the Craonne district, severe fighting has continued and the French claim the Germans have been repulsed at all points with heavy losses. In the absence of any official denial from Berlin such a claim must stand uncontested, though it is to be feared that the "heavy losses" will have to be applied to both sides.

A Difficult Battlefield

The plateau of Craonne is one of the most difficult battlefields in the world. It was in this valley that, just a century ago, Blucher failed to check Napoleon. The plateau is of limestone formation which, under a heavy rainfall, churns up into a quagmire. The sides are as perpendicular as walls.

It would appear from the meagre Paris reports that the allies have succeeded in scaling these walls, and they now face the army of General von Buelow, which is ahead of them in great strength.

In the centre, in Champagne, which is the chosen spot of the French generals as their most advantageous ground for an advance, they appear to have made a little headway. Both in the open country of Champagne and on the western fringe of the forest of Argonne the tricolored flag has forged forward appreciably.

Successful Offensive Stroke

Among other achievements the French troops have recaptured the towns of Mesnil-les-Hurlus and Mesiges, which have been occupied by the Germans since the early days of the abortive "parade to Paris," and while this is by no means equivalent to the brilliant advance to the heights of Lassigny on the west, it is still another encourager, in that it is a successfully offensive stroke.

To sum up, Monday was a day of cheer and hope to the allies, and although the great battle of the Aisne is far from settled, there is at least a preponderance of advantage in favor of Germany's opponents.

With the whole world ringing with indignation over the magnified repetition of Louvain, German troops from the heights around the ancient city have continued to pour shot and shell into defenseless Rheims. The French still hold the city itself, but have succeeded in seizing only one of the surrounding defensive positions—the hill of La Pompelle.

Undaunted by Perils

Reckless fighting has characterized the recent fighting along the Aisne, according to all dispatches. Though the men are worn from long vigils and exposure to terrific weather, and are forced to sleep in trenches filled with water, they appear to have lost none of their spirit.

In repeated attacks the allies crept little by little to the German lines, under cover of their artillery. Then, when the proper distance had been attained, the order to charge was given. Many times, it is said, the allies have not even seen their opponents until they were practically upon them.

Because of the greater length of their bayonets, the allies are said to have had the advantage in these hand-to-hand encounters. Greater care appears to be taken now to conserve the lives of the men than in the early days of the war, but nevertheless it is predicted that the losses in the battle, which hasbeen steadily the battle, which has been steadily fought for ten days, will be stagger-

The German emperor has taken up his quarters in Luxembourg, according to a Paris dispatch. Thousands of troops are stationed around the legation where he resides. To guard against possible raids by French aviators a squadron of French aeroplanes is in constant readiness to beat off attacks.

RIVER SEINE IN PARIS.

FLEEING FROM BERLIN

Five Hundred Refugees, Most of Them Stranded, Arrive In London

The fears expressed that when the news of the German reverses should spread in Germany there will be another stampede of Americans and quasi-Americans proved well-founded when 500 refugees arrived in London. Seventy-five percent of them were absolutely destitute. The majority came from Berlin, the remainder from Frankfort.

All report that the truth of the German retreat and reverses is now being learned. It is impossible, they say, to buy bread and other foodstuffs in Berlin.

The exodus is only the beginning. Those who arrived have been located in business in Germany for some years and naturally wanted to remain as long as possible. Now they seem to think the sooner they get away the better.

LOYAL TO THE ALLIES

Armistice Proposal of the Germans Is Spurned by Belgians

A dispatch from Antwerp declares that the armistice proposal made by Germany to Belgium provided that the civil government in all Belgian towns should be immediately resumed by Belgium and the German occupation of these towns be discontinued, on condition that communication with the Germans in France be not interfered with.

Belgium refused to agree, saying to do so would be disloyal to the allies.

PROMISES "NEUTRALITY"

King George II. Has at Last Heard of the War In Europe

It was only a few days ago that one of the kings of the world learned of the European war. Only when a sailing vessel from Auckland arrived at port in the Tonga, or Friendly islands, did King George II. of that tiny domain know that eight nations are at each others' throats.

King George II. immediately announced to King George V. that he would "maintain his neutrality." King George II. rules over 23,000 odd subjects.

WANTON DEED OF INVADERS

Rheims Cathedral a Shining Mark For Destruction

SHELTERED GERMAN WOUNDED

Bombardment by Kaiser's Troops Set Fire to Straw Upon Which Prisoners From Own Army Lay—France Protests to World Against "Revolting Act of Vandalism"

London, Sept. 22.—The Rheims correspondent of The Daily Mail sends this story of the damage wrought in the cathedral there:

The magnificent cathedral of Rheims, which was a national monument of universal fame, is now no more than an empty shell of charred and blackened walls. It is not yet known to what extent its stone work has been weakened by the flames or whether it can later be restored, but it will never be what it was before.

The fire started between 4 and 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon after shells had been crashing into the town all day. More than 500 fell between early morning and sunset. A quarter of the city, several hundred yards square, was set afire, the flames spreading from street to street.

The cathedral had been turned into a hospital for the German wounded so as to secure for the building the protection of the Red Cross flag. When the first shell struck the roof everyone believed it was merely a stray shot, but later in the day a German battery on a hill four miles away began making the great Gothic pile its particular target.

Shell after shell crashed its way into the old masonry and stonework that had stood the storms of centuries, or fell into the deserted streets round about. At 4:30 some scaffolding around on the east end of the cathedral where repairs were going on caught fire and soon the whole network of poles and planks was ablaze. Then the roof of old oak timbers caught fire and soon the ceilings of the nave and transepts were a roaring furnace.

The blazing piers of carved woodwork crashed to the floor where piles of straw had been gathered in connection with the work of the field hospital. As soon as this caught fire the panelling of the altars, the chairs and other furniture were devoured.

The German wounded would have been burned alive if the French doctors had not removed them at great personal risk. There was a bad moment while these German wounded were being removed. A crowd of people had gathered outside watching the flames, and when the Germans were brought from the transept door the crowd gave a howl of uncontrollable rage and earnest voices screamed "Kill them." Some of the soldiers in the crowd actually levelled their rifles to dispatch the Germans, when Abbe Andieux sprang between the Germans and the rifles.

"Don't fire," he said. "You would make yourselves as guilty as they are."

The crowd calmed somewhat and the Germans were carried into the shelter of the museum amid hoots and threats.

While the bombardment proceeded and despite the danger from bursting shells, residents of Rheims ventured in the open, alternating the curses called down upon the Germans with prayers that the bombardment might cease and the cathedral yet be spared. But spires came crashing down while long tongues of flames licked their way along old massive beams of carved wood. Where the feet of worshippers had trod for centuries, flames leaped and age-old stones rolled from their places.

PROTEST OF FRANCE

Cathedral Ruined by Germans For Mere Pleasure of Destruction

French Ambassador Jusserand presented the following protest of his government to the state department at Washington and personally read it to Secretary Bryan:

"Without being able to invoke even the appearance of military necessity, and for the mere pleasure of destruction, German troops have subjected the cathedral of Rheims to a systematic and furious bombardment. At this hour the famous basilica is but a heap of ruins.

"It is the duty of the government of this republic to denounce to universal indignation this revolting act of vandalism which, in giving over to the flames this sanctuary of history, deprives humanity of an incomparable portion of its historic patrimony."

POPE'S WARNING TO KAISER

Says Destruction of Cathedral Cries For God's Revenge

The pope has sent a dispatch to the kaiser protesting against the ruthless destruction of the cathedral at Rheims.

Pope Benedict says this crime cries for God's revenge and warns the kaiser lest the destruction of God's temples provokes the anger of God, against which the most powerful armies are powerless.

The pope has sent a similar telegram to Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, urging him as a Catholic sovereign to defend his religion.

CITY COUNCIL

sion cables attached to these poles made it dangerous. It intended, when the relocation was built, to use poles of other companies so that the number of poles on the street would be less than now.

The branch off Sea street was to reach a sand pit so that the company could obtain sand and gravel for track work.

There was no opposition and the hearings closed and the orders were recommitted.

GAS EXTENSIONS.

A hearing was held at 8.20 on petition of the Gas Co. for location for mains on Grove street and Adams street. General Manager Nichols stated that on Grove street the company wanted to supply gas to 25 petitioners for gas, and on Adams street it was to reinforce mains.

In reply to questions as to why Grove street pipes were not laid before the street was repaired, Mr. Nichols stated that as soon as he knew the street was to be repaired he petitioned, and that his petition was in some time before work was commenced.

Question asked the Commissioner by Councilmen Little and others brought out the fact that a request to hold up the work on the street had been made but had not been granted.

Mr. Nichols stated that his company wanted the city to feel that it could order it to put its pipes in any street that was to be rebuilt or repaired, before the work was done. He thought the city could order the mains in and then the location could later be confirmed by the Council. In reply to questions about the streets that were being built this year Mr. Nichols said that the company's mains were all in.

Hearing closed and order recommited.

A recess was taken for ten minutes while the Street Committee held a meeting.

LICENSES.

Several applications for minor licenses were received and referred.

The Committee on Licenses reported an order granting a numbr of minor licenses which were adopted.

The same committee reported giving the following applications for licenses leave to withdraw: Pool table David Kouri; Common victualler, W. H. Hines; Sunday fruit, Carl A. Brogren and E. & N. Tully. Report accepted.

WARD TWO SCHOOL LOT.

The Committee on Public Buildings reported an order for $5,265 for the purchase of 84,541 square feet of land on Lancaster, Alden and Lowe streets for a school lot. Referred to Finance Committee.

The lot in question is situated on what was once known as the Paul Wild estate off Washington street. The estate has been more recently known as the Lowe place and is now owned by the Northern Land Co. Some of the streets as laid out will be closed.

Councilman Craig asked the City Engineer which school lot would be the cheapest to reach with a street and how much it would cost for sewer connections. City Engineer Sargent said he could not tell. It depended upon where the streets were located.

GAS EXTENSIONS.

The Committee on Streets reported an order granting the Gas Co., a location for mains on Grove and Adams streets. Ordered to a second reading.

TRACK LOCATION.

The same committee reported orders granting the Bay State St. Ry. Co., a relocation for its tracks on Hancock street, and a location for a branch off Sea street. Ordered to a second reading.

CITY HALL CLERKS.

Under motions, etc., Councilman Ross offered an order that the City auditors furnish the City Council with a list of the permanent clerks at City Hall who had received more salary than stated in the budget, the amount of extra pay received, what appropriation it was charged to, and what work was performed for the extra compensation. Order adopted.

FIRE ALARM BOX.

Councilman Carlson offered an order for $50 for a fire alarm box on the corner of Faxon road and Hollis avenue. Referred to Committee on Fire Department.

WOULD BUILD FENCE.

Councilman Carlson offered an order for $1,000 for building an iron fence about the dump and old quarry hole between Billings road and Warwick street. Referred to Finance Committee.

MORE LIGHT.

Councilman Craig offered an order for three street lights on Faxon Park road. Referred to Executive.

SIDEWALK ORDER.

Councilman Corcoran offered an order reimbursing Shirley F. Nutting half cost of granolithic sidewalk built in front of his premises on Copeland street. Referred to Finance Committee.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

President Whiton announced the appointment of Councilmen Thompson, Ross and Gilliatt as the special committee provided for in the Woodward ordinance, to investigate the Woodward Fund and Property.

Adjourned at 9.11 until Oct. 5.

THE BROCKTON FAIR.

Beachey, the world's most famous aviator, will fly upside down, loop-the-loop and do all the stunts that have gained him fame, every day at the Brockton Fair, rain or shine. This will be Beachey's first appearance at any fair in New England and notwithstanding the expense of this single attraction the show itself will be bigger than ever. The sum of $60,000 is provided for purses and special attractions. The horse show, stage show, athletic meet, firemen's muster, cattle, poultry and hall exhibits will all be bigger than ever. The trot and pacing purses amount to $15,500 and the field of entries is a large one. Tuesday, September 29, all children, not over sixteen years of age, will be admitted free, and a special program will be provided for their entertainment.

FIRST CHURCH BULLETIN

Notifies Public of Tombs of the Quincy Presidents

The bulletin board on the First Church grounds, of which previous mention has been made, was put in position Monday. The board is a very attractive affair and was designed by Albert H. Wright, architect, and is of a similar design as the front of the church. It sets on a solid cement foundation, the base being sprinkled with granite dust to give it the appearance of granite. The board itself is also sprinkled with granite dust, so that the whole resembles granite.

The lettering on the board at the present time is in gilt, but as this is hard to read at any distance, especially when the sun shines on it, the color of the letters will probably be changed to black.

The lettering of the board is as follows:

FIRST PARISH CHURCH.
Unitarian
Founded in 1639
Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson
Minister
Sunday morning 10.30
Sunday School, 12 noon.

Space for Bulletins.

Sexton A. W. Walker, 36 Whitney road, Tel. Con.

Beneath this church are the tombs of John Adams and John Quincy Adams.

Between the two inscriptions is a space in which special weekly announcements may be made. The grounds about the board, along Hancock street have been regraded, and another spring it is planned to regrade the entire grounds and make them a beauty spot.

ITALIAN RESERVISTS OFF

A detachment of 43 Italian reservists left Quincy Monday morning for the New England headquarters in Boston, and they are now on their way to Italy where preparations are being made to enter the European conflict.

The detachment is the second sent out by this city within three days, the first company of 31 going last Thursday.

All were recruited by Arnaldo DiNicola of Canal street, who while in the Italian army held the post of telegrapher with the rank of sergeant.

When they boarded the train at the Quincy station there was a most affecting scene. Wives, families and sweethearts were present to give them their blessing. As the train left the station there was a general waving of small Italian flags to the accompaniment of cheers.

CLUBHOUSE FOR ATLANTIC

About 100 citizens gathered in Atlantic on Monday evening for the purpose of promoting the establishment of the Atlantic Club in the city. Welcome G. Young, chairman of the general committee, presided.

Interesting addresses on the clubhouse question were delivered by Harvey N. Atwood, president of the Wellington Improvement Association of Medford, and Linwood L. Ramsdell, clerk and secretary of that association. E. C. Reed of Atlantic also spoke.

The need of a club is an accepted fact and the enthusiasm which prevailed at the meeting spells undoubted success for the project. The sale of shares more than justifies the belief that there is a popular demand for such an organization. A collation and cigars were served at the close of the meeting.

As in the case of the Sachem and similar clubs, it is planned to form a corporation, so that members of the club may become stockholders by subscribing for shares. It will be arranged however so that shareholders will not be personally responsible for the debts of the club.

The subject has been under discussion for some time, and has now reached a point where it has been figured out that the club will be put on a paying basis when the yearly income amounts to $750 in addition to the receipts for dues. Pledges are now being taken, and it has been announced that unless the sum of $500 is pledged before Nov. 1, all pledges will be declared null and void.

Many of the residents of Atlantic will recall the men's club which flourished in Atlantic a few years ago. Their rooms were located in the Music hall block and many social events were held under its auspices.

DR. J. H. ASH ALSO DECLINES

Will Not Be a Candidate For Mayor This Year

Yielding to the requests of his family, Dr. John H. Ash, who was expected to be a candidate for mayor on the Democratic ticket, authorized the announcement this morning that he would not enter the race this year.

His decision is in keeping with the wishes of his wife and family who requested his withdrawal several weeks ago.

This leaves the Democratic field open to Edward J. Fegan, the only candidate in sight. Beyond any question, however, he will have a contest on his hands if he remains, since an aggressive party man is expected to make a favorable announcement within a few days.

FOUND HIS STORY TRUE

"Love's young dream" had almost a rude awakening Monday when a police officer stepped into Thompson cafe and suggested that a young man who was dining with his two weeks bride accompany him to police headquarters and explain how he secured possession of a valuable diamond ring he had offered for sale at several jewelry stores.

The young man stepped into the police auto, leaving his bride behind. He claimed to live in Braintree and his story impressed Lieut. Hanson, who sent an officer to that town with him where the story was subsequently proven.

In the meantime his bride ambled to police headquarters to join her husband, only to learn he had departed. She boarded a Braintree car and met him at their home.

Because of the circumstances the names of the couple were withheld by the police.

WALL RALLY.

When in the fight I held my life as gone, for as to escaping all idea of that vanished when I saw the Twenty-second giving way and was obliged to ride between the fires of two lines not twenty yards apart. I expected death as much from our men as the enemy, and I was much singed by our fire, my whiskers twice or thrice so and my face peppered by fellows who in their fear fired high over all heads but mine and nearly scattered my brains. In agony I rode, holding my reins with a broken hand (he had sprained it a few days before) and quite unequal to a single combat had a Beloochee picked me out, as one was about to do when Marston slew him.—Letter of Sir Charles Napier.

TAXPAYERS WANT RELIEF

Propose a Public Meeting and a Protest

Many taxpayers, who find their tax bills larger although the tax rate is less, are looking for relief to Charles H. Johnson, the former chairman of the Board of Assessors. They recognize in him an expert on values and also on tax laws and are enquiring, what prospects there are for rebates. They desire a public meeting at City Hall where taxpayers may be heard ,and will probably petition the Mayor or Board of Assessors to hold such a meeting at an early date. They argue that if the valuations assessed are allowed to stand this year that they will continue in force for years to come. Houses which generally depreciate in value are valued higher than last year or ten years ago. A protest may be made to the Commisisoner of Taxation in Massachustts.

TEACHING IN SMALL CITIES

Comments by Bureau of Education at Washington

Washington, Sept. 11, 1914.

CITY SCHOOL CIRCULAR NO. 111.

Teaching Observed in Schools of the Smaller Cities.

(The following notes on the teaching observed in schools of the smaller cities are based on visits by the chief of the division of school administration of this Bureau to 40 cities of between 2,500 and 30,000 population during the school year 1913-14. While intended mainly for cities of this size, which present special problems, it is believed that the suggestions contained in this statement will be of interest for all city systems.)

In every city visited there were some exceptionally strong teachers. In several of the cities all of the teaching was of a very high order, especially in those cities where the superintendent is given perfect freedom in the selection and dismissal of teachers, and where salaries are such as to attract good teachers.

No definite data were collected regarding scholastic and professional training, but on a conservative estimate not more than one-third of the teachers in the elementary schools have graduated from a normal school. In a few cities all the elementary teachers are normal graduates, while in a few others none are. The tendency is, however, toward higher standards. Many superintendents would make the standards higher, but say that it is impossible to do so with the salaries the city is willing to pay.

Of the schools requiring professional training, some require two years in addition to a high school course; most of them only one. Professional training is not demanded of high-school teachers—only a college degree—and in a few instances not even that. Many high schools, because of low salaries, are compelled to employ men and women just fresh from college, many of whom have had no experience in teaching. On the whole those teachers who have had professional training for grade or high school work are doing better teaching. They are more resourceful and have a better understanding of the work they are doing.

Many teachers are failing because they are not using illustrative and supplemental material, such as reference books, newspapers, magazines, pictures, etc. Some say that they would illustrate and supplement more if they had the time, forgetting that this is the way they should use part of their time; others say that they would be happy if their pupils could only learn what is in the textbook.

Some teachers still require rules, definitions, and poems to be committed before any attempt is made to understand them. Many of those who attempt to use the development method are failing because they are training their pupils to guess, and because they do not clinch a principle or rule after it has been developed. Many pupils are weak because certain fundamental facts that are necessary for further advancement have not been drilled into the system to such an extent as to be used automatically.

Material wholly unsuited to a pupil's stage of development is often forced upon him. Much of the retardation is, no doubt, caused by having pupils swallow material that they can not digest and assimilate. Children in the primary grades often struggle over the solution of problems in arithmetic that belong to higher grades.

It is still true of most teachers that they talk too much. In many recitations not requiring much talking by the teacher three-fourths of the time is consumed in asking questions. Answers are pumped in driblets, the teacher using a dozen words in a question and the pupil one or two in his reply, thus destroying connected thought.

In too many classrooms no motive for study is provided. Manual training teachers often keep boys working at joints for weeks before giving them anything to join that will be of value. Much of the work in composition is based upon matter apart from the child's life and experience. In arithmetic few problems outside the textbook are given. In history and literature there is too little interpretation and too little appeal to the dramatic instinct and the power of visualizing.

Great as has been the improvement in methods of teaching reading, there is abundant opportunity for further improvement. Some schools are still making the teaching of reading a purely mechanical process, the pupils being required to learn a long list of words before they are permitted to look at a story. Sing-song concert work when teaching a list of words is destroying natural expression in not a few classrooms. The introduction of supplementary readers is having a most salutary effect on the reading in the primary grades. In several instances, however, the pupils skim over the supplementary readers without getting the thought. The poorest teaching of reading is in the intermediate and grammar grades. Reading should receive more attention than it does in these grades.

On the whole, schools in smaller cities are doing good work, but salaries are small, and standards of preparation for teachers low. It is only fair to say that some of the very best schools anywhere are in the smaller cities.

CATHOLIC FEDERATION.

Nearly 50 delegates will represent the Boston diocese at the Catholic Federation convention in Baltimore next week. Cardinal Gibbons will preach the sermon at the Pontifical mass which will open the convention.

Rev. Fr. James E. Stanton of Stoughton, chaplain of the Norfolk County branch, heads the delegation from here. Other delegates are Rev. Fr. F. A. Bogan of Cohasset Michael F. Powers of Stoughton and Peter B. Hart of Medway.

It is expected that the convention will be the langest ever held in the county and that the Boston diocese will figure prominently in the work accomplished.

BASKET BALL CHAMPIONS

Late Decision of Commission in Favor of Quincy A. A.

The senior basket ball team of the Quincy A. A. are New England champions for the third successive season, as a result of the finding made by the basket ball commission of the N. E. A. A. U. at its meeting Monday evening.

Quincy's position, according to William H. Flynn, manager and representative to the commission, has never been in doubt, although several on the commission claimed Quincy was not entitled to the honor.

The season closed ahead of time, with the local aggregation in the lead with a larger percentage of victories and less losses than any of the other combinations. To make the position doubly strong, however, claim was made for the forfeited games which were to have been overlooked providing the schedule had been completed.

The schedule closed suddenly and a cry went up in favor of some of the Boston teams. Manager William H. Flynn compiled sufficient data to prove his case and was prepared to make his fight from the floor, when William H. Cuddy, chairman of the commission, announced Quincy A. A. the victors.

Boston teams were dissatisfied in general, when in the early part of the season the local team gave every indications of copping the New England championship for the third successive time and according to the fans an attempt was made to jockey the Quincys out of the running.

An appropriation large enough to cover the cost of medals for the members of the team having been made President Al Lill of the New England body will make the arrangements immediately for their purchase and they will be forward to the players entitled to them by virtue of their season showing.

With the thermometer flirting with midsummer marks, the members of six teams of the Fore River bowling league met at the Coliseum alleys Monday evening for the third match of the schedule.

Incidentally Djerf, rolling with the Machine Gallery team smashed the existing single record, and set the new mark at 123. He also swept the three-string total of 292 one side and added three to it. Tirrell, anchor man on that team also smashed the single record, but did not close up with a string large enough to reap the glory. The team jumped the team total record mark to 1343.

The Purchasing Department boys were overwhelmingly defeated in their match with th Machine Gallery. In the first string they were behind 80 pins, 36 more in the second and 88 more at the finish. The match was the most decisive clean sweep of the season.

RAILROAD MEN ARRESTED

Said to Have Stolen Thousands of Dollars' Worth of Goods

Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 22.—Eight men employed by the Boston and Maine railroad were arrested here, charged with robbing freight trains. The railroad officials claim that losses by theft amounting to many thousand dollars have been reported during the past few months.

Five of the men, charged with breaking and entering and larceny, were held in $500 each for the superior court. Three others were charged with petty larceny. One was fined $35 and two were assessed $15 each.

Goods valued at more than $1000 were taken from the homes of some of the men in court.

FIVE YEARS FOR GONDORF

"Influence" of King of Wire Tappers Failed to Materialize

New York, Sept. 22.—Charles Gondorf, "king of the wire tappers," and two of his gang were sent to state prison for swindling Eugene Adams out of $4650 in a fake pool room.

Gondorf had boasted that he had influence sufficient to result in his acquittal. He was given a sentence of from five to ten years in prison. His two associates, Charles Corbonell and Joseph Cohen, entered pleas of guilty. Corbonell was sentenced to serve from two to six years and Cohen from one to three years.

Incident Important as Establishing a Precedent.

ATTITUDE OF PLAYERS.

President of the Fraternity Says Apparent Effort Was Made to Break the Agreement Between Magnates and Athletes—Threat of Strike Caused Prompt Action.

The hullabaloo created a few weeks ago over the case of First Baseman Kraft, a wrangle that caused a threat of a strike of baseball players, has ended. Kraft is again playing with the Newark team of the International league, and the incident seems to be closed. It was important not because of the importance of Kraft, but because it established a precedent and because its ending was generally considered to be a victory for the Baseball Players' fraternity.

Kraft case for the players, has recently made the following explanation of the matter:

"Kraft was a major league player belonging to Brooklyn. Brooklyn secured major league waivers and sent him to Newark, an AA classification club. There Kraft signed an absolutely binding contract for the remainder of the season. The national commission then interposed, nullified the Newark contract and ordered the player, by virtue of an old section of the national agreement, which had been superseded by our agreement, to report to Nashville, where his salary would be cut $150 per month. We immediately questioned the justice of the decision.

"After attempting for five weeks to have it reversed, during which time the player was suspended without pay, and after sending, without avail, a statement of the case to the president of every club in the National, American and International leagues we found ourselves in a position where we either had to fight or quit. The successful player is essentially a scrapper—that is one of the first requisites of an athlete. It is a foregone conclusion what he will do. Inspired by the feeling expressed by Benjamin Franklin in the words, 'Gentlemen, we must all hang together or we will all hang separately,' the boys, with the exception of two teams, gave their unquestioned allegiance to the fraternity. The result is well known.

"Kraft had been represented as so puffed up over his notoriety that he demanded an exorbitant salary when transferred to the New York team. On the contrary, Kraft is a modest, earnest, conscientious young man, who has many times expressed regret at causing such an upheaval. He was, we frankly admit, acting under our advice in the New York transaction. This transaction never looked good to us. New York had no need of Kraft. Then why the purchase? Naturally we 'played them safe.' The negotiation never reached the salary question.

"Kraft's Newark contract, as before stated, was binding on both parties for the season of 1914. Mr. Farrell refused to allow the insertion of certain words which would have made the New York one of the same nature. Naturally Kraft would not put himself in a position where he could be released the next day. We hardly think he was dictatorial in this, as he has been accused of being; he was simply cautious. He might have made himself and the fraternity the laughing stock of the whole sporting world had he run into such an ambush."

Successful Filibuster Against the Rivers and Harbors Bill

Washington, Sept. 22.—Revolting against party leadership, sixteen Democratic senators accomplished the overthrow of the rivers and harbors appropriation bill and crowned with victory a filibuster against the measure directed by Senator Burton of Ohio.

The senate, by a vote of 27 to 22, ended the struggle over the $34,000,000 bill by adopting a motion to recommit the bill to the commerce committee with instructions that it substitute a measure appropriating a lump sum of $20,000,000 to be expended on existing waterway projects in the discretion of the secretary of war and the board of army engineers.

BATTLE ALONG ENTIRE FRONT

Third Engagement In Galicia Is of Great Magnitude

AUSTRIAN LOSSES STAGGERING

Speed of Russian Advance Causes Retreat of Enemy Without Many Guns—Jaroslav Occupied by Invaders After Town Is Evacuated by Austrians, Who Set It on Fire

Petrograd, Sept. 22.—Two million men are engaged in the third general engagement in Galicia. Russian forces, re-enforced by fresh troops and fired with victories in the occupation of Jaroslav, Sambor, Grodek and Dubiecko, are fighting along the entire Austrian front, on the line from Cracow to Przemysl. General Dankl's army has been forced still farther backward.

Przemysl is now being bombarded with heavy Russian siege guns, but so far withstands the attack, and an artillery duel is in progress in which the casualties are very heavy.

The general Russian advance follows the eight days' fighting culminating in the capture of Lemburg and the nine days' fighting around Rawa Ruska. Siege guns used in the assault on those positions have been put into emplacements around Przemysl. Meanwhile the cavalry and infantry, supported by quick firers and the smaller artillery pieces, are with the forefront of the Russian advance.

A supreme attempt is to be made to annihilate the Austrian armies of Dankl and von Auffenberg, the first move in which is the endeavor to cut Dankl's forces off.

The Austrian losses have been staggering. The weather continues cold, with rain and sleet. The speed of the Russian advance has forced the enemy to retreat without many of their guns, which are mired in the swamps and roads, many of which are inches deep in mud.

A daring night attack, the culmination of a day's bombardment, overwhelmed the Austrian defenders of Dubiecko, on the San, and the Russian forces captured thousands of prisoners and a score or more of guns, together with large quantities of supplies left behind by the Austrians.

"Przemysl is now under attack from three separate directions," a Russian war office statement declares. "The bombardment is continuing with our forces steadily advancing on the outer intrenchments. Grodeck, on the east of Przemysl, has been occupied; Sambor, to the south, has fallen before our armies, and we have established a line of further communication on the west through the capture of Dubiecko. The retreating Austrian forces burned Jaroslav before their evacuation."

Official denial that General Martos had been instructed to burn all German villages in East Prussia, or that he had ever issued such instructions to his forces, was made by the war office. This is in reply to Berlin statements that Martos, captured in one of the engagements along the river San, had been tried by court-martial on such charges.

The war office threatens stern reprisals on German and Austrian prisoners if the verdict in the Martos courtmartial is one of death. Great indignation is expressed in official circles over reports that Martos was degraded in being forced to travel handcuffed to a German private soldier and exhibited all along the road to Berlin.

Evacuation of Jaroslav by Austrian forces was accomplished because of a desire to concentrate forces for defense of Przemysl, according to Austrian war office statements.

"Our battle line in Galicia has never been stronger," the statement declares. "The new battle line from Przemysl to Cracow is engaged. For strategic reasons our forces have retreated slightly along this line, in order to occupy stronger positions. The evacuation of Jaroslav was deliberate, the city having lost its strategic importance. The city was fired on our leaving it."

The Wooden Soldier

How He Drew the Enemy's Fire by Lighting His Pipe.

By CAPTAIN F. A. MITCHEL

In Virginia in 1862 a Federal captain was standing on a rise in the ground looking down a turnpike which extended through a depression and, rising again, entered a small town half a mile away. Hearing horses' hoofs behind him, he turned and saw his general, attended by his staff, riding toward him.

"Turn out the guard, the general commanding!" cried the picket.

"Never mind the guard," said the general and, riding to the point where the captain had been standing, looked at the town beyond with wistful eye, then said to his subordinate:

"Captain, how many men are there in your picket post?"

"There are thirty under my command distributed over a quarter of a mile. But right here I have eight men and a sergeant."

"Have you seen any indications of the enemy in the town?"

"None whatever."

The general turned away with evident reluctance.

"I wish you," he said, "to keep a sharp lookout for the Confederates there. The place is of great strategic importance to us in this campaign. By tomorrow morning General D.'s brigade will come up and, provided the enemy has not already done so, will occupy the town. I am hoping that he will be in time, for the fate of this campaign rests with that position. If the enemy comes in there tonight he will fortify it and we shall not be able to drive him out without a hard fight, which in our present condition would not be practicable. Keep a sharp lookout and keep me advised."

"May I not advance my post to the town, general?"

"No; that would involve an advance of the entire picket line."

The general rode away. Private Tom Bixby, who had been standing at attention beside the road and had heard what had been said, dropped the butt of his musket on the ground and resumed the position of a picket on the lookout. The rest of the afternoon his mind was on the town and the question which side would get there first. At sunset he was relieved and ate his supper. Then, lighting his pipe, he sat down on the ridge and smoked and looked for signs of soldiers in the town on the other side of the valley. When it was dark he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, went to his captain and, saluting respectfully, said:

"Captain, it seems to me that, considering we can't see what's going on in the dark, some one should reconnoiter."

"You may go if you choose."

"All right. I'll just walk down the road and up the other side of the valley, near enough to see if there is any stir, and if there is I'll come back and let you know."

Tom sauntered away into the darkness. On reaching the edge of the town he saw citizens moving about, but no soldiers. The people went to bed early, and when everything was quiet Tom made an entry. Passing a shop under a sign "Otto Schmitt, Tobacconist," Tom, thinking it a good opportunity to replenish his stock of tobacco, went inside. After buying what he wanted he fell into conversation with the proprietor, who, being a German, had no especial affiliation with the Confederate cause. Before the shop stood the figure of a man lighting his pipe. Schmitt, who was an ingenious mechanic, had made it himself for a sign. With one hand the figure held the pipe, while in the other was a match. In the pipe bowl was tobacco. A rubber tube led from the pipestem into the store. Schmitt by pulling on a wire could light the match and smoke from the shop. Tom noticed the mechanism near the shop window and asked what it was. Schmitt not only explained it to him, but put it in operation.

An idea popped into Tom's brain. If he had that figure and connections on the side of the town from which the Confederates would approach possibly he might make them believe that the Federals had got ahead of them and had occupied the town. He took Schmitt into his confidence and told him that if he would lend him his sign and help him carry it to a new location he thought the Federal general might pay him very handsomely—that is, if the ruse succeeded.

Schmitt hesitated. Most of the citizens of the place were Confederate sympathizers, and he feared that if his act became known he would suffer for it. But Tom assured him that if the town was occupied by the Confederates at daylight the Federals would surely enter it in force, and the hope of profit won him over. He shut up his shop, put out the lights, and an hour later, when not a footstep was to be heard on the street, he and Tom carried the figure to the road by which the Confederates would be likely to advance. Reaching an eminence on which a picket could be seen from a distance, they set up the dummy in the middle of the road. Tom could not take off its Confederate uniform, but he could put his own over it, which he did, and rested his musket in the hollow of the arm holding the pipe.

Schmitt meanwhile was making the attachments, filling the pipe and leading the tube to a convenient place of concealment, behind which he had Tom took position and waited.

It was 11 o'clock when they set up the dummy. A wagon passed into the town a half hour later, but Tom and his assistant heard it coming in time to remove the figure and set it up again as soon as the team was gone. This was the only interruption that occurred. At 1 o'clock Tom heard a distant sound like the rumbling of artillery over a bridge. The wind being from the south, the sound very faint and Tom's hearing acute, he judged that whoever was crossing the bridge was miles away. He wished he could be in two places at once. He would have liked to go back and hurry up the Federals who were coming and remain where he was at the same time.

In another hour the sounds of an approaching force were unmistakable, and not much later the tramp of men was audible. Then down the road Tom heard an officer order skirmishers to deploy, covering the road and each side of it.

"Light up," said Tom to Schmitt.

There was a tiny flash, which rose and fell as Schmitt pulled on the tube, while clouds of tobacco smoke rose from the pipe. There was just light enough to reveal the figure to those advancing without their being able to see that it was a dummy.

There was a crack, and a bullet jarred the wooden soldier.

"Stop smoking," whispered Tom, and, screened by the darkness, he ran to the figure, which still stood bravely on its feet, and, seizing the musket, fired a shot that went singing down the road. Then, drawing his revolver, he fired three shots in quick succession.

"What's that for?" asked Schmitt.

"They'll think it a signal for our troops in the town to warn them that the enemy is coming. They won't dare come on against an unknown force. My opinion is that if our troops come up before the enemy can see that there's no one here except three men, one of them a dummy, we've won. You can't do anything more here. Suppose you go down the road on the other side of the town and hurry up whoever is coming. If this game succeeds you'll be well paid, I'm sure."

Schmitt set off through the town, having little over half a mile to go to reach the Union picket post.

It was now about an hour before dawn. Tom kept his position on the ridge, from which he sent an occasional shot, always changing his position between shots to make the enemy believe that they were fired by different men. The fire was not returned, for the enemy could see no one to fire at. They were very quiet. Tom's fear was that they were moving around to push forward on his flank, where they would not meet with any opposition whatever, and the fact that the town was unoccupied would be apparent.

For the greater part of an hour Tom stood between the Confederates and the town. He was within sound of the troops below and could hear the usual noises made by soldiers on the march, halted while the commanding officer deliberated as to what he should do. That was the longest hour Tom ever spent in his life. Every minute he expected to hear the command "Forward!" given and to see through the darkness a dim mass coming up the road. His imagination served him many a trick. At one time a stump appeared to be a Confederate standing with his musket to his shoulder; at another he was sure that he heard the tramp of men coming nearer and nearer.

But all these proved to be nothing but scares. The Confederate commander was not minded to walk into a death trap that he could not see.

In some twenty minutes after Schmitt left Tom he came near the picket post and made himself known. He was admitted to the lines and rushed to the general, not far distant, who, on hearing his story, ordered a regiment under arms instantly and pushed forward. In this he disobeyed an order of his superior, but took the risk. In less than fifteen minutes the men were marching toward the town and, under Schmitt's guidance, to the point held by Tom Bixby and his wooden support. Silently ranging themselves along the ridge on each side of the road, they waited the dawn and the coming of the brigade that was supposed to be advancing.

As soon as it was light enough to see the enemy he was discerned drawn up in line of battle at the foot of a declivity. An officer on horseback in the middle of the road was looking up through a pair of glasses. But he could see few of the Federals, for their colonel had posted the men where they would be concealed. However, he made himself known to the Confederates, who withdrew out of range.

Before sunrise the tramp of men was heard in the town, and it was evident to those at the front that the expected brigade had arrived. They had no sooner been distributed at the weaker points when the general commanding the Confederates ordered a part of his force to feel them to determine their strength. After some desultory firing, becoming convinced that the town was occupied by a force strong enough to hold it against him, he withdrew his army.

When all was over the Federal general rode out to inspect Tom Bixby's Quaker soldier. Never before was an officer more delighted. The desired result had been accomplished and he had been vindicated in disobeying orders. He asked Tom what he could do for him, and Tom told him whatever he did must be for Schmitt, whose tobacco sign had won.

Tom was given a commission, and Schmitt was appointed to a sutlership, which he found very profitable.

TINSEL EFFECTS POPULAR.

Spangles and Metallic Laces on Elegant New Evening Gowns.

WHITE CRAPE EVENING GOWN.

Spangles and metallic laces are featured for popularity this season. Paris has accorded them high favor in the designing of evening gowns. The model illustrated is of white tango crape, the skirt draped to form a slash and trimmed with two rippled flounces of spangled net. The bodice is of black tulle with long flowing drapery.

THE ICE SUPPLY.

Economy In Buying an Ample Quantity For the Refrigerator.

Ice is not a cleanly product in spite of its crystal clearness. It collects dust and germs on its travels. If it is not possible to wash it on the back porch, set it in the sink and dash cold water over it so that it may go into the ice box as clean as possible. Remember that it is a saving to keep the ice chamber of the refrigerator full.

A good big piece three times a week is much more economical, both in regard to the degree of coldness maintained and the amount of ice required, than a piece every day.

Never put foods in the ice chamber. It is the very warmest part of the refrigerator, and the presence of food, either lying upon or standing against the ice, causes it to melt more rapidly.

The only exception to this rule may be in the case of a vegetable which is wanted very crisp, as salad, etc.; then we must accept the extra melting. Very carefully wash the lettuce or parsley, cress or celery, wrap it in oiled paper and lay on the ice for a couple of hours.

EVENING SLIPPERS.

Extreme Elegance Is This Season's Footwear For Smart Women.

Much importance is attached to the elegance of the footwear donned with evening costumes. Illustrated here one sees the latest novelty in evening slippers in black satin with embroidery of silver metal threads, clear crystal beads and rhinestone brilliants. It emphasizes the fondness for black and white effects by use of white crystal beads and jet in combination. Much importance is attached to decorative footwear in Paris. This model is shown in vivid shades of satin matching the dress. With these slippers are stockings in fine black silk duplicating the pattern of embroidery on the slippers.

SATIN EVENING SLIPPERS.

Hand Mirror Case.

For the woman who travels a hand mirror case will be a convenience. It is made of heavy cardboard lined with cotton flannel and covered with cretonne and bound with gold galloon. The two sections are caught together all around the handle and part way up the sides of the round part of the glass, then left open so that the glass may be slipped in. Ribbon ties at the end hold it in place.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

STATE CAUCUSES

been thoroughly covered by the candidates at large, while the fourteenth congressional, second councillor, first Norfolk senatorial and local Representatives districts have not been neglected.

Locally, outside of Congressman, where it is expected that every Republican voter in the city will cast his ballot for Frank Fessenden Crane, the local candidate, the interest seems to centre in the contest in the Fifth Representative district. Here there are three candidates seeking the Republican nomination, Councilman Charles A. Ericson of Ward One, Albert T. Whitman of Ward Two and Councilman Otto Gelotte of Ward Three.

All three candidates have been doing some tall hustling during the past two weeks, and each claims that he is sure to win. Which of the three is right in his claim will be known later tonight.

The day is an ideal one for the primaries and with the contests there should be a large vote polled.

IN WARD ONE.

Voting was light in Ward One during the first hour's voting, for during that time but 23 exercised their right of franchise. Outside of City Hall, things were also quiet and there was an absence of the usual members of ward committees rounding up voters. However it is expected that these lieutenants will get busy late in the afternoon and the grand rush is expected during the evening hours.

AT QUINCY POINT.

In Ward Two, the Quincy Point district, the home of A. L. Whitman, who is styled the live wire and safety first candidate for representative, a warm campaign is being waged by him to get out voters, and as a result a good sized Republican vote is anticipated. The Democratic vote, however, is not expected to be particularly large for the reason that many o the enrolled Democrats, who were employed at the Fore River, have left town within the past month. This ward is also the home of Frank Fessenden Crane, who is seeking the nomination for Congressman, and the ward is expected to stand by him and give him a good vote.

AT SOUTH QUINCY.

Less than half a dozen votes were polled at Ward Thre in the first hour, but all signs point to a merry fight.

The forces of Otto Gelotte already claim victory over the Ericson and Whitman forces. Representative Michael T. Sullivan may be given the Progressive party nomination, stickers being out in quantities. It is said that Charles Ericson is also making a play for that nomination, but his stickers hadn't appeared at noon.

Representative Sullivan may be given the Progressive party endorsement if the sentiments expressed at a recent committee are unchanged. The Republicans however are planning on jumping into that fight for their candidate.

AT WEST QUINCY.

The voters of Ward Four the West Quincy ward, are voting at todays state primaries at St. Mary's hall which aside from being more commodious than the Hose house is on the line of the street cars, thus making it easy of access by voters at the outlying sections of the ward. This is the Democratic stronghold of the city, and a large Democratic vote is expected, although not as large as usual for they have no local contests.

This is likewise true of the Republicans for they only have contests on the head of the ticket. This means that Ward Four will give both Councilman Corcoran, the Democratic candidate for Representative, and Representative Sandberg the Republican candidate who is seeking re-nomination, a good vote

It is rumored that stickers are out for a well known Democrat for County Commissioner, although as yet they have not been put in circulation and the name of the man is not generally known.

AT WOLLASTON.

The voting in Ward Five showed about its usual caucus strength at 1 o'clock. In this ward many of the voters who are employed in the industries in this ward exercised their rights and had their little say. However many of the voters are in business in Boston, and they are not expected to be hard from until returning from work this evening. Ward Five was the hot bed of the Progressives in this city and a good sized Progressive vote is expected although even this vote is expected to show a large falling off from the years when the party was at its zenith

AT ATLANTIC.

In Ward Six, as in the other residential wards of the city, the full strength of the vote is not expected to make its appearance until this evening when the business men return from work, and even then a large vote is not expected. There is no local contest for Senator or Representative among the Republicans or Democrats, and the contests in state officers is not expected to develop much of anything in the way of a rush. A light vote therefore is predicted for the ward.

The election of the following candidates is assured as they have no contests:

PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

The gradual merging of the Progressive with the Republicans in this city resulted in the inactivity of ward Committees, and the consequent vacancies in several of their committee slates. Those filed are:

Delegates to state convention—Carl W. Sherburne, Samuel G. Melville, Joseph A. Harrow, from Ward Two; William E. Hingston, John H. Whitehead, Rodney P. Gallagher from Ward Five; William E. Barnes, Welcome G. Young and Levi T. Parlee from Ward Six.

The Democrats elect 20 on their ward committee, the Republicans 9, and the Progressives any number.

PUT SIDEWALK AROUND CHURCH

Editor Daily Ledger:
Today I walked over the new sidewalk in front of City Hall and the Hancock Cemetery. It is a great improvement to City Square. It was a good piece of work and a credit to the builder of it, Henry Lavelle of Wollaston. It makes us blush with shame for the condition of the sidewalk on the opposite side of the street around the Historic Temple and the tombs of two Presidents of the United States.

Now, Mr. Mayor, and Commissioner, get a "Boost on for Quincy" and set some curbing around it. If nothing better at first, give us a gravel walk.
Albert Keating.

Court Orders Second Payment of Trust Money to Thaw

Pittsburg, Sept. 22.—An order issued in orphans' court here provides for the payment to Harry K. Thaw of $142,124, due him from the trust created by the will of his father, William Thaw.

It was the second payment made to Thaw since last June, when he won his suit against the Fidelity Title and Trust company of Pittsburg, trustee, compelling it to pay him the money as it became due. At that time he received $160,780.

NEW PLOUFF WARRANT

Bank President Said to Have Stolen From Four Institutions

Boston, Sept. 22.—Another warrant, charging the larceny of $10,500 by means of false pretences from four Boston banks, is waiting to be served on Joseph A. Plouff, president of the Lafayette Savings bank of Boston, should he succeed in obtaining the $10,000 bail for lack of which he now is confined in jail.

The charge on which Plouff was arrested a week ago is the larceny in similar manner of $2000 from the Cosmopolitan Trust company.

HARVARDS STRONG MAN

"Tack" Hardwick of Quincy Beats All Rivals

Huntington R. (Tack) Hardwick, who lost the Harvard Strength record to Orin Kirkpatrick last winter, broke all existing records at the Hemenway Gymnasium Monday afternoon. In the test Hardwick made a total of 1381 points under the Sargent system of strength measurement, beating his rivals mark of 1349 which was the record. The tests were under the direction of Dr. Dudley A. Sargent, director.

The lung capacity of Hardwick is 290 cubic centimeters, and his strength of lungs was 25 kilograms. His strength of back was 300, of legs 510, of right forearm 70 and of left forearm 65. With his chest and upper arm muscles he scored 411. In the final part of the test he pushed his weight up between the paralel bars 26 times and pulled himself up on the horizontal bar the same number of times.

The points reckoned under the Sargent system by the following formula:

"The number of kilos lifted with the back and legs straight, and the number of kilos lifted with the legs bent, added to the strength of grip of the right and left hand, expiratory power, as tested by the manometer, and one tenth of the weight in kilos, multiplied by the number of times that the person can raise his weight by dipping between the paralel bars and pulling up to his chin on the rings.

"Tack" Hardwick is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick of Chestnut street. In addition to being Harvards strong man twice during his course he is considered the star end rush of the football team and a crack-a-jack base ball player, his hitting in the pinches bringing the university several of its most desired games.

Hardwick is a modest, retiring young man and in citizens clothes gives but little indication of his wondrful prowess. He has always been an out-of-door lad.

BICYCLIST HIT BY AUTO

John Bennett, 18 years of age, while riding his bicycle on Washington street, near the Post Office about 9.30 Monday evening was knocked down by an auto driven by Robert Gilmore of the Central garage.

The boy was taken to the Qiuncy City Hospital in the auto of William O'Neil, who was visiting his parents in the city. Dr. William J. McCausland, who is on service at the institution, was in Milton when the boy was brought in. While nurses were attempting to reach him by phone he casually dropped in on the way home.

He found Bennet had a contusion of the head and bruises on the face, hands and legs. His condition is not serious and he is resting comfortably this morning.

The bicycle was wrecked, the front wheel being demolished. It is said that Bennett was riding without lights and suddenly turned into the path of Gilmore's machine which picked him up on the mudguard.

Howard also carried the towns of Rockland, Abington, Avon, Braintree, East Bridgewater, Easton, Holbrook, Randolph, West Bridgewater and Whitman.

Robert L. Raymond of Milton was a good second, receiving pluralities in Milton, Canton, Dedham, Foxboro, Norwood, Sharon, Stoughton, Westwood and Weymouth.

Ward Two	34	127	8

CANDIDATE ERICSON.

BATES AFTER ALL NOMINATIONS

His Name May Be on All the Tickets

G. B. Bates, he of depression fame, has started in on his campaign for Mayor. This morning he took out a large number of nomination papers, which he put in circulation immediately. The papers taken out were Republican, Progressive and Democratic.

It is reported that James E. Wall of Houghs Neck is not to enter the city primaries, but will have his name placed on the official ballot for the municipal election by nomination papers.

DIVORCE PETITIONS.

Verna K. Carter of this city filed a libel for divorce at Dedham on Tuesday against Charles W. Carter of Boston, alleging desertion and neglect to support. They were married in this city Oct. 17, 1906, and lived here and in Boston. She asks the custody of a minor child.

Neglect to support is also alleged in the libel filed by Maud L. Flanders of Milton against her husband Clarence E. Flanders of Cambridge. They were married in Milton Feb. 21, 1912.

ERICSON WINS FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Quincy Gave Pluralities to Cushing, Langtry, Burrell, Cook, Higgins and Ham

Plurality in Quincy for Councillor Charles W. Guy

CRANE	886
RAYMOND	167
HOWARD	127
Blanks	89

Commodore Crane carried Quincy handsomely for the Republican nomination for Congress, but lost in the district by a plurality of 288.

In the Fifth Representative district the vote was:

ERICSON	324
WHITMAN	307
GELOTTE	232
Blanks	70

Quincy gave pluralities to Grafton D. Cushing, the successful nominee for lieutenant governor; to Albert P. Langtry, the successful candidate for secretary of state; to Charles L. Burrill, the successful candidate for state treasurer; to Alonzo B. Cook, the successful candidate for state auditor, to John J. Higgins for attorney general who was defeated by Henry C. Attwill; and to Guy Ham for councillor.

SENATOR LANGELIER.

The total vote at the State primaries in Quincy was 1509, of which the Democrats cast 167, the Progressives 61, and the Republicans 1281.

There were several close contsts among the Republicans which accounted for the Republican vote being so much larger. The Democrats had practically no contest outside of the Councillor vote.

Locally the main interest was in the nomination of Representative for Congress and Representative in the Fifth Norfolk district. Councilman Charles A. Ericson was a winner for the Legislature, his total vote of the district being 324 to 232 for Councilman Gelotte and 307 for A. L. Whitman.

During the evening unofficial returns from Wards Two and Three showed that Whitman was leading, but it remained for Ward One the home ward of Councilman Ericson to settle the contest. Ericson carried Ward One, defeating Whitman by 94 votes and Gelotte by 158 votes. Whitman carried Ward Two defeating Ericson by 93 votes and Gelotte by 127, while in Ward Three Gelotte carried the ward leading Ericson by 92 andWhitman by 137.

For Congress as was anticipated Frank F. Crane carried the city by a large plurality with Raymond as second man and Howard last. Commodore Crane carried every ward in the city his grand total being 886, while that of Raymond was 167 and Howard 127.

EDWARD J. SANDBERG

For Councillor Guy Ham carried the city by a majority of 685 votes over Bellamy.

In relation to the congressional vote it might be stated that in some of the wards of the city stickers were used for Col. Henry L. Kincaide. It was originally intended that they should be used by the Progrssives but in Ward Five Kincaide received Republican, 12 votes.

Of course there were numerous other contests on the Republican ticket. For Lieutenant Governor there were three candidates and the result was that Cushing carried the city with a total of 656 to 314 for Goetting and 160 for Stevens. For Secretary Langtry was an easy winner. For Treasurer Burrell received a total of 700 votes to 314 for Pierce. In contest for Auditor much to the surprise of many, in view of the contest that has been waged against Cook, he carried the city receiving a total of 793 to 225 for Monette.

There were five candidates seeking the nomination for Attorney-General and Higgins carrried the city defeating Attwill by 23 votes.

DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

The only contest on the Democratic ticket was for Councillor, where there were five candidates seeking the nomination headed by Charles W. Guy of Quincy who was a candidate for re-election. A year ago, Mr. Guy

When some other power has a big army, it is militarism; when you have it, it is self defence.

There is plenty of fruit to can now, but unfortunately it is the season for the bridge parties to begin.

Some of the European powers may find out that blood and iron is bitter medicine when they have to take it themselves.

As shoes are going to be higher, it does seem as if even an active boy might make a pair last three weeks.

If the United States were waging any such war, the women would have to go to work in the fields to pay pensions to the men.

WOMEN IN THE FIELDS.

One of the features of the news from Europe is the way in which the women of the warring countries have turned out in the fields to cultivate and harvest the crops, while the men are fighting. The sight of women doing farmwork in this country was once considered incongruous and primitive. In Europe it has always been common. The majority of the aliens who do servants' work in this country, no doubt used to hoe and rake and mow in the old country.

Of recent years, as foreign labor has come to the United States, it is not so unusual to see women doing farmwork. In many districts, as you go along a country road, you observe a baby carriage drawn up by the side of the way, in sight of the mother, who is laboriously helping her husband found the family fortunes.

Also many women of American descent have been learning during the past few years that there is an opening for them in many departments of farm work. Market and fruit gardening are such chances. The high price of meat has created an enormously increased demand for farm vegetables and kindred products.

Many a school teacher who has left the farm to work for $400 a year in some high cost of living town, would have done better to start a little enterprise of raising vegetables or fruits in her own back yard. With the labor of a man available for lifting heavy weights, there is nothing in farm work that is not easily within the capacities of women. It is probably true that the average farmer depends very much for his business success on his wife's judgment.

If women go into farming more, they will be turning from callings that are overcrowded, into one in which the whole world is crying for the product. It always pays to work in a field where the demand exceeds the supply. The agricultural schools are reporting this fall that many women are taking their courses of study. Perhaps the sight of the millions of Europe's women, who are finishing this year's harvest, may inspire others in this country to choose this opening.

CUSHING WINS QUITE HANDILY

He Is Named as Candidate For Lieutenant Governor

REPUBLICAN MACHINE SHAKEN

Backed Monette For Auditor, but He Is Defeated by Cook—Walsh, McCall and Walker Receive Uncontested Nominations For Governor From Their Respective Parties

Boston, Sept. 23.—The contests in the Republican state primaries show the following leaders:

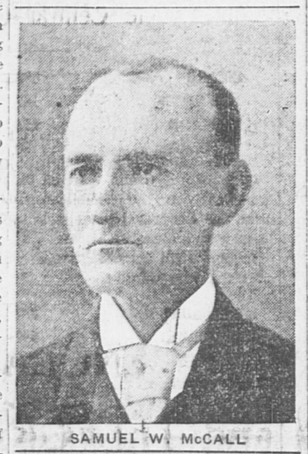
Grafton D. Cushing for lieutenant governor, Albert P. Langtry for secretary of state, Charles L. Burrill for state treasurer, Alonzo B. Cook for auditor, Henry C. Attwill for attorney general.

There being no contests in the Democratic primaries for state ticket, Governor Walsh and the other holders of the big state jobs were renominated.

Joseph Walker heads the list of candidates for state offices on the Progressive ticket, there being no contests for any of those places.

There was no contest for the head of the Republican ticket, Ex-Congressman Samuel W. McCall being nominated for governor.

The Republican machine received a bad smashing through the defeat of Joseph Monette of Lawrence for state auditor by Cook of Boston.



SAMUEL W. McCALL

The big surprise of the returns was the big lead which Cook had, the returns outside of Boston giving him a lead of nearly two to one. The Boston figures also showed him to be in the lead in the city, in spite of the strong opposition to him from Chairman Thurston of the Republican state committee and the organized effort which was put forth by the various city and town committees in favor of Monette.

The returns throughout the state indicate that Speaker Cushing won the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor, defeating Colonel Goetting of Springfield handily, and with former State Treasurer Stevens third in the race. Cushing's victory, which was decisive, came as a big surprise.

JOSEPH WALKER

A. P. Langtry of Springfield is an easy winner for the Republican nomination for secretary of state over Frank L. Brier and William S. Kinney of Boston. The fight for state treasurer was closer, but with C. L. Burrill leading F. E. Pierce by a safe margin.

District Attorney Attwill of Lynn is in the lead for the Republican nomination for attorney general, with J. A. Curtin of Brookline running a close second and J. A. Stiles, Worcester, third. The defeat of Curtin was unexpected, since the Republican state organization had backed him for the nomination.

Congressman Gardner defeated A. P. Andrew for the Republican nomination in the Sixth district by a two to one vote and Congressman Mitchell won the Democratic nomination in the Thirteenth easily over W. H. McMasters.

Peter F. Tague of Charlestown was nominated for congress by the Democrats in the Tenth district, winning by a very close margin over ex-Congressman Keliher, with Brennan a poor third.

GOVERNOR WALSH

Is Renominated by Bay State Democrats

Next to the Tenth congressional fight in Boston the interest centred in the Eleventh district, where F. J. Horgan won the Democratic nomination over T. J. Fay and J. A. Watson. Horgan easily distanced his other two opponents.

In the Seventh district, Congressman Phelan had an easy win over James E. Donoghue for the Democratic nomination.

In the Eighth district Republican primaries F. W. Dallinger won the nomination from C. S. Baxter. Dallinger also ran for the Progressive nomination and the returns lead to the belief that he will win that nomination.

On the Republican side in the Thirteenth W. H. Carter appears to have won the nomination over N. A. Francis.

In the Fourteenth congressional district the returns indicate the nomination of Mayor Howard of Brockton over Crane and Raymond.

The fight in the Third congressional district for the Democratic nomination was close, with W. A. Hoban having a slight lead over M. F. O'Connell.

WARD TWO SCHOOL LOTS

Desirable One Off Washington Street Selected

It is seldom that the City Council has as many sites offered for a school as in the case of the proposed new building in Ward Two. Usually but one lot is available and then it is a case of a high price.

In Ward Two, however, the committee at its hearing last week had five sites offered. The school Committee, which had been considering the question sent a communication to the Council stating that the Swithin lot on South street could be purchased for 9 1-2 cents a foot and that as much of the lot as desired could be had.

At the hearing given by the Public Buildings committee, however, several other lot owners came forward and offered their property. That afternoon the committee had been out and had personally examined all of the locations.

The different locations offered at the public hearing were as follows:

The Tracy lot, which was formerly the Wild estate on Washington street, opposite what is known as the Graham turnout. This lot contained something like 70,513 square feet and the price was $5,500. Part of the lot, a triangular one, is low ground.

The Betts lot, which was formerly the Graham estate, but known better as the Webb estate, on Washington street, near the corner of Sumner street.

WARD TWO.

There were two propositions here. One was for a lot containing 50,452 square feet for $11,500, and the second was a lot of 62,779 square feet, for $14,500.

The so-called Burke lot is located between Main and South Walnut streets, about half way between Oak street and Sumner streets. There were five parcels of land included in the lot ach of which had a building located upon it. The lot contains 41,810 square feet and the price given was $12,375.

The Swithin lot as already noted is on South street, in a block bounded by Berkeley street, Ellerton road and Clarendon streets. Mr. Swithin did not appear before the committee and the chairman stated that he had refused to give him a proposition in writing or submit a plan, but stated that the price was 9 1-2 cents a foot and the committee could take as much as it wanted.

The last lot and the one selected is that on the Paul Wild estate. It lies between Washington street and Newcomb place. Acording to the City Engineer, it was stated that this lot was practically in the geographical centre of the district between the Adams, Coddington and Washington schools. This lot, including a part of two streets, laid out but not accepted or built upon, contains 84,541 square feet and the price given is $5,265.

The lot is readily accessible from Washington street, and can readily be reached from Newcomb place. The land between the site selected and Newcomb place is also owned by the same company, the Northern Land Co. and it was stated that the city could purchase as much as desired of it at the same price.

In connection with the offer of this property the agent for the company gave the committee a proposition for a lot containing 1288,359 square feet at a price of $8,565.44. The addition includes property adjoining that reported, and it lies between the lot selected and Newcomb place. The committee if it desires can take one or more of these lots for an outlet into Newcomb place at the same price per foot.

The lot selected contains fifteen house lots, and includes a part of Lancaster and Lowe streets. Lancaster street runs about east and west, while Alden and Lowe streets run in a northerly direction to Washington street, thus furnishing two entrances to the school lot from Washington street. Although these streets were laid out on the Land Co. plan they have never been accptd or built, bing simply stake dout. Lancaster street will also furnish an outlet in the direction of Massachusetts avenue.

The objection to the Swithin lot expressed by the committee at the hearing that it was too near the Adams school line. It is also understood that the committee were unaimous for the lot selected.

Work on the new water main on Adams street has been checked a bit the past week on account of the digging in the vicinity of Engine brook. The pipe is to be laid right through the bed of the brook and the springs of water make the work rather difficult. The spraying engine belonging to the Tree department is being used to pump the water out besides several hand pumps.

Tere will be no general assemblies at the High school this year. On account of the size of the Assembly hall the school will meet in two sections, the freshman class one morning and the other three classes the next morning.

MASHERS FINED IN LYNN COURT

The new law dealing with mashers is being enforced in some cities. The Lynn Item says three would-be mashers were fined in the local court Monday by Associate Justice O'Brien.

Dennis Kennedy attempted to engage a young girl in conversation in Central square on Saturday evening after telling her that he was well supplied with money. He was arrested by Patrolman Remsen and fined $20.

James Manos was annoying women about the postoffice when Benjamin Waitt, the former baseball manager, notified Patrolman Stringer. Manos was fined $20 for violating a city ordinance, and a charge of drunkenness was filed.

A West Lynn man, while drunk spoke politely to several women in Market square. He was arrested by Patrolman MacKenzie and fined $10.

A POSSIBLE CANDIDATE

Business Men Ask Henry F. Tilden to Enter Mayoralty

It is not among the impossibilities that Henry F. Tilden, who served as City Treasurer during the two years of ex-Mayor Stone's administration, may enter the city primaries for the Republican nomination for Mayor.

During the past few days there has been a movement among a number of the business men in and about City Suare, and several meetings have been held to talk over the Mayoralty situation, and if possible select a business man for the office. What the gentlemen want is a man whose abilities are well known and who has the time from his private business to give to the duties of the office.

That there is sad need of a business man at City Hall is well recognized, and the gentlemen behind the present movement believe that in Mr. Tilden, they have a man who will fill the bill, and fill it perfectly. That there is a crying need of reforms in several quarters is almost too well known to need repeating, and the general consensus of opinion is that a man should be selected who has no past political debts to pay; who would enter upon the duties of the office unhampered, and who would select men for the several administrative offices because of their known ability, and not because they must be paid a political debt.

Mr. Tilden however is not a seeker after the office and there is some question if he can be persuaded to become a candidate.

The movement of the City Square business men came to a head Tuesday night when a committee waited upon Mr. Tilden at his summer home at Adams Shore.

At first he said no, but the committee would not take that for a final answer, and after the situation had been thoroughly gone over, it was left that Mr. Tilden should give his final answer to the committee Saturday evening.

Should be decide to accept, the committee are prepared to organize working committees in every ward of the city and they promise to give the city one of the liveliest campaigns it has had for years.

SENT TO BOTTOM IN NORTH SEA

Three British Cruisers Torpedoed by German Submarine

OF 12,000-TON DISPLACEMENT

Most of Officers of Warships, Which Carried Complement of More Than Two Thousand Men, Said to Have Been Lost—Aboukir, Hogue and Cressy Almost Blown to Pieces

London, Sept. 23.—Out of a clear sky came the announcement that the Germans had struck another blow at the British sea supremacy. Three cruisers, their value totalling $17,000,000, and carrying a complement of more than 2100 men, were torpedoed and sunk in the North sea off the German coast by German submarines essaying a raid similar to that in which they sent the scout patrol cruiser Pathfinder to the bottom.

These cruisers, the Aboukir, Hogue and Cressy, have been reported as very active in scouting close to the Helgoland bight, in an effort to locate the main German war fleet. Although the exact location of the disaster, the greatest of the war to date from the British standpoint, is withheld, there are evidences that it was not far from where the British cruiser squadron struck its first real blow against the Germans in sinking three light cruisers and two destroyers.

The government says that a considerable number of the crew were picked up by destroyers and trawlers that hurried to the rescue. The exact number of casualties will not be obtainable until the list of survivors can be completed. It is officially admitted, however, that it will be large, and among the number, it is reported, are most of the officers of the three big ships.

The announcement of the loss came just at a time when the British public was displaying impatience over the lack of activity against the kaiser's naval strength. This impatience, it was said, was shared by certain of the higher officials of the admiralty, who have believed that, as the Germans had refused to come out and fight, England should go in and draw their war craft into the open.

The disaster has simply augmented that feeling. Demands for speedy vengeance are heard on all sides, and it is likely that before many hours have passed news will come of important action by the British fleet.

Whether the submarines that caused the disaster escaped, or whether, like the one which sunk the Pathfinder, they have also been sent to the bottom in their turn, is not yet known.

The Aboukir, which was patrolling in the North sea, was the first to be sunk when she was struck by a torpedo sent from a German submarine. The Hogue and Cressy went to the rescue of the survivors, who were floating in the water. As they were lowering their boats the submarines of the enemy also launched torpedoes against the two cruisers, they also being sunk.

The cruisers were almost blown to pieces, but there were many destroyers and trawlers near the scene, and they were rushed to the spot, picking up the men floating in the water.

The Cressy, Captain Johnson; the Aboukir, Captain Drummond, and the Hogue, Captain Nicholson, were sister ships. They were armored cruisers of an obsolete type, and were built fourteen years ago.

The three ships were cruisers of the same type, designed for a speed of twenty-two knots. They had a displacement of 12,000 tons. Their main batteries consisted of 9.2-inch (twenty-two ton) guns, each mounted in armored barbettes, the mountings being a special design, by which the guns could be loaded at any angle of elevation. These 9.2 guns fired a 380-pound projectile with a muzzle energy of 14,520 foot-tons. There were also eight six-inch guns in each armament and twelve twelve-pounder quick-firing guns, with a number of machine guns.

The four boiler compartments of the vessels occupied 130 feet of the length of the ship; the coal bunkers being arranged on either side of the boiler-rooms and over the protective deck, while an ammunition passage was situated immediately under the protective deck. There were also athwartship bunkers forward. Thirty boilers were carried, all of the Belleville type.

OFF GERMAN NAVAL BASE

Two Hundred Warships Reported In British Battle Line

Two hundred British warships lie in battle line off the German naval base off Heligoland, so close that at times they appear to touch each other, according to Captain Skelly of the British oil-tank steamer San Lorenzo, which reached New York from London.

For six weeks the San Lorenzo was with this British fleet, as supply ship for the oil-burning war craft. She took them 15,000 tons of fuel oil. She was with the fleet during the engagement with the German cruisers behind Heligoland, but was not permitted to steam close enough to see the fighting.

SUDDEN DEATH OF PHYSICIAN

Stanley F. Duncan Was Youngest in His Profession

Dr. Stanley F. Duncan, the youngest practicing physician in Quincy, died at the home of his parents on Gilmore street about 1. A. M. He was the son of James Duncan, president of the Granite Cutters International Association, and first vice president of the American Federation of Labor. Death was due to menengitis, with Hodgkin's disease, a rare ailment, as a contributary.

Dr. Duncan has been a sufferer from the Hodgkins disease for several years, but despite the fact that medical science could offer no immediate relief, he was ever buoyed up with the hope that positive cure was about to be discovered.

A week ago he was stricken with menengitis while lunching in a cafe near his office in South Quincy. His collapse was unexpected and on being removed to his home the symptoms indicated that he would rally.

His death was unexpected and is keenly felt by his young friends of the city, but more particularly by his parents who always felt that the cheerful manner with which he performed his duties could not accompany a hopeless outlook.

When he opened an office in South Quincy a few months ago, adults and children who knew of his fine reputation in his profession, and his extremely sympathetic manner of treating patients, sought his advice, and within a few days he had established a clientele which would be the envy of any young man starting to practice in his home city.

Dr. Duncan came to Quincy with his parents when the Granite Cutters International Association chose this city as their national headquarters. At that time his father was secretary-treasurer.

Dr. Duncan, who had completed a course in the McKinley Manual Training School in Washington became a member of the class of 1903 of Quincy High school and after graduation in 1907 he re-entered for a post graduate course.

In the fall of that year he became a student at the medical school of Tufts college, and received his degree in 1912. During that time he studied the regular courses and the last two years served in the Boston dispensary, having charge of the accident floor for several months.

A few months after obtaining his degree he passed the State Board examination and became a registered physician. He was immediately appointed house doctor of the Malden City Hospital and served there two years. His work in that institution was mainly surgical.

While at Quincy High school Dr. Duncan took an eager interest in athletics and was a bright light in the star football eleven. During his college course he did not participate generally in athletics.

At college he was elected to membrship in the Phi Theta Chi and Phi Chi, Greek letter fraternities. He is also a member of Clan MacGregor, O. S. C., of this city.

FORTY MEETINGS TONIGHT.

Converging upon Boston the orators in the state-wide temperance campaign are fast completing the rounds of Massachusetts towns and cities, which come within their schedule.

Boston is the main objective point of the campaign. On the Common Saturday afternoon the Anti-Saloon League (stage) plans to stage the most spectacular temperance meeting ever held within the precincts of the city.

It is expected that 100,000 people will hear the chosen speakers of the entire country on the subject of national Prohibition.

Four stands will be necessary, and a feature will be vocal and instrumental music. Tonight 40 meetings will be held in as many cities and towns.

At Hingham, last night, Hon. John D. Long presided at the local meeting and the principal speaker was Sam W. Small, one time Confederate soldier, and private secretary of President Andrew Johnson.

ON THE ALLEYS

The reorganized bowling team of the members of Clan MacGregor rolled the first matches of its extensive schedule at the Coliseum alleys on primary night, and as in last seasons case there was an enthusiastic gallery which remained despite the Indian summer evening.

And to add to the excitement, C. McKenzie established a record of 122 for high single, topping Peter Dacker's last string by 12. Several passed the century mark, but strange as it may seem, none of the rollers trippled. For an early season showing, all the men created a favorable impression.

The league will be conducted along the usual lines, money prizes being offered for the best individual and team performances. A substantial prize will be awarded the team netting the highest pinfall for the season which will be added incentive when the season wanes.

The McLeans beat the Mavers quintette 3 to 1. The latter jumped to the fore in the final, threatening to split the points but they fell 11 short.

WET AND DRY MAP OF UNITED STATES JANUARY 1, 1914.

The White Spots Are Dry, the Black Spots Wet---See How Rapidly the Map Is Becoming White.

ONE ORGANIZATION

Massachusetts No-License League and Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League Unite.

All temperance workers and friends of organized activity against the saloon will be delighted to learn that two of the strongest saloon fighting agencies in Massachusetts have come together in one organization, which will be known hereafter as the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League.

Up to this time the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League and the Massachusetts No-License League have worked separately under a clearly defined organization, by which the former organization should attend to legislation and law enforcement, and the latter organization confine itself strictly to assisting local communities in their no-license campaigns.

While, for some years, there has been the utmost harmony between the two groups of workers, and overlapping was largely eliminated, the feeling has grown both inside and outside the organizations that one militant agency, equipped to fight the saloon interests at every turn, was the common sense plan of action.

Especially during the past year, since national constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic has loomed up as the big issue now before the country, it has become more and more apparent that even a nominal division of our fighting forces would be a mistake.

The Anti-Saloon League, as its name implies, is in reality a league of individuals, churches, temperance and good government associations, through which, as a central agency and clearing house, all temperance people and organizations can work to do specific things. Moreover, the Massachusetts League is a department of the Anti-Saloon League of America, through which it works, together with all the affiliated state leagues, to secure national legislation.

For these reasons it has seemed wise to retain the name of the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League, while the work of the No-License League will be continued by the no-license department of the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League. Mr. Robert H. Magwood, so well known throughout the state as the efficient secretary of the No-License League, now becomes the secretary of the no-license department of the Anti-Saloon League, and Mr. Arthur J. Davis is retained as superintendent of the combined organizations.

The allied organization is now prepared to assist local communities in all kinds of anti-saloon endeavor, and temperance workers are cordially invited to call at the office of the league in the Tremont building, Boston, on the third floor. The general office of the league is Room 344, while the no-license department will be accommodated in Room 323, directly across the corridor.

At the meeting of the board of trustees of the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League, the following officers and members of the headquarters committee were elected:

President, Hon. Frederick Fosdick, Fitchburg.

Vice president, Delcevare King, Quincy.

Secretary, William H. Foster, Boston.

Treasurer, Theodore H. Raymond, Cambridge.

Attorney, Wester A. Chandler, Boston.

Headquarters Committee.

Hon. Willard O. Wylie, Beverly.

Massachusetts members of the board of directors of the Anti Saloon League of America were elected as follows: Frederick Fosdick, Delcevare King, Robert H. Magwood, Arthur J. Davis.

It is under the auspices of this organization that the big campaign, beginning Sept. 21, will be held.

THE NEXT STEP

Logically, It Is Submission of Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The logical next step in the progress of the temperance movement is the submission by congress to the several states of an amendment to the federal constitution, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the states, will prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors throughout the nation. The constitution provides that any amendment to that instrument submitted by congress shall become effective when three-fourths of the states either by their legislatures or by a special vote of the people shall ratify the action of congress. To secure federal prohibition by this route, therefore, would require ratification by thirty-six states. The nine states which have already adopted prohibition would promptly join in the ratification of such a constitutional amendment. The action of twenty seven other states would be necessary before the amendment could go into effect. These states would need to be lined up one at a time—the temperance forces of the nation concentrating on one state after another until the necessary number is secured.

LIQUOR AND CRIME

More Crime in Proportion to Population in Massachusetts Than in Prohibition States.

The official reports for the several state penitentiaries and jails make an interesting showing as to the number of prisoners in state penal institutions as between the states under prohibition and those under license. The states of Kansas, Maine and North Dakota are the only three states which have been under prohibition during the past ten years. The number of state prisoners per 100,000 population in Kansas is 85.4; the number in Maine is 98.3; the number in North Dakota is 63.6, while the number in the state of Massachusetts is 199.3.

This ratio, moreover, holds good in the classification of all the states. The average number of state prisoners per 100,000 population in the three prohibition states named above is 84.4. In the seventeen near prohibition states the average number is 115.8. In the thirteen partial license states the average number is 118, while in the nine extreme license states the average number is 130.

DRINKING AND INSANITY

Massachusetts Insane as Compared With Maine and Other Prohibition States.

The latest statistics showing the number of insane persons in hospitals in the several states indicate that the liquor population of the state has something to do with the question of insanity. For instance, the average number of insane per 100 000 population in the nine prohibition states is 118.8, in the seventeen states where a majority of the population live under prohibition, the number is 150.1, in the thirteen states where between one-fourth and one half of the population live under prohibition the number is 242.3, while in the nine extreme license states the number is 276.6. In prohibition Maine the number of insane per 100,000 population is 169.5, while in license Massachusetts the number is 344.6.

GERMAN WINGS ARE STEADILY PRIED BACK

Centre of Invaders Alone Holding Entrenched Lines

BRAVERY IS DISPLAYED BY BOTH BIG ARMIES

Germans Battered by Allies All Night Along Ninety-Mile Battle Front—Invaders Routed Out of Trenches In Stirring Clashes With Bayonets—Germans Compelled to Give Way After Hundreds Fall on Both Sides—Russian Troops Capture Fortified Austrian Town of Jaroslau

London, Sept. 23.—There is a general feeling that the German resistance has reached the high water mark, and that the tide of invasion is about to ebb, perhaps until it has swept back of the frontiers and the Germans are actually placed on the defensive.

Only the invaders' centre is holding its entrenched lines. On the east and west the mighty host is being pried backward, more swiftly each day.

General von Kluck is again in the same desperate plight as he was when he swerved away from Paris and was beaten back by the flank attack of the army that poured out of the Paris forts.

The official announcements from the French capital merely state that the French advance continues along the right bank of the Oise. But unofficial messages, sent out by reliable correspondents, indicate that the flanking movement has at last conquered the terrible weather and that it is in contact with the German right wing.

Von Kluck In Great Danger

A French army, probably supported by a considerable British force, has reached Roisel and Le Catelet, almost directly north of the German right at Noyon. Not even in the successful operation on the Marne was von Kluck in such danger. His retreat through Lille is now impossible, and a retirement upon Valenciennes would be perilous. It looks as though he would be driven within a few hours in the direction of Maubeuge, a movement of considerable peril, as von Buelow's army will soon be forced in the same direction and a tumultuous confusion is apt to result.

The French emulated the German night attack north of Rheims in their smashing assault upon the German right. From sunset Monday until 2 o'clock Tuesday morning the cannonading of the allies was unceasing. The bombardment was tremendous and must have caused untold wreckage where the shells fell.

Fight Continues All Night

All night the steady boom kept up, all along the ninety-mile battle front. Then, two hours after midnight, the earth fairly shook with the reverberations. Every battery launched shrieking shells, as fast as the great guns could send them forth. The German replies were persistent, but with nothing like the impressiveness of the allies' fire.

While the cannonading was going on, the French and British troops were awakened about 2 o'clock and gathered in their trenches. Simultaneously and silently, a line of dark figures crept out all along the lines in the west and cautiously made their way forward. They did not advance far before they were discovered. The Germans, on their guard because of the intense bombardment, had been sweeping the French lines with their searchlights for hours.

But the allies swept forward, in wide-open order, taking advantage of every shelter revealed to them by the German searchlights.

Invaders Driven From Trenches

Batteries of machine guns were trained upon them, but the majority reached the trenches of the invaders alive, drove over them and routed them after a stirring hand-to-hand fight, with bayonets flashing in the darkness and the cries of the wounded men rising above the constant cannon and rifle reports.

Hundreds fell on both sides, but the Germans were compelled to give way. Not a trench that had been gained by the French and British was lost. The men, as soon as they had routed the enemy, dug themselves into safety. Another advance had been made, and all along the German right wing the tide of invasion had once more been turned back.

Although the continuous fighting and the torrential rains have been of such character that it would hardly seem that human endurance could withstand the experience, the death-dealing artillery duel is kept up almost without intermission. Thousands of men die daily at the hands of an enemy they cannot see and whose position they do not know.

Along the battle line, however, have come clashes with bayonets, in which both armies have exhibited great bravery.

Situation In Austria

Jaroslau, a fortified Austrian town on the river San between Lemberg and Cracow, has been taken, the Russians say, and Przemysl is still under bombardment. These are the chief happenings on the eastern battle front. Cracow awaits an attack, but no Russian forces appear yet to have approached the ancient Polish capital.

Jaroslau is an important railroad centre. A bridge near the town crosses the San and commands the passage of that river. The town is located seventeen miles northwest of Przemysl, and is on the railroad line between Lemberg and Cracow.

A dispatch from an unreliable news source said that communication between Breslau and Berlin had been cut off. It is difficult to understand how this can be possible. Certainly the Russian army is nowhere near Breslau.

SERBS TAKE SERAJEVO

Austrians Lose Bosnian Capital and Reported on the Run

The Rome correspondent of the London Star wires that the combined Servian-Montenegrin armies have taken Serajevo, capital of the Austrian province of Bosnia. The Austrians, the correspondent says, have been overwhelmingly defeated.

In a dispatch from Nish, Servia, the correspondent of the Havas News Agency says the Austrians have been forced to retreat along the entire front between Lioubovia, Svornik and Losnitza, and that they are being hotly pursued by the Servian forces.

PRUSSIAN MILITARISM

Churchill Says It Must Be Crushed Before Peace Is Gained

In a speech at Liverpool, Winston S. Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, said:

"Peace with the German people might be arranged in good time, but there would be no peace with Prussian militarism, short of the grave. Peace will be found, in the words of the king, 'when the worthy causes for which we are fighting have been fully achieved.'

"We may yet live to see a federation of Christian states in the Balkans restored to their proper racial limits; we may see Italy's territory correspond with her Italian population; we may see France restored to her proper station in Europe and in her rightful place. And we may see that old England had something to do with it all."

England, said Churchill, did not seek to subjugate Germany or Austria or their people, however complete her victory might be over them. The worst that could happen to them after the war was that they should be set free to live and let live fairly and justly.

BLAME PLACED ON ENGLAND

Germany Declares That She Could Have Prevented the War

The North German Gazette, the official organ of the German government, commenting on the recent speech from the throne by King George, says:

"If the British government had made every possible effort for maintainance of the peace of the world, that peace would undoubtedly have been preserved. The German emperor had made such efforts with the Emperor of Russia and the King of England up to the last moment, but these efforts did not meet with any success.

"We know today from a report submitted by the Belgian ambassador in Petrograd to his government on July 30 that Russia attacked us because she had received the positive assurance of the British government that England would take part in a war against Germany."

AIRSHIP DROPS BOMB

Vanishes From Belgian City After Tearing Hole In the Ground

An aeroplane of unknown nationality dropped a bomb in Maestricht near the Brussels gate, according to a dispatch received at Amsterdam.

No lives were lost, but a big hole was torn in the ground; three trees were broken, the doors of a neighboring house were riddled and windows for a considerable distance were shattered.

Automobiles went in pursuit of the air craft, but it disappeared, going south.

CANADA TO SEND 50,000

Second Contingent of 19,000 Men Will Be Raised Immmediately

A second contingent of Canadian troops, 19,000 strong, will be raised immediately by the Canadian government, it was announced at Montreal.

This additional contingent is to be ready by Nov. 1. With the troops already being raised it will increase Canada's contribution to the British fighting forces to 50,000.

Sir Robert Borden said Canada will contribute about 300 machine guns. Already 158 have been given by wealthy Canadians, and it is expected that more will be forthcoming in the near future.

AMERICANS FAVORED

Correspondent of French Paper Says We Get Best War News

"Americans are infinitely better informed about the war than any Europeans, even the neutrals," says The Temps New York correspondent.

"They have received news from everywhere—from belligerent and neutral countries, and also censored and uncensored dispatches which rectify and clarify each other."

MASONS HOLD MENS NIGHT

Rev. Edward A. Horton Addresses Delta Guests

About 270 gentlemen members of Delta lodge, A. F. and A. M., and their guests, assembled at the Masonic temple, Braintree, Tuesday evening.

The occasion was known as "Men's Night" and was a radical departure from the ladies' nights which have been in vogue for several years past.

After a brief but cordial address by welcome by Worshipful Master Walter J. Harris, the vocal selection "Singers' Patrol" was rendered by Beethoven male quartette in a very pleasing way. Edwin D. Sibley was next on the program and he is evidently a great favorite as his appearance on the platform was hailed with great applause. He rendered several humorous readings in his inimitable fashion and made a decided hit.

A group of songs by Charles Bennett, who was in fine voice and sang "The two grenadiers" and "Gypsy John," giving these widely different selections a beautiful rendition.

The speaker of the evening, introduced in a witty speech by the Worshipful Master, was Rev. Edward A. Horton, grand chaplain of the Grand lodge of Masons of Massachusetts. The reverend gentlemen prefaced his remarks with many good stories and jokes, which pleased his auditors greatly. In serious vein, he spoke of Free Masonry, its high ideals and purposes, and of its influence for all that is highest and best in town, state and nation. Rev. Mr. Horton's address was accorded the closest attention by all and was applauded vigorously.

Another delightful selection "Tom the Piper" was given by the quartette and Mr. Sibley followed with more of his laughable stories.

Mr. Bennett sang "The Widow Malone" and "The Donovans," and the program was concluded by the quartette in the charming selection "When the little ones say good night."

The program was arranged with a view to pleasing all tastes, and the various artists were most gracious in responding to encores.

After singing one verse of "America" all adjourned to the banquet hall where refreshments of ices and cake were served, and cigars were passed.

The entertainment committee included, Henry R. Higgins, Charles A. Kobler and Ezra S. Grover.

APOLOGY FROM CHIEF OF POLICE

Chief of Police Thomas Bates of Cohasset, before being privileged to represent his town in a case in the District Court this morning, had to apologize to the court for remarks passed several weeks ago.

As the story goes, Chief Bates, dissatisfied with the finding made by Judge Avery in two cases, critised his action. The remarks were not made sotto voice, but in ordinary tone and were overheard by Judge Avery.

Chief Bates has had no cases in since then until this morning when he appeared to prosecute an Italian charged with assault with a dangerous weapon.

As he walked to the prosecutor's table Judge Avery informed him that unless an apology was given he could not conduct the case. This information carried with it a reprimand to the effect that the dignity of the court must be mantained.

The statement of the Judge Avery fell like a bomb from a clear sky, and created no end of excitement among those present, and all turned toward the Chief Bates, who after stating he meant no offense apologized and was allowed to proceed.

Incidentally his case against the defendant was strong enough to warrant Judge Avery imposing a fine of $50.

Chief Bates is one of the bst known heads of police departments on the South Shore, and has a wide circle of friends throughout the state. He is known far and wide for his frank expressions, and his many friends belive that his criticism of court was not intended personally.

OUR QUINCY HOME.

BY MARY A. O'BRIEN.

Dear Quincy Home, though we may roam,
Far from thy peaceful shore,
And new friends meet; thy memory sweet
Will waft us back once more.

We love thy hills, and running rills
That course along thy vales,
Thy meadows calm, with fragrant balm,
Thy shores with white-capped sails!

The grandeur rare of thy granite's stare,
Like a Sphinx sublime and grand,
That tells to all, the great and small
The strength of self-command.

The deep abyss and precipice
With granite walls girt round,
Thy quarry-wells, industry spells,
Labor nobly crowned!

From out thy shore to war's loud roar
The giants of the sea
Have sped away, with colors gay,
Defiant, and gallantly!

The temples here, Oh! with what care
We guard so jealously,
The house of Adams, and Quincy's madam's
Dorothy Q's so cosily.

Here they stand so aged and grand,
No costly mansions these,
For heroes true, whose blood is blue
Come not from homes of ease.

And though they rest in memory's breast
Like children lulled to sleep,
Their acts still live, to young hearts give Inspiration, strong and deep.

Our Quincy home, though we may roam
To distant lands from thee,
On Muse's brink, to sweet to think
Of hours spent pleasantly.

Among thy hills, whose grandeur thrills
The heart with beauty wrought,
For nature here displays with care
The Almighty's loving thought!

Corset Ancient Armor.

A French historian of women's dress states that the corset was worn by the ancient Egyptians. This assertion is borne out by the figures carved on the tombs of women, who are invariably represented as wearing a garment strongly resembling the modern corset. There does not appear to be any representation extant of Cleopatra VI., the beloved of Antony, but in one of the temples there is a figure of her predecessor, Cleopatra II., in which the sculptor has endowed her with a corset cut on the lines of those worn today. Whalebone was probably unknown to the Egyptians, but a nation capable of constructing pyramids without steam cranes would probably find no difficulty in making stays without busks.—London Standard.

If It Had a Voice.

George Bernard Shaw is a vegetarian who has remained true to the faith, and in a letter to a Chicago woman, reproaching her for her fight against the aigret when she still ate meat, Mr. Shaw said:

"The lack of logic prevailing everywhere! We call the tiger a ferocious and ravening beast, but what would you Chicago ladies be called if, for example, the lamb chop had a voice?"

Foresight.

She—Johnnie needs a new pair of shoes. He—Why, saints alive! I brought home a pair for him last night! She—Yes, you did. But as it took you fully six weeks to remember to get them it might be well to start in now on the next pair.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Easy.

"Tell me, old man," said the perennial seeker after useless knowledge, "why is your hair gray and your beard brown?"

"Easy," answered the facetious old man. "My hair is twenty years older than my beard."—Michigan Gargoyle.

NEW PHYSICAL DIRECTOR

Milton Schools Have Secured Carl Hall

The public school pupils of Milton should congratulate Superintendent Frank Marsh and themselves for being able to procure Carl Hall as director in physical education for the schools of the town. Mr. Hall is a native of Sweden. He was graduated from one of the best colleges in Sweden with special honors in languages having learned to command seven different languages. Since the Swedish nation as a whole are known to excell in the art of physical training and culture, it is no more than natural that a brilliant man like Mr. Hall would specialize in this subject. By physical education, it is wrong to think that regular gymnastics is the only part of it. As Mr. Hall says, "Physical education means the knowledge of keeping ourselves clean and by living a clean, healthy life become strong men and women."

When Mr. Hall came to this country he realized that the methods in physical training might be a little different from his native country, so he immediately entered the famous Posse gymnasium for a broader physical education. From here Mr. Hall entered Dr. Sargent's school as an instructor, and he was later director of physical education in the public schools of Brookline. Meanwhile Mr. Hall was engaged in medical gymnastics in various hospitals in and around Boston. By this method he corrects all physical deformities such as a drooping head, low chest, round shoulders and curviature of the spine. Mr. Hall has spent the last two years as physical director in Thornton academy of Saco, Maine. This academy is the largest, oldest and best "prep" school in the state of Maine.

Mr. Marsh was fortunate enough to be able to get Mr. Hall come to Milton, and the pupils of the town both in the High school and grammar schools will now procure a wide education in physical knowledge. Mr. Hall will take charge of the pupils in the sixth, seventh and eighth grades, and the boys at the High school. All High school pupils must take two periods a week, and a double period will be held Tuesday for the girls and Wednesday for the boys who so desire at the Brook Road playground. Here the pupils will engage in such sports as tennis base ball, volley ball, quoits, track, shot putting and jumping stands. The required work will consist equally of gymnastics and knowledge of hygiene. Mr. Hall will be assisted by Miss Amy Howland a graduate of Dr. Sargent's school, who will take charge of the lower grammar grades and the high school girls.

FOOTBALL AT QUINCY HIGH.

Headmaster E. L. Collins of Quincy High lectured the squad Tuesday on the value of physical condition in sport in speaking of football he pointed out that the game could be played in an out and cut fashion, and that while it was necessary to be aggressive a spirit of fair play could be uppermost.

His experience in the game, he said, has taught him that the possibilities of Quincy High having a splendid team this fall are so bright that it will be a profound disappointment, not only to the students but to the city in general, if the future does not develop in keeping with the indications.

Quincy High is scheduled to play Brockton High at Quincy Nov. 14.

E. G. P. Guy of Worcester, a brother of the Quincy Guy, who was a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress from the Seventh district, was defeated by Daniel E. Denney.

ERICSON WINS

through a mixup in names succeeded in carrying the district, and his success doubtless prompted Democrats to try and do likewise. Mr. Guy however was strong in his home city which he carried without difficulty, his total vote being 103, while Murray the second man only received 17 votes. Rattigan received a total of 13, Reed 12, and Halpin 6.

The total Democratic vote was 167, of which Governor Walsh received 140 and blanks 27.

PROGRESSIVES TICKET.

No contest were apparent on the ballots used by the Progressives, but as noted elsewhere, stickers were used in some wards for Col. Henry L. Kincaide for Congressman. They were not in general use in Quincy although in Brockton and some other places many voted this way. Enough were used to give Col. Kincaide the nomination as far as Quincy is concerned for he received a total of 37 votes to 21 for Reed.

No candidates were printed on the ticket for several of the officers but names written in may if they prove to be correct give the nomination to some one. For instance in the office of Senator, George W. Baker received the party nomination by having his name written on the ballot receiving a total of 18 votes. Others to receive votes for Senator were Langelier 2, Kincaide 2, Proctor 2.

For representative from the Fifth district, there were no names on the ballot but Representative M. T. Sullivan evidently gets the Progressive nomination by having his name written on the ballot, for he received a total of 5 votes. Both Otto Gelotte and Charles A. Ericson received a vote each.

For the office of County Commissionr, Eugene Hale Sprague received the nomination as far as Quincy is concerned, as he received 2 votes. Leo P. Noonan was a good second with 1 vote. The names in both cases having been written in.

The total vote of the Progressives was 61 votes, of which 4 were blanks.

In Ward Two, Charles C. Foster and A. L. Whitman were elected as state delegates. The former received 77 votes and Whitman 75. E. C. Hultman the defeated candidate received 54 votes.

IMPROVEMENTS AT SQUANTUM

Politics and local improvements divided the attention of the members of the Squantum Improvement association at their regular meeting in Community hall Tuesday night. It was the first session of the association in the new hall and the members were delighted with the fine accommodations. It was voted unanimously to hold all future meetings in this fine assembly hall.

President John R. Nelson presided. There was animated discussion as to whether the association should hold a political night and invite all candidates elected at the State primaries in this district to participate. Sentiment among the members was about equally divided and no vote was taken as to whether such a meeting should be held or not.

It was voted that at the second monthly meeting in October a special speaker be engaged to talk before the association on some topic of interest to the community in general.

The matter of a water main on Hackins avenue came up for discussion. This street has been accepted by the City of Quincy and is about to be put into first-class condition. It appears that the City of Boston owns the only water main on the street and that it is not in use but is kept for an emergency. It was voted that an order be presented to the Quincy City Council asking that a local water main be laid on this street before the street is improved.

It was voted that a petition for nine more streets lights be put before the Quincy City Council. Squantum has received no new lights during the past year and is badly in need of additional street lights.

The legislative committee of the association will take up before the Metropolitan park commission the advisability of putting the new State boulevard from Boston to Quincy as near to Squantum as possible. If a new bridge is to be built the Squantum residents would like to see it placed where it would be of added accommodation to this section of Quincy.

The service of the Bay State street railway came up for its usual criticism. It was voted that the company be asked to put on a larger and better car. The cars now run to Squantum are antiquated, single truck affairs.

The question of deep water mains came up and it was found that the Quincy water department had laid deep mains on Green street and were at work on similar mains on Bay Side road and streets in that vicinity.

There were 33 members at the meeting and interesting discussions of local improvements kept the members in session until close to 11 o'clock.

GENERAL KICK OVER TAXES

Indignation Meeting to Be Held at Alpha Hall

It is currently reported about City Square that as soon as the remainder of the tax bills have gone out that a mass indignation meeting will be held at Alpha hall, to see what can be done in regard to the matter. Several citizens, who have already received their tax bills and found that their valuation has been jumped up all out of proportion, publicly state that they do not intend to pay, but will fight. As one business man said, he would place the amount in the bank and allow it to draw interest at 4 per cent and if in the end he had to pay he would pay the other 2 per cent. If there are many who pursue this same course the city may find itself short of funds. Conditions are certainly bad.

It is pointed out that the increased valuation if allowed to stand will never be lowered, and that it will mean a large increase in the state tax next year as this tax is based on the valuation of the city.

On the other hand, it is a question what can be done in the case. If the Assessors abate the assessments it means a large sum will be necessary. The Asessors have not got this sum and there seems no way that they can get it.

However, from what can be learned, it is proposed by those who have been stung to employ the best legal talent that can be obtained and if there is any way to upset the valuations as made this year they will be upset.

Almost every citizen one meets has his little story to tell. In one place at South Quincy there were two houses side by side and almost exactly alike. On one of the estates the owner had a little pride and kept his lawn cut and paths cleaned. His neighbor however did not, and his lawn and walks were cluttered. The man who kept his place clean got his valuation boosted high in the air, while the man of the untidy place escaped with a slight raise in valuation.

Two houses at Quincy Point are another comparison. One had a little fresh coat of paint on the outside, and it got boosted although the interior of the second house was much more elaborately finished. And so it goes on.

WATERWAYS CONVENTION.

The seven hundred delegates attending the deeper waterways convention in New York were welcomed by Mayor Mitchell on Tuesday. The sessions today and the balance of the week will be held on board steamships which will take the party up the Hudson river and elsewhere.

HURLIHY—HERLIHY.

A difference of one letter was noticeable in the names of a marriage return received at the office of City Clerk on Tuesday. The groom was John Hurlihy and the bride was Miss Catherine Herlihy. The groom makes his home in South Quincy and the bride formerly lived at 182 Summit avenue, Wollaston.

SCHOOLS CLOSED BECAUSE OF HEAT

Nearly 135 pupils of the Washington school were dismissed early because of the excessive heat. The children were all members of the second and thirds grades and their class rooms are located on the southwesterly side of the building.

Nine rooms of the Coddington school were also closed, affecting nearly 40 pupils.

The closing was in keeping with the regulations of the school committee rules which state classes must be dismissed when the temperature exceeds 90 degres.

This is the first time it has happened in September in the history of schools in Quincy.

THE COUNCILLOR VOTE.

The morning papers give the vote for Councillor nn the second district of all parties with five wards of Boston and four towns missing. These figures would indicate that Guy A. Ham has secured the Republican nomination and F. H. Bishop the Progressive vote, although this noon it was stated that Guy Ham was claiming the Progressive nomination.

The greatest contest was among the Democrats and by the vote given it would appear that the Quincy Guy had a good chance of winning, for he had a big lead. The vote as given with the wards and towns missing as noted above is as follows:

	Republican
Ham,	2704
Bellamy,	2257
	Democratic
Guy,	756
Murray	350
Rattigan	271
Halpin	168

WOMAN MISSING.

Tee Qincy and Boston police have been asked to join in a search for Sarah Anderson Rideout, the 20 year old wife of Frank Rideout of this city, who vanished mysteriously Saturday.

Since then her husband, relatives and police have made a systematic inquiry among relatives and friends but nothing definite regarding her whereabouts has been uncovered.

Mrs. Rideout left her husband Saturday, agreeing to meet him in the South Station after he searched for new employment.

When he arrived at the South Station his wife was not there and after a long wait he sought the advice of the police. They took up the matter and requested Sergt. Larkin of Quincy headquarters to join them in a search.

Inquiry was made at the home of her brother John Anderson of Cottage street, but he has no available information, although he spent the greater part of Tuesday night trying to locate her in Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Rideout were married in Springfield about seven months ago. Shortly after both obtained employment in Boston. They resigned Saturday.

The description of the missing woman height is about 5 ft. 6 in., brown hair and rather a pale complexion. When she disappeared she was dressed entirely in black and had but little money on her person.

THE MARKET BASKET.

These are sad days for the family market basket.

Many events seem to have conspired to bring about higher prices, and the careful housewife must be wide awake to make ends meet.

She cannot afford to purchase haphazard.

She must have the best available information of products and prices.

In these days the advertising columns of a live newspaper like the Daily Ledger are immensely valuable.

They are the public market place. They keep a woman informed ta to the greatest purchasing power of her dollar.

The woman who uses newspaper advertising for her guide is more apt to get 100 cents plus for her dollar than her neighbor who shops haphazard.

It happened this way: Talos (or Daedalus, if you prefer Pliny) found the jawbone of a snake and employed it to cut through a piece of wood. Then he formed an instrument of iron like it and thus gave the world the first saw.

RUTH OF OLDPORT GRATEFUL TO QUINCY

Says Quincy People Are the Most Warm-Hearted She Has Known in Career

Beautiful Dahlias Have Been An Inspiration

Not only have Quincy people been inspired by the comedy, "Along Came Ruth," but Miss Florence Shirley, as Ruth Ambrose of Oldport, Me., the little heroine, has also received a new inspiration, because of the approval Quincy people have shown in her work, and their hospitality. At every performance at the Plymouth theatre since the "Quincy night," Sept. 15, there have been Quincy people present, and they have come away with the same enthusiasm and a determination to Boost Quincy.

The editor of the Daily Ledger has received the following letter from Miss Shirley (Ruth Ambrose of Oldport, Me.) with permission to print.

"Mr. Frank F. Prescott, editor Daily Ledger, Quincy:

"Dear Sir:—I am very happy to take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks for the handsome floral piece presented me by the Daily Ledger and your people. You cannot imagine the surprise and joy they brought me. I was obliged to engage an express wagon to have them delivered to my home. For nearly a week the flowers were the chief source of inspiration in my work. I never neglected to take a few of them, while they lasted, to the theatre.

"I was made all the happier, the other day, when I learned that the floral piece was one of the largest ever presented to an American actress This alone shall serve to remind me of your great generosity. And in conclusion, may I add the fact, that the hospitality displayed to me by the Quincy people is the most warm hearted I have ever experienced in all my stage career.

"With best wishes for the continued success of Quincy, its people and its Boosters' club and repeated thanks for the courtesies shown me I beg to remain

"Very truly yours,
(Signed) "Florence Shirley"

Miss Shirley has accepted the hospitality of President John L. Hamilton of the Board of Trade, and Mrs. Hamilton, to visit Quincy on Sept. 27 and will make a tour of the city by automobile. Miss Mildred Gray Huston (the Quincy Ruth Ambrose) will accompany her, and there may be something doing in Quincy soon.

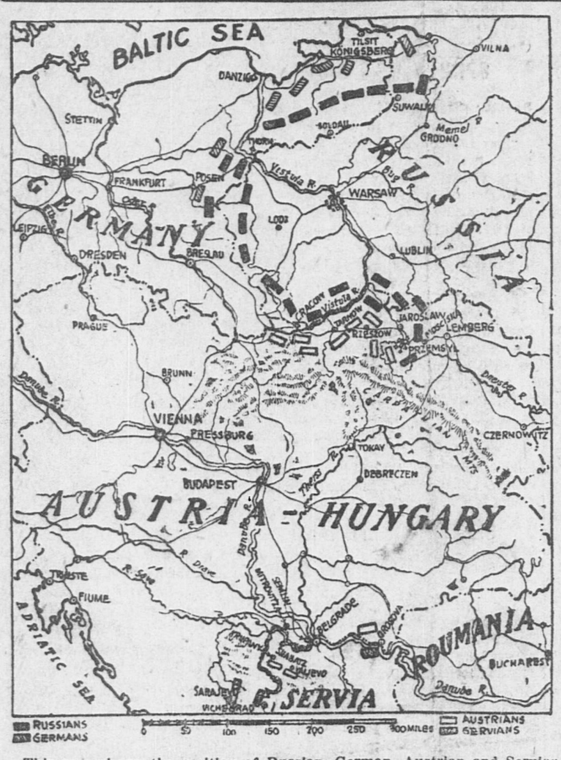
Map of Theater of War In Western Part of Europe.



This map shows the position of Russian, German, Austrian and Servian armies in the west. The Russians continued their encircling movement around the Austrian armies near Przemysl. In East Prussia the positions of the contending forces appear to be unchanged. According to reports from Nish, the Austrians have again passed the Drina river, invading Servia on the western frontier.

PROTEST FROM MR. CAMPBELL

Does Not Intend to Retire as Warden at Almshouse

William Campbell, who was put in charge of the Quincy Home, at the time William J. Vaughn, was removed last April, it is understood does not intend to step quietly down and out, when Mr. Vaughn returns the first of the month, and his case which was supposed to be ended when the court ordered Vaughn reinstated, may not yet be ended.

It will be remembered that Vaughn was removed April 27, and that Mr. Campbell then took charge. Charges were preferred against Vaughn and and a hearing held before Overseer Green who found the charges sustained. An appeal for a review of the case was taken, in accordance with the civil service rules, and Judge Avery after hearing the evidence found the charges not sustained, and ordered Vaughn reinstated.

Following up this finding, Acting Mayor Crane notified Vaughn to return the first of October, which would naturally mean that Mr. Campbell would have to step down and out, something that the latter naturally does not relish. He says he intends to fight the case before he surrenders.

It is understood that one of the claims of Mr. Campbell is that when he was hired as warden it was for a year, but whether this agreement was a verbal or a written one is not known. It will make considerable difference should he take his case to court whether or not the agreement was a written one, although it can hardly be seen how Mr. Green agreed to give Mr. Campbell employment beyond his own term of office, which expires the first of February, unless he should be reappointed at that time.

It is of course generally understood that Mr. Vaughn will be entitled to receive his salary from April 27, the time which he was illegally removed, and it is understood that Mr. Campbell wants his salary of $750 for a year's work and his keep. Just what steps Mr. Campbell will take is not known, although it is understood that he has placed his case in the hands of counsel.

Acting Mayor Crane is attending a meeting in Boston today of the trustees of the Granite avenue bridge.

FALCONER AS MANAGER

Selected to Have Charge of Campaign Work

The Chester I. Campbell campaign committee has selected ex-Councilman Alexander Falconer as chairman. The committee will be a large one, including voters from all the wards of the city.

Candidate Campbell has received letters from representative men all over the city, and has been assured support from unexpected sources.

A rumor is current that Mr. Campbell, being a busy man, could not give the necessary time to duties of Mayor of Quincy, but aside from the short periods when great shows are underway, Mr. Campbell has many hours every day that he could devote to the city.

BURGLARIES AT WOLLASTON

Three Houses on Standish Avenue Ransacked

Three houses on Standish avenue were entered Wednesday afternoon during the absence of the families, and although the houses were ransacked from top to bottom, bureau drawers and bags opened, etc., the sum total of the valuables taken is not heavy, which leads to the impression that the work was that of boys.

The houses entered were those of Herbert L. Packard at 93 Standish avenue, David L. Handy at 111 Standish avenue, and W. F. Kimball at 39 Standish avenue. In all three cases the ladies of the house took an afternoon out, and as it happened all returned home about the same time.

The first break discovered was at the house of Mrs. Handy, who returned about 6 o'clock. Here it was found that entrance had been made by forcing a bolt on a cellar door, and that while the parties had evidently searched high and low for money, none was found. There was however a half basket of peaches in the cellar, and these the uninvited guests devoured. Some of the peaches were also found in the yard later, as was a match safe. Three jars of jelly were also missing. Not satisfied with upsetting things in general the parties used a basket of clean clothing upon which to wipe their hands, and the clothing is covered with peach stains.

Just about this time, Mrs. Kimball who had also returned home discovered that her house had been visited. Here entrance had been obtained through a kitchen window. The break must have occurred between 2 o'clock and 3.45, for her son Richard returned from school at that hour.

The burglars carried off a child's bank, but just how much it contained is not known. They also took a dollar bill from a bag belonging to Mrs. Kimball. There was a diamond ring and other jewelry near at hand, but the thieves were evidently not looking for jewelry for it was not molested.

One of the most interested of the neighbors, who were exploring the breaks, was Mrs. Herbert L. Packard of 93 Standish avenue who had been in Boston all the afternoon, and had returned shortly before 6 o'clock, and it was not until she returned home a little later that she discovered that her home had also been visited. Examination showed that bureau drawers, suit cases and bags had been opened and that every drawer throughout the house had been ransacked by the visitors who were evidently looking for money. Not only did they go through the bureau drawers, but through the clothing which hung in a closet, using a flash light belonging to Mr. Packard to light their way. The flash light was left on the shelf by the visitors.

Entrance to the Packard house had been made through the back door. While investigating about the house, Mrs. Packard discovered that the lock on the front door had been tampered with. Had she upon her return home attempted to have entered by the front door the fact that the lock had been tampered with would have been immediately discovered. She however had both keys with her and had entered her home by the back door.

The police were notified and Officer Avery, upon whose beat the breaks occurred, visited the houses and made an investigation. Evidently the work was that of boys, and should they happen to fall into the hands of the men of the houses entered it is safe to say that their jackets would be warmed in a way, which would cause them to remember it for some time to come.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Hall Place M. E. church held their annual rummage sale at the corner of Copeland street and Furnace avenue, Wednesday afternoon and evening, and although it was a hot, disagreeable day to undertake such a big task, the faithful ladies were rewarded with good sales and were enabled to realize a neat sum as the result of their tireless efforts.

COL. KINCAIDE THE NOMINEE

Was Selected by Progressive Party As Its Candidate for Congress

Is Confident That He Will Be Elected

Col. Henry L. Kincaide of this city, who came within an ace of being elected to Congress two years ago, is the Progressive Party nominee in the 14th district, winning over Edwin C. Reed of Atlantic, on stickers. The official vote is not available, but it is generally conceded that the tabulation of Dedham, Foxboro and Sharon, the unheard from towns will have no effect on his majority of 134.

Colonel Kincaide entered the race at the solicitation of the formost Progressives of the district. It was generally known that he would make the run if the nomination was given him through stickers, and Mr. Reed before the primary declared he would support Col. Kincaide in the event of his nomination.

A "live wire" committee has been organized which is preparing to wage one of the hottest political campaigns for election ever carried on in this district. It is expected that Brockton will support their Republican candidate, Mayor Harry Howard, but he will meet with a firm opposition from determined political enemies.

The first gun in the campaign will be fired within a few days, and already independent voters of Quincy and the surrounding towns have openly tendered their support to Col. Kincaide.

All though it is understood that the Democrats are lining up solidly with their candidate, Richard Olney, 2nd, of Dedham, there is every indication that a good percentage will vote for the local candidate. Even party leaders lean somewhat toward Quincy's "live wire," and its resultant effect will be that men who have been in the front ranks of Quincy Democracy will not be heard from publicly, and on election day they will vote for Col. Kincaide.

Never before in Quincy has such an occasion existed and it is extremely doubtful if any man but the Progressive nominee could reap the full advantage of the situation.

Colonel Kincaide stated this morning he intended to win, and his conversation is so optimistic and enthusiasm so spontaneous he creates the impression that he his election is practically assured.

There is a unanimous agreement that the war taxes should be placed on things that some one else uses.

Are they giving up grand opera this year because the singers can't get back from the war, or because the occupants of the boxes can't get their Paris clothes?

As the stockholders greedily demand dividends instead of assessments, the railroad presidents are again asking for higher rates.

Losing 1000,000 soldiers is regarded by the European kings with somewhat the same feeling as one sees his favorite ball player make a clean sacrifice hit.

The sophomores don't put the freshmen under the pump much more. They merely break their legs at football.

Many people will pay 25 cents in a restaurant for a single peach sliced up and served stylishly, and then growl about the high cost of living.

THE WAR TAX.

In a certain town the government is putting up a $100,000 post office building this year. The present post office quarters have been rented for $1000 per year. They are slightly inadequate, but an addition of a $500 annual rental would give an enlargement sufficient for many years.

When interest on the investment, upkeep of building, an extra janitor service is considered, the government will be spending about $6000 a year for what need not cost them over $1500. This is probably a typical case of a form of extravagance that has been going on for years.

It is now proposed to levy revenue taxes to make up for the custom's deficit due to the war. This tax will set people to thinking. Public sentiment will ask why the pork barrel bills were not cut down to meet the emergency.

It will be a mistake for Congress to think it can go on and increase expenses indefinitely, and collect new taxes to meet the deficit. There is some business sense left in the country.

THE DANCING CRAZE.

When the dancing fever first raged, it was supposed the attack would be brief. Yet the summer hotels were one long scene of terpsichorean revelry. Formerly many places merely had Saturday night hops. This year they usually danced every evening, and many groups practised in the parlor mornings, the steps they would display to the astonised wall flowers that evening.

All the teachers have to do, when trade falls off a bit, is to invent a new set of dances. The good money the crowd previously spent in learning the tango and the twinkle and the aviation is now gone, these figures having already become antique.

Young men, who could not earn $2 a day at any productive occupation, will set up as teachers of dancing and make ten and twenty times that figure. They do well to salt down their cash. The sun does not shine at this temperature very long.

People used to quit dancing when they got married, principally because new and fresher sets of girls pushed the older women off the floor, by capturing all the dance invitations. Now that a lot or original new dances have come in, husbands and wives get used to each others steps and can dance better together—if the old man does not slink out in the corridor to enjoy his cigar.

Dancing has its many evils, but at its best it is a diversion characterized by poetry and romance, and it brightens the face and improves the digestion. The writer was going to conclude by remarking "All hands round," when he reflected what an anachronism the old prompters' calls are in these days of the maxixe and the one-step.

GERMAN RIGHT WING DRIVEN TWELVE MILES

Plight of Von Kluck's Army Made Still More Perilous

ALLIES ARE SUPPLIED WITH FRESH TROOPS

Forces Said to Outnumber Invaders' Right Wing Two to One—German Reinforcements Also Being Rushed to Front to Prevent Disaster—Unofficial Reports That Invaders Are Now Falling Back In Centre—German Mortars Creating Havoc In Forts on Meuse Line—Five British Aviators Make Five-Hundred-Mile Trip to Germany and Drop Bombs

London, Sept. 24.—A further advance of twelve miles in the district of Lassigny, with the German resistance less stubborn than on any previous day of the battle of the Aisne, has endangered still more the chances of General von Kluck for a safe return to German soil.

With the novelty of blue skies overhead and the roads drying underfoot, the allied British and French forces on the extreme west pushed forward rapidly Wednesday.

The plight of the German right wing has become so acute that little attention is now being paid by the invaders to the Belgian army that continues to make sorties out of Antwerp. Reinforcements for von Kluck's harrassed troops are being rushed southward from the neighborhood of Brussels, but it is doubtful whether they can do more than check temporarily the bitter assaults of the allies.

Von Kluck's Army Outnumbered

Competent military critics now estimate that the German right wing is outnumbered about two to one, fresh troops held in reserve by the allies having been hurried to this section of the battlefield on Monday, when the pronounced weakening of the German right wing became unmistakable.

With the advance patrols of the allied armies operating between Peronne and St. Quentin and appearing as far north as Le Catalet, von Kluck must win a pronounced victory within forty-eight hours or retreat as rapidly as he did during the fighting on the Marne. His lines of communication in northern France are everywhere menaced and must in places have already been cut.

While rumors of German reinforcements being sent to the right wing are being heard frequently, there are also heard other reports of fortifying along the Sambre river, along the line of the German advance into France by way of Maubeuge. It is probable that all the stories may be true, the reinforcements being hurried to the front to prevent a disaster and the fortifications being raised for another defensive operation like that of the Aisne.

Allies on the Defensive

The allies were on Wednesday content to rest on the defensive in the centre and toward the east. They have apparently discovered that von Kluck's force is still the weakest link in the German chain and are battering continually at the exposed flank, confident that the first move of retreat there will automatically extend along the great battle line.

Battling continues about Rheims, but the French made no attempts to attack. They have much better positions here than those they held a few days ago, and realize the folly of trying to dislodge the Germans from the formidable plateaus facing the allied lines.

The Germans in the centre attempted another of their now familiar attacks by darkness Tuesday night, but they made no progress. Wireless messages from Berlin maintain that the French are retreating in the centre, but this is denied by both the London and Paris war offices. Unofficial dispatches even go so far as to insist that the invaders are falling back in the centre, leaving only a defensive line in the trenches to cover the movement.

Still Battering Verdun

On the German left wing, which runs at right angles to the line of battle from Lassigny to Verdun, the invaders are massing their forces in a desperate effort to batter down the forts of the Meuse line, which extend from Verdun to Toul. Berlin reports state that the bombardment of Verdun is terrific and that the mortars are creating havoc in the forts that guard the northern end of the Meuse line.

No confirmation of this message, however, can be obtained from Paris. It seems to be the opinion of the French officials that whatever efforts are made against Verdun are now too late to affect the battle of the Aisne.

The heights along the Meuse form the most picturesque setting of the far-flung battleground. The forts that command them afford a wonderful view of broken country, with lakes and a noble river shining below finely wooded hills. The numerous forts and batteries occupy such formidable natural positions that it is not thought the invaders can make much progress here without frightful losses.

The rain has held back the German movement in this section, as it has been impossible to move the heavy howitzers on the clayey roads. Now that the weather has cleared, the invading assault has broken against the heights, but too late to be of any value to von Kluck.

Airmen Drop Bombs

The frightful catastrophe in the North sea has been somewhat alleviated at London by the exploit of the British airmen who flew from Antwerp to Dusseldorf and return, and by the report of a Russian naval victory in the Baltic.

The British aeronauts, five in number, made a flight of 500 miles. High over the German troops in Belgium they sped, high over the heads of women, children and old men in western Germany. Shots were constantly fired at them but, so far as can be learned, not one took effect.

As they hovered over Dusseldorf, above the famous old city on the Rhine, they dropped bombs upon the Zeppelin sheds where are housed some of the air monsters that are dreaded by many dwellers in London. It was intimated at the official press bureau that the aeroplanes were merely engaged in a call of warning, that they hoped to impress the Germans with the belief that if any more bombs are dropped upon unfortified towns and cities retaliation will follow.

Smoke was seen by the aeronauts in the vicinity of the Zeppelin sheds as they turned westward. A message from Dusseldorf, however, stated that practically the only damage done was the breaking of a few windows.

THE BATTLE IN GALICIA

Russia Claims Siege Guns Have Wrought Havoc at Przemysl

A dispatch from Petrograd says that from every point along the line of battle in Galicia come reports of Russian victories. Przemysl, which is held by the Austrian-German forces, is maintaining a strong resistance, but it is being bombarded from all points and already the heavy Russian siege guns have wrought havoc with the outer defenses.

That the Austrian army of General Dankl has not been extricated from its difficulties, as claimed by Vienna official statements, is asserted at Petrograd. The war office says Dankl is almost completely surrounded and that either he must surrender or be annihilated.

It is officially announced that Jaroslav was taken by direct assault and was not surrendered by the Austrians. The official statement says that the Russians, after shelling the city for hours, attacked on all sides in force. The Austrians were driven from their positions at the point of the bayonet, but succeeded in firing most of their reserve supply depots, destroying them before the Russians could interfere. The camp had been stocked with a two years' store. A number of guns were captured.

BELGIANS ARE BUSY

Strike Again Toward the German Lines of Communication

The Belgian army under King Albert is again raiding the German lines to the south. The Germans again are withdrawing the bulk of their forces for action in the south, and the Belgians are taking advantage of this fact to make another raid toward their lines of communication.

Because of the great danger of reprisals, the Belgians have made no movement toward Brussels. It is realized that in their present temper the Germans would not hesitate to make the capital another Louvain.

Fighting is reported in progress near Malines and also in the general direction of Liege. The Belgian forces continue to attack and retreat, inflicting great damage on the Germans, but receiving only light losses in return.

REMEMBER

GERMAN CASUALTIES

List Published at Berlin Gives Total Number as 63,467

The casualty list published at Berlin shows the death of two German generals in the western camp, Generals von Wroopem and von Arbou. Major General von Throa is also given as killed.

The list, containing 5895 names, gives the name and date of the battle for the first time, and indicates that the casualties published so far covered as (rest of sentence apparently deleted by the British censor). The total losses so far published aggregate 10,086 dead, 39,760 wounded and 13,621 missing.

OPINION OF LODGE

Senator Sees but Little Hope For Early Peace In Europe

"Any idea of early peace in Europe which would leave conditions the same as they were in July before the outbreak of the war should be dismissed immediately," declared Senator H. C. Lodge of Massachusetts, historian and authority on international law, who arrived at New York aboard the steamer Olympic.

"I am chiefly interested in having the United States maintain a strict neutrality," said Lodge. "The time may come when our good offices may be used effectively for the restoration of peace, but that time is not yet here. The talk about peace just now is originated by German agents for the purpose of influencing public opinioin."

Lodge declared that either Germany or the allies must win and dictate peace terms.

SEIZED BY ENGLAND

Beef Sent to Boston Will Be Used to Feed Men at the Front

The British freight steamer Kent, which arrived at Boston from Sydney, Aus., with 2000 sides of beef, was ordered by the British government to proceed to England with the cargo for English army consumption.

The small portion of the beef which had been unloaded was put back on the steamer and she prepared to sail at once. The beef was consigned to Boston dealers.

BIG "DRY" MAJORITY

Virginia Will Be Prohibition State Two Years Hence

Richmond, Sept. 24.—Virginia votes "dry." State-wide prohibition goes into effect Nov. 1, 1916, according to practically complete returns of the special election on the liquor question.

The "white ribboners" have a majority of from 32,000 to 35,000. Richmond, Alexandria and Norfolk were the only large cities voting "wet."

The new temperance law will prohibit the sale of liquor, even in clubs, and also prohibit manufacture of spirituous liquors. Wine, cider and beer may be manufactured, but must be shipped out of the state. Loss of $700,000 annually in liquor revenues to the state is estimated.

TALK FORECASTING WAR

German Attache's Utterances Taken Up by President Wilson

Washington, Sept. 24.—An interview published here and attributed to Baron von Schoen, attached to the German embassy here, dwelling upon the probability of war between the United States and Japan, was called to President Wilson's attention by administration officials. The interview quoted the baron as saying:

"You may safely say that the mass of the Japanese people believe that war with the United States is inevitable. Throughout Japan there is an intense hatred of the American people."

The interview attracted a good deal of attention in official quarters.

MUSIC AS A BOOSTER

Our Choral Society Is Second to None in State

Editor Daily Ledger:

While all the agitation and excitement is in the air regarding the "Boost QUINCY" movement, I would suggest that the trend of thought be not centred entirely upon the commercial and industrial question alone, but be turned to some extent toward art and music.

Music in its highest form is one of the necessary elements in the development of that which is best and noblest in the human heart. It carries in its wonderful message a power that is inspiring toward spirituality and moral strength.

To begin with, in order to have the best citizenship, we must have individuals of refined tastes and whose intellectuality is such that nothing mediocre or short of the very best is acceptable in labor, art or music.

We must not be behind the times in the question of music. The passion for the study and the ability to listen to and appreciate fine music will do much toward the uplift and benefit of those whose advantages in this sphere have not been as elevating as are possible.

There are many beautiful young voices in QUINCY, and I am proud to say that QUINCY can boast of a Choral Society which by comparison as to its artistic successes is second to none of its size in this state or part of the country. This society has been for seven years practically self supporting, only once being obliged to call upon its body of guarantors for assistance.

Statistics have proven that in most musical societies it is the usual and not the unusual thing to require financial assistance season after season. In view of the fact that musical productions of so high a standard and of so necessarily great expense can be supported almost entirely by the public, places the Quincy Choral Society in the front rank in regard to progress, and raises the musical influence in our city to a high position, where music lovers hope it will remain.

It is fortunate in having at its head a live wire president, Mr. T. B. Pollard, an ambitious executive board, and is drilled under the baton of a conductor who stands high in the ranks of musicians in this state, Mr. George S. Dunham.

Public school musical achievements are of high order; also there are splendid private teachers for both piano and voice in our city, and as it is now an accepted fact that it is no longer necessary for the student of music to acquire an education in Europe in order to gain recognition and success, so it is unnecessary for pupils to seek Boston teachers or those of any other city. Any movement to boom music is a philanthropic movement, so let us add to our happiness and joy of living for ourselves and others and BOOST MUSIC in QUINCY.

FAREWELL PARTY.

A very pleasant surprise was given Miss Maud Nicholls at her home on Station street Wednesday evening, when about thirty of her friends tendered her a farewell surprise party. Miss Edna Burke, on behalf of the Epworth League and friends, presented her a student's bag and wished her all success in her future work. Miss Nicholls thanked those present for their kind thoughtfulness. An enjoyable evening was spent in playing games. Ice cream and cake were served by those in charge. The committee were Edna G. Burke, Bessie Nicholls, Warren Jordan and Harold Williams. Miss Nicholls leaves Oct. 1 to go to the Deaconess Hospital where she will train for a nurse.

NEW LICENSES FOR GARAGES

Fire Hazard Commissioner John A. O'Keefe of Lynn is hard at work on a code of rules and regulations to govern the construction and maintenance of garages in the Metropolitan district. This is the first big problem to the tackled by the new commissioner.

"As it appears now," said Commission O'Keefe "the new regulations won't differ much from the excellent ones now in force. Before they can become binding, however, a public hearing must be held of which the public will be notified through the newspapers. It will probably be impossible to get the new regulations in force prior to Nov. 1, and until that time the present regulations will be in force."

The fire commissioner explained that the new garage regulations to be in force in the metropolitan district will, in all important particulars, follow closely the regulations now in operation through the entire State. Another subject that will receive the early attention of the fire hazard commissioner, according to Mr. O'Keefe, is the keeping and storing of inflamable fluids. The present law under which the new commission is operating requires that in quantities greater than 10 gallons of such fluid in buildings used in part for habitation purposes, or within 50 feet of dwelling houses, shall be enclosed within a fireproof room or structure. The commissioner will also give close attention to his duties under the new law that requires certain woodworking and other establishments to be equipped with automatic sprinklers.

Statements of Wollaston Citizens Are Always of Interest to Our Readers.

To many of our readers the streets of Wollaston are almost as familiar as those of our own town, and we are naturally interested to read of happenings there. The following report from a well-known and respected resident will be helpful to numbers of men and women here in Quincy.

P. J. Garrity, National Sailors' Home, Wollaston, Mass., says: "I was so badly troubled by kidney disease that I could hardly work. My back was very lame. It hurt me to stoop over or straighten. The pains never left me, even at night. I could find no position in bed that gave me any ease. I had to get up during the night as often as ten times to pass the kidney secretions. I could see that my health and strength were declining and was at a loss to know what to do, as the various remedies and different treatments I had tried had been useless. Doan's Kidney Pills were strongly recommended to me one day and I began using them. Before I had finished the fourth box, my old-time strength and health had returned."

BIG SUPPER AT SQUANTUM

Everybody Turns Out to Dedicate Community House

The Ladies society of the First Church of Squantum scored a tremendous success Wednesday night at their first supper and entertainment in Community hall. It was really the dedication of the hall as a banquet place. The crowd that attended was far beyond the most optimistic expectations of the women, and although they had amply provided for 250 there were over 300 in attendance and some of the late comers did not fare any too bounteously. But this was an incident for which the ladies could be easily pardoned, as the unexpectedly large crowd could not be figured on. It appeared that everyin Squantum attended.

The diners sat down to supper at 6.30 o'clock. Rev. T. W. Davison pastor of the church, presided and offered a blessing. The hall was attractively decorated with streamers of multicolored paper and cut flowers. The seating capacity of the hall is nearly 200 and every seat was filled before 6.15 o'clock. On each table were vases of cut flowers and a large supply of excellent home-cooked food.

So great was the overflow that two large tables were set up on the church lawn and fully 50 persons were served there.

Following the supper there was an entertainment in the church auditorium. Miss Edith Olson and Miss Helen Hanson played a piano duet. There was a song by J. H. Leonard accompanied by Mrs. Leonard. Mrs. Louise Holt sang a selection and Miss Caffie Turner gave a soprano solo. Mrs. Ethel Jones Bostwick was the accompanist.

The success of the entire affair reflected great credit upon the Squantum women who worked hard and faithfully for the entire success. The committee in charge included Mrs. Louise Holt, Mrs. George Morrill, Mrs L. B. Titus, Mrs. C. E. Carlson, Mrs. Gregory, Mrs. James Hagan, Mrs. J. H. Summer, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. John Marden, Mrs. Horace Orr, Mrs. John Holmes, Mrs. Roger Mason, Mrs. Joseph Upplings, Mrs. Herman Berghaus, Mrs. Peter Olson, Mrs. Frank Anderson, Mrs. Carl Lindgren, Mrs. Harris, Mrs. Richardson, Mrs. Hackenson and Mrs. Thomas Currie.

APPEALED FROM SENTENCE

Raymond W. Leavitt of Everett, a driver of an auto truck of F. J. Bush of South Boston, was sent to Milton Wednesday with a load of merchandise. On th way out he evidently made stops at several liquor places in Dorchester so that when he arrived in Milton he was in no condition to operate his car and he ended up by running through a fence. He was arraigned in the Quincy ccurt this morning and was fined $25 and sentenced to one month in the house of correction for operating an auto while under the influence of liquor, and was fined $10 for not having his license with him. He appealed.

THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

THOMAS CRANE PUBLIC LIBRARY
HIGH SCHOOL PUBLIC SCHOOLS
WOODWARD INSTITUTE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL

The final enrolment figures taken for the School department for purpose of comparison, show that the schools this year have 374 more pupils in attendance than was the case one year ago at this time. Of this increase, 295 is in the elementary schools, 26 in the Industrial school and 53 in the High school.

It is of interest to note that the school attendance from Squantum is considerably smaller this year than last, that section of the city showing no prospect of duplicating the rapid growth in school population noted at Houghs Neck.

CLASSES FOR WOMEN.

The school department will offer two lines of work in its evening industrial classes for women.

The class in cooking to be opened October 5 in the Willard school, will offer ten lessons on breakfasts, and ten lessons on suppers. Should there be a demand for further lessons, after these twenty lessons, other unit courses will be offered.

The class in dressmaking at the High school, will offer courses in waist making, and in the making of one-piece dresses, provided there is sufficient call for both.

These courses will be conducted on an entirely different basis from the sewing classes of previous years, and much attention will be paid to the use and reading of patterns. Should there be a call for further unit courses they will probably be such courses as the remodelling of adult clothing and making of childrens dreses. The change in the policy of these evening classes is to bring them to a point of more definite usefulness.

EVENING REGISTRATION.

Registration for the evening industrial classes may be made in several ways. The Industrial school on Phipps street will be open every evening next week from 7 to 9 for that purpose. Names may be sent by mail or telephone to the Superintendent of Schools. Employees at the Fore River shipyard may register with Joseph Larkin at the works. This advance registration is absolutely necessary for membership.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The pictures on exhibition this week at the Thomas Crane Public Library give one some faint idea of the beauties of South American scenery. There is an excellent map which may be useful in locating the various scenes.

Numerous views are given of the beautiful city of Rio de Janeiro whose bay and harbor are known to be the finest in the world. The broad thoroughfare of Central Avenue has imposing and beautiful public buildings, which make it a successful rival city of New York and Paris Tropical gardens and lofty mountains rising in in the distance lend to the city a veritable air of enchantment.

The city of Buenos Aires boasts several fine buildings and a luxuriant Park. The boating scene on the Tigre might be a familiar one to us were it not for the giant trees of tropical growth that border the banks.

The views of Patagonia convey some idea of the vast sheep raising industry carried on there.

The Straits of Magellan on their western end show us magnificent glaciers and rugged mountain peaks. One writer has said that the Himalayas, Andes and Alps combined, could not present more remarkable scenery than the Straits afford.

Four views of the Andes, and several scenes of the port of Valparaiso, and of the charming interior town of Mendoza complete this very interesting collection. We trust that the Junior Friday club may find these pictures of service in their study of South America.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

Advocates of the Prohibition movement began a Weymouth campaign in North Weymouth Tuesday, with T. Alexander Cairns Ph. D., the New Jersey author and lecturer as speaker. He said the annual "booze bill of Uncle Sam is more than $3,000,000,000. The relation of the prohibition question to white slave traffic was noted, also the economic side.

The special committee of nine men appointed at a special town meeting to purchase a motor fire apparatus for the town, voted after a midnight session, to purchase three machines two to be motor pumping fire trucks and the third a combination chemical and hose wagon, with the order to be placed at once. The appropriation is $24,500.

Mrs. Rosa M. Bagley, whose funeral was held Wednesday at Quincy, was the mother of George D. Bagley of this town.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Denton and daughter and Mrs. Bernard McDermott enjoyed an all day auto trip Tuesday.

Randall G. Loud, by authority of the State Board of Education, has entered the day class of the State Industrial school at Quincy.

The Town Treasurer is authorized to call for bids on town notes to the amount of $30,000 in anticipation of taxes.

The immediate attention of the Superintendent of Streets is to be given to the complaint of the Weymouth Heights Improvement Association regarding the condition of upper Green street.

CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION.

The Citizens' Association held its first meeting of the season Monday evening in Pythian hall, George Downing, the new president, presiding. The treasurer's report showed $97.96 on hand.

J. Herbert Walsh was appointed to arrange a program for Columbus day at Webb park, with power to select four assistants.

A special committee was appointed comprising the president, secretary and five others to petition the N. Y. N. H. & H. railroad for a new depot at Weymouth.

Rev. Chester Underhill of the First Baptist church gave a report of the Community Service and Children's Playground movement, which he recently inaugurated. The grounds in the rear of his church are being used as a playground, with several arrangements for recreation, to keep the children off the street.

Arrangements have been made for a series of free Sunday night talks beginning in October with such speakers as Edwin Mead, Rabbi Charles Fleischer, Mayor Curley and others of equal note.

The sum of $10 was voted by the association to assist in the community service and several active members joined the new movement for child and civic betterment.

BE A CREDIT TO THE UNIFORM

A brief analysis of the football prospects at Quincy High school tempts one to remind the members of the squad that they cannot be "perfect ladies" and play the game, that they can never stop a man by stepping aside, that end players must not pocket themselves within the play, that a secondary defense is invaluable only through rigorous practice, that the possibility of injury must never enter their mind, that a man's resisting power must at least be equal to his weight if nothing more, than the loss of breath in one rush means poor condition, that clear thinkers must retire at reasonable hours, that it is a crime to wear any kind of a uniform and not intend to prove the right to wear it, and last but not least—that the coaches are doing all they can to make the team a champion eleven. It is all up to the boys.

Advice is unacceptable if one wants to sport the uniform in "strictly gentlemanly" fashion. No right thinking mother or father would believe a boy had been through four periods uness a bruise of some kind showed up. So, once again you cannot be a football player and be a perfect lady.

This naturally opens up a grave question—is football brutal? Yes and no. But it all depends on the players.

Courage is necessary, strength and endurance and judgment are factors. The game is a battle of wits where the smaller often outgenerals the larger fellow. In the interests of sport, forget the possibilities of injury. Face the music if you don the uniform, and then go out and dig for the honor of the school represented, for it is better to return home losers after a valiant fight than the victims of a complete rout.

QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL.

SOCCER LEAGUE SCHEDULE

Grammar School Teams Begin Games Next Tuesday

The Grammar School soccer foot ball league begins its series of games next Tuesday afternoon at Merrymount Park upper field at 4 o'clock. The various squads have been working hard in spite of the hot weather.

A change in the rules has been made which it is hoped will tend to eliminate the numerous no score tie games that have taken place in past seasons and it is hoped will make every game a decisive game and therefore more interesting.

The change is an increase in goal width by wing extensions as stated in rule six.

The rules for the season will be the Official 1914 rules, with the following exceptions.

1—Prevocational boys and boys, who are or will be 16 years of age on or before July 1 of the current year, will not be allowed to play in the league.

George Stallings, Who Worked Miracle With Boston Braves

GEORGE STALLINGS, manager of the Boston Braves, is known as "The Miracle Man of Baseball." Within a month he lifted his team from last place to first, and, while he did not hold the top long, he had proved that he was a pennant contender and that he would have much to say about who did get the bunting. And he did it with a team that critics agree is not particularly strong. He has three topnotch pitchers, but they became topnotchers under Stallings' tutelage, and he is entitled to the credit for their development. Stallings is shown in a good humor in the picture. It must have been made just after his team had won, for when his team is losing he is a demon. He uses warm language with much skill and extravagance when the game is not going to suit him, and his players hear words that they remember. But recently Stallings has had few occasions to draw on his supply of invective. The team has been winning.

LITTLE BITS OF SPORTING CHAT

Managers Have Learned How to Make Pitchers Work.

SOME ARE GOOD RUNNERS.

Others Can Swat the Ball, and the Twirlers Are Being Used as Runners and Batters In the Pinches—Suggested Change Regarding Stymie Which Is Indorsed by Golf Players.

Several managers have at last discovered ways and means to make the pitchers really earn their pay and are putting the new found knowledge to excellent advantage.

It has been learned that quite a number of the dainty, refined specialists can run like frightened rabbits when they are not wearying their delicate feet scratching up and down around the pitching slab.

It has also been discovered that some of them can even hit like a hammer of Thor when not compelled to concentrate their energies and what they call their minds upon the hurling job; that many a slabster who can't bat .150 during pitching days can laminate the gyroscope for .300 and for better if that is all he has to do; hence the pitchers are going in as utility runners for slow geared sluggers, and several of them have been used of late as pinch hitters with amazing results.

Do the dainty, pampered petties like this extra toil? They do, and they don't. They aren't a bit stuck on the idea of scampering round the bases in the broiling sun and consequently are much opposed to the pinch base running.

But the idea of slugging that ball; of figuring as the heroes of the eleventh hour; of saying to the other pitcher, "Huh, yuh big lucky stiff, yuh'd 'a' been beat tuh death but for me!"—that fills them with imperial delight, swells out their chests and gives them the insolent nerve that is the best possible asset of a pinch hitter.

"Everybody works but father and the pitcher," and now the pitcher's working too.

Samuel Dalzell, member of the Chevy Chase club and one of the leading golfers of Washington, is author of a suggestion that is meeting with the general approval of the trodders of the links in that section.

He and any number of other players are not satisfied with the conditions relative to the stymie. At present the rules call for a rotation of play that in the opinion of the exponents of the game thereabouts is unjust in many cases.

Take, for instance, when one player is three feet from the hole and his opponent just a few inches farther away. Then the latter makes a poor putt, but gets in the road of his rival's ball. This evidently is not fair to the person who had previously shown the better golf by his approach and could lead to unfair tactics.

Mr. Dalzell's plan is always to have the player nearest the hole continue until his ball is cupped, and in this suggestion he has the backing of practically, if not all, of the golfers who have heard of his "plea." It certainly has a reasonable foundation.

W. R. Applegarth, the English sprinter, who has been making such amazingly fine performances recently, failed the other day in an effort to set a new mark for the 130 yard dash. The distance is an unusual one, and the record of 12 3-5 seconds seems not extraordinarily low, but Applegarth could not reach it. He won his race easily enough, however, and poor conditions are believed to have been a big handicap.

Before the outbreak of the world war James Braid, the famous British golf professional, made a set of clubs for President Wilson. In giving the clubs to a cousin of the president for transmission to America Braid expressed the hope that he might have the pleasure some day of playing with the distinguished American.

The adoption of boxing in the Victoria schools is part of a national scheme for the physical development of Australian schoolboys. It is planned to select a hundred high school boys from each state, train and coach them and then use them as instructors for the others.

"Snowy" Baker originated this plan, which was taken up with enthusiasm by the government officials, many of whom are ardent followers of the sport.

Palmero Has Learned English.

The few months he has been in the United States has made Emilio Palmero, the Cuban, quite familiar with the English language. When he first came to this country Emilio didn't know a word. Now he speaks English quite fluently.

DAY NURSERY TAG DAY

Mrs. Hultman, the President Tells of Work

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Hultman, the president of the Quincy Day Nursery Association, delivered the following address this morning before the Federation of Women's Clubs, which is of timely interest because of the Day Nursery Tag Day in this city on Saturday of this week:

"The Quincy Day Nursery is an incorporated society for the purpose of caring for the fatherless children of the city whose mothers must work away from home during the day; the mother may be a widow through death or desertion.

"No child under nine months or over seven years of age is admitted to the Nursery excepting as provided by the by-laws. Children who have been cared for in the Nursery for several years still have the privilege of taking their luncheons there when attending school until they are twelve years of age.

"The mothers pay five cents a day for each child and for that small fee the children are cared for from seven in the morning until six at night, and provided with one substantial meal at twelve o'clock, which consists of one of the following dishes each day: corn chowder, pot roast, beef stew, beans, macaroni with tomatoes and creamed salt fish and mashed potatoes.

"Like all other charitable organizations, we have difficulty in raising funds for the support of the Nursery although for the number of children we care for the expense is very small. Our rent is $18 per month, the matron's salary $30, her assistant receives $12, the scrubwoman $4, the telephone is $2.35, and the food averages $10.

"The income averages about $17 per month from the five cents per day paid in by the mothers for the care of the children, and the ten cent fees charged an employer when the Nursery obtains help for her. The telephone practically pays for itself, bringing in about $2 per month.

"The Nursery is constantly growing. In August, 1914, we cared for 370 children, as against 217 in August 1913. I do not mean to give a wrong impression by that statement, it simply means we cared for an average of 18 children each day last August, as against 11 a year ago in August.

"We know that the Nursery has justified its existence, and it is unfortunate that it should be necessary for its officers to beg for its support. Donations of all kinds are always welcome, especially food, fuel and money.

"Now I am going to talk a little about "Tag Day." I do not know that it is a popular way of raising money, but we get greater results from "Tag Day" than from any other source, and although we all think there should be some better way of raising the necessary funds; when the time comes to decide the members all vote for Tag Day and Saturday, Sept. 26, is the day chosen for this year. If only we have fair weather I am sure results will warrant our having added another to our already long list.

"There has been some objection to having young girls sell the tags, and I suppose it is a very natural feeling for mothers to wish to keep their daughters sheltered from the public, but there is another point of view. All mothers wish their daughters to help make the world a better place, and what nobler way can they find than by helping these women less fortunate than themselves, who in their youth may have had all the protection and kindness that those who are asked to help now have, and may lose by adversity and misfortune over which they have no control.

"It is all for sweet charity, and it seems impossible that anyone should misunderstand or take advantage of a young girl asking them to buy a tag. So far as we can, the girls work among acquaintances and friends, and when they are placed in more public places they are properly chaperoned.

"The Nursery has now had Tag Day a number of years, and I think the public have come to expect it as an annual event, and really enjoy helping us, at least it seems so as they respond so generously.

"This year we are trying a slight innovation. We are having our Tag Day the day before the railroads change to their winter schedule and the timetables for each separate district in Quincy are printed thereon. A city which is able to contribute $1,000. in one day to an outside charity such as the Salem Fire Relief Fund ought to be willing to contribute that much once a year for the relief of its unfortunate mothers."

MILEAGE RATE INCREASE

Forbidden by New Hampshire Public Service Commission

Concord, N. H., Sept. 24.—The New Hampshire public service commission made official announcement that the proposed increases in mileage ticket rates from 2 cents to 2¼ cents a mile on the Boston and Maine and Grand Trunk railroads will not be allowed to take effect in New Hampshire.

Quoting the statute requiring the issuance of 500-mile mileage books at the rate of 2 cents a mile on all railroads within the state, with certain unimportant exceptions, the commission says it believes it to be its duty to assume that the statute is valid and binding upon all steam railroads and is accordingly issues an order fixing 2 cents per mile for 500-mile books as the lawful maximum mileage rate.

VILLA DESERTS "FIRST CHIEF"

Rupture Between Foremost Factors in Mexican Politics

NEW REVOLUTION IS STARTED

States of Chihuahua and Sonora Proclaim Independence of Party as Represented by Carranza—Break Causes Sensation In Washington—Evacuation of Vera Cruz Delayed.

Washington, Sept. 24.—General Villa, dominant leader in northern Mexico, denounced the central government headed by Venustiano Carranza, and said he no longer recognized Carranza as "first chief" of the constitutionalists.

This places the state of Chihuahua in open revolt against the party in power at Mexico City as well as Senora, the new border state to the west, where Governor Maytorena previously has proclaimed his independence of the constitutionalist party as represented by Carranza.

Villa agents sent several carloads of munitions and troops to assist Maytorena, who is in open revolt against Carranza.

This sudden break between the two foremost factors in Mexico's politics caused a profound sensation here. Secretary Bryan would make no comment and White House officials likewise were silent.

It was generally understood, however, that President Wilson, who has set no date for the departure of American forces from Vera Cruz, probably would delay the evacuation until the controversy was adjusted.

Official reports from various points in Mexico had pictured the situation as ominous.

Well-informed officials seem to think the cause of the rupture between Carranza and Villa was the latter's disapproval of Carranza's system of representation for the convention. Villa was determined that his followers should control the convention or he would not participate in it.

Just what the American government will do in the present emergency is not clear. There was confidence among some officials that a compromise might be arranged by further conferences sand it is not certain whether the United States will interpose its influence or await developments.

SKELETONS IN A WELL

Authorities Probing Mysterious Find on a New Hampshire Farm

Auburn, N. H., Sept. 24.—Three human skeletons, found at the bottom of a well on the Mtichell farm here, are now under examination by the medical examiner of Rockingham county to determine how the three met their death.

At the bottom of the well, long disused, since it had been dried by a drouth, Michael Mitchell happened upon the skeletons of two adults and one child. The skull of one of the adults was badly crushed, and had the appearance of having been struck by some heavy instrument.

Sheriff Spinney gave out a statement that it was very probable that murder had been committed, and sent out word all over the state to be on the watch for a Miss Gertrude Day and two men, who formerly lived on the farm.

An Army Campaign

It Was Planned and Executed by Women

By F. A. MITCHEL

Colonel Edgar Garrison was a soldier from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. He considered his profession the noblest of all and contended that nothing should be permitted to creep into the army to destroy its efficiency. He looked with concern upon the many weddings that were taking place among the officers and declared that unless the matrimonial fever were checked the army would become useless except for show purposes.

"What is a soldier intended for?" he would say. "To be killed. He is paid to hold himself in readiness by the government for that especial purpose. Then, too, women and children are encumbrances to an army even in peaceful garrison life. An officer is ordered from one post to another. What does this involve? The transfer of gun and caisson, of sword and bayonet? No. The bulk of the impedimenta is women and children."

A number of officers' wives were accustomed to gather mornings on the porch of the quarters pertaining to one of them, when, seated in rocking chairs, they sewed, chatted and rocked. One morning the colonel, whose remarks upon matrimony in the army had been repeated by the husband of one of them to his wife the night before, passed this "rocking chair brigade," as he had dubbed them. He took off his forage cap with a flourish and smiled benignly on them—for it is a matter of fact that a man who inveighs against the softer sex is especially deferential to them—and passed over the parade with a strut intended to show them that if he had the power he would banish every one of them.

Forthwith the rocking chair brigade resolved themselves into a council of war to consider the most advantageous method of making the colonel eat his words. But, first and foremost, every rocker was pledged not to reveal to her husband any plan that might be decided upon. And before going further I would say that the softer sex has been much maligned as to the keeping of a secret, for of the eight ladies who composed the brigade not one was found to betray the camp, though it must be admitted that each and every one confessed afterward to her husband that it almost killed her to keep "mum."

SHE SAT AND CHATTED WITH HIM.

The ladies having kept the secret, far be it from the narrator of this story to give it away. Suffice it to say that on the very morning that the colonel shrugged his shoulders at the rocking chair brigade and showed his back to them, never turning till he had disappeared within the portals of his office, a plan of attack was decided upon, to be executed by Mrs. Major MacCallum, the ranking lady of the post, the commandant being a bachelor.

However, before the campaign was inaugurated there was a long period of watchful waiting, during which the ladies of the post smiled on the colonel, the colonel became more and more careless in the expression of his army-matrimonial opinions and the leaks through the married officers widened. As the ocean wave tosses its head most defiantly before breaking, so did the colonel, ignorant of the impression he was creating, air his opinions that the noblest work of God is a soldier—except one encumbered with a family, when it is his bounden duty to resign and give way in the line of promotion.

One morning the colonel while crossing the parade to his office saw the post carryall drawn by a pair of mules go by. At the window appeared the face of a girl about eighteen years of age. Whether this lady was fair or not makes no difference in this story. She was young. Every other woman at the post had reached middle age, and all had borne their husbands more children than the army regulations provide. Some of them had lost whatever beauty they may have once possessed.

But the face at the coach window! The colonel had seen nothing like it since he had been promoted and ordered to this frontier post. Its owner had evidently just arrived, for on the rack in the rear was a trunk big enough, the colonel thought, to fill an army wagon without any other baggage. The commandant went on to his office, sat down at his desk and went to work looking over a bundle of requisitions left by the quartermaster for his approval. But somehow that mild face at the coach window, wearing the pleased look of one visiting new and attractive scenes, got between the man and the requisitions. He turned down one for repairs on the guardhouse, which were badly needed, and approved one for laundry implements without noticing that had it not been for an overplus of married soldiers at the post the present supply would have been ample.

Be it remembered that Colonel Garrison was forty-two years old, a period when a man feels that he has passed beyond the time when he has any attraction for young girls; that he had seen no woman for more than a year, except those attached to the post he commanded, none of whom was either young or beautiful. When, therefore, the next day he passed Mrs. MacCallum sitting on her porch in front of her quarters with the girl he had seen at the coach window he stopped to pass a few compliments. Mrs. MacCallum introduced Miss Madeline Badger, her niece, who had come to make her a brief visit.

"I fear, colonel," said the lady, "that you are such a devotee to bachelor habits that we shall see nothing of you while my niece is here; otherwise I should hope to have you aid in entertaining her."

"I assure you, madam, with several youngsters having nothing to do but an occasional tour of duty the young lady will not need the attention of an old fellow like me."

Miss Madeline Badger made no reply to this whatever in words, but sat looking at the colonel with admiring eyes. One would have thought she was looking at an Apollo. There is something very attractive to a middle aged man in an admiring gaze from a young girl who has not yet learned to keep her admiration to herself. The colonel was much affected, and as he walked away, feeling that those mild eyes were following, he felt more proud of himself than ever before in his life. But probably, he thought, when the youngsters appeared they would be turned in another direction.

Mrs. MacCallum decided to give a dance for her niece, and great preparations were making therefor.

"Colonel Garrison," she said, "I am in trouble about the matter of opening the ball. I assigned Mr. Twining to open it with the guest of honor, my niece, and she has refused him for a first partner."

"What's the matter with Twining?" asked the colonel.

"Nothing. Madeline has no objection to him whatever. But she considers that since the ball is given for her it is her right to open it with the commandant."

"What! Does she wish to open it with me?"

"She declares that she will open it with no one else."

"My dear madam, please tell your niece that I shall be charmed to open the ball with her."

The colonel dancing with Miss Madeline Badger was surely an interesting sight. To be preferred to young men who had been recent girl killers at West Point was a triumph that he had supposed impossible for a man of his age. Jupiter leading Terpsichore in the dance could not have appeared more godly. Nor was the first dance all. When it was over Miss Badger led the commandant to a window seat, where she sat and chatted with him, and since none of his inferior officers would venture to take her away from him and she made no excuse to leave him he was forced whether or not to stay where he was till the man who had been assigned to her for the next dance approached.

Mrs. MacCallum had seen to it that the colonel was down on Miss Badger's card for a number of dances, and when the function was over he went to his quarters, his head whirling as his heels had whirled during the evening. The major's wife had gained a victory in the very beginning of the campaign.

Miss Badger instead of making a short visit made a long one. But she made short work of the colonel. Those who were in the secret that she was being used to put him hors de combat in his fight against women in the army did not dream but that she would throw him over in the end for one of the younger officers, any one of whom would have been glad to get her. Those unadvised wondered what it all meant.

Every one knows that in the choice of a mate a man is subject to influence, and what he will do may be foretold from those influences. As for a woman, in the matter of her choice she resembles a crab. No one can tell whether she will go forward or backward or sidewise. Miss Badger in the end astonished those who had put her forward to sting the colonel by suddenly announcing her engagement to him.

The conspirators builded better than they knew.

Colonel Garrison in speaking of women in the army has all the enthusiasm of a new convert.

"Why, my dear fellow," he will say to a brother officer, "what would become of the discipline necessary to the army were it not for the softening influence of women? There would be perpetual mutiny."

THE MARKET BASKET.

These are sad days for the family market basket.

Many events seem to have conspired to bring about higher prices, and the careful housewife must be wide awake to make ends meet.

She cannot afford to purchase haphazard.

She must have the best available information of products and prices.

In these days the advertising columns of a live newspaper like the Daily Ledger are immensely valuable.

They are the public market place. They keep a woman informed ta to the greatest purchasing power of her dollar.

The woman who uses newspaper advertising for her guide is more apt to get 100 cents plus for her dollar than her neighbor who shops haphazard.

LOCOMOTIVE GIVES ALARM

Carload of Sleepers on Fire at Quincy Adams

The sounding of a fire signal from the deep toned steam whistle of a freight engine, followed by an alarm from box 36 at 1.30 this morning, attracted a large number of people to the Quincy Adams station where a carload of sleepers was briskly burning.

When the fire broke out the car was on a siding above the freight depot. After its discovery by the freight crew they dropped their cars and pulled the burning load to the station so the fire department could work without being handicapped.

The fire probably started from a spark and must have been burning some little time before discovery. The flames were slowly eating their way through the centre when the department arrived. A brilliant reflection accompanied the fire.

ACCIDENT TO CARPENTER.

Carl Anderson of Grant street had the misfortune to fall Wednesday afternoon, receiving a fracture of the ribs, besides being more or less bruised about the shoulder. Mr. Anderson who is a carpenter, had been at work on a new house near Faxon Park. At the conclusion of his work Wednesday afternoon, he went to the house to close the doors for the night. In doing so he stepped on the piazza which gave way, causing him to fall a distance of six feet or more to the cellar. Fellow workmen secured a carriage and he was taken to his home where he was attended by Dr. Sargent. It was found that he had received the injuries stated.

CLOSET FIRE.

A fire in a clothes closet in the apartment of Harry Metofsky in the Silver block at Main and Sumner streets on Wednesday evening created much excitement in the East side settlement. The fire was burning briskly when the apparatus arrived in response to box 173, sounded at 7.15, but they made quick work of it. Clouds of smoke rolled through the house and did some damage. The property damaged in all was very small.

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

John Cappeferi of 21 Quincy avenue was pleasantly surprised on his birthday Tuesday. He was presented a gold mounted pipe and also received many other remembrances. Wilbur D. Richardson made the presentation to which Mr. Cappeferi responded with thanks. An enjoyable musical program was given by Mr. Richardson pianist and Miss Agnes Reardon, vocal soloist. Refreshments were served.

The weather today is not quite as warm as it has been for the past few days, yet is plenty hot enough for most people. Weather forecasters say that there are several rain storms headed this way, which will give the earth a drenching when they arrive.

The gilt lettering on the bulletin board in the First church yard is being changed to black. While the gilt letters were very attractive it was impossible to read them half way across the street, especially when the sun shone on the board. The black letters however make it possible to read the board from across the street.

MANUEL PERRY AT SHIPYARD

Has Been in Italy Installing Turbines

On the Olympic which arrived at New York on Wednesday was Mrs. W. G. A. Pattee, Richard Pattee and Mrs. Elizabeth Pattee of School street, Quincy.

Manuel G. Perry, who has been the personal representative of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation to the Italian Navy, was one of the passengers on the Canopic which arrived in the lower harbor on Wednesday evening. This morning while on his way to the shipyard he renewed many friendships in this city.

Mr. Perry left here two years ago to direct the installation of turbines built at the shipyard for several vessels of the Italian navy. Because the peculiar design of the vessels developed an unusual propellor vibration, which required adjustments, Mr. Perry's return was delayed.

On the home passage he met Cardinal O'Connell who went to Rome for the election of a Holy Father to succeed the late Pope Pius X. The eminent churchman was accompanied by a large party he said and was a general favorite aboard ship.

Mr. Perry says that mobilization is steadily going on in Italy, in preparation for probable war, and that intense excitement prevails.

He is in the best of health, and says he enjoyed his stay immensely. He speaks in fine terms of the hospitality of the people, many of whom he was thrown in constant contact with during his visit.

FRIENDLY BUT NOT AGENT

Charles E. Decker Denies Rumor and Makes Announcement

Editor Daily Ledger:

Through the columns of your esteemed paper I would like to convey to your thousands of readers a true denial to the rumors being spread broadcast by an editor of a local sensational sheet, that I am the publicity agent of my good friend, Chester I. Campbell, now running for Mayoralty nomination.

CHARLES E. DECKER.

While I admit that I am interested in his success, I emphatically deny any connection with his campaign advertising. Mr. Campbell has a most capable man in charge of all of his advertising in the person of John Mahoney, and I know that Mr. Mahoney will handle all of Mr. Campbells' publicity.

Yesterday I took out nomination papers for council-man-at-large, Republican, and I expect to have my hands full, in furthering my own interests.

Charles E. Decker.

SAFETY FIRST ILLUSTRATED

Moving Pictures for Benefit of Shipyard Men

The value of "Safety First" and the results of such campaigns will be directly brought to the attention of the general public of this city at the Kincaide theatre Sunday afternoon, when moving pictures of accidents, their causes and effects, will be shown here for the first time.

The affair will be held under the auspices of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, which employs more men at its shipyard than any other firm in Quincy, all of whom now go about their duties with "Safety First" uppermost in their thoughts.

The campaign was inaugurated there after the departure of the Rivadavia, and to get it under way required many changes. Signs with man size letters, call "Safety First" to the attention of workmen, and in the short time the new rules have been in effect there has been a noticeable decrease in accidents, 80 per cent of which were caused by carelessness.

The company realizing the marked benefit of a Safety First campaign have decided to popularize it in this city, working along the same lines of the Boston Chamber of Commerce which gave it such a boost in Boston.

The first step will be an entertainment and moving pictures, to which all are invited, no admission being charged. The next will be lectures by men who have been prominently identified with the movement since it was launched in this state.

And the next step will be the practice of the lessons taught through the silent pictures or the eloquence of the lecturer.

Music will be furnished by the Wilson orchestra of six pieces, and every convenience for the comfort of the audience has been arranged. The first film will be started at three o'clock and several hours will elapse before the entertainment will be finished.

THE CANDIDACY OF MR. TILDEN

The announcement in Wednesday's Ledger, that ex-City Treasurer Henry F. Tilden was being urged to enter the Mayoralty contest as a Republican candidate, met with an almost spontaneous voice of approval. What lends weight to the movement is the fact that the gentlemen behind it are not seekers after public office, and they have no candidates they are putting forward for appointment, their main object being to see that there is a Mayor elected who will give the city a business-like administration, which will admit is sadly needed.

Mr. Tilden is a retired business man and the salary that goes with the office is no consideration. Being a retired business man he has the time to give to the duties of the office, which it needs and that he would give the city one of the best administrations it ever had is generally admitted.

Until the Daily Ledger announced the fact that he was being urged to enter the Mayoralty contest. it was not known to many that he was being considered. The announcement however has immediately met with popular favor and while he is to give his final answer Saturday night he is being besieged on all sides that the answer may be favorable.

His telephone line Wednesday evening was probably one of the busiest in the city, for he was called many times during the evening by citizens from all parts of the city, each of whom urged him to give a favorable answer to the call that had come to him.

The citizens' committee back of the movement promise if the answer is favorable to wage one of the liveliest and cleanest campaigns that the city has ever had. From what is known of this committee they are all workers and will be on the job early and late until the votes are counted and the result declared.

It is planned to have rallying committees in every ward of the city, and it is proposed that they shall be hustlers. It is expected that a delegation of fifty or more citizens will wait on him Saturday night for his answer.

Although there has been no frost the leaves on the trees bave begun to dry up and fall off, with the result that the sidewalks in many places are covered with dead leaves. Then the hot weather has dried up the streets so badly that the dust is several inches thick, and what little wind there is blows it about in great clouds. Fruit is also drying up.

FIRE CHIEF ON INSPECTION

Finds Many Fire Menaces About the City

That Quincy merchants not only disregard ordinary fire precaution, but are so careless that they allow menaces of the most dangerous character to continue, despite the lessons which should be drawn from the Salem and Manchester fires, is forcibly brought to the attention of the general public by Chief Engineer Faxon Billings of the Fire department who in conversation this morning simply mentioned a few discoveries made during his inspection this week.

Chief Billings says that in one establishment where large quantities of cleansing fluids are used, he found 135 gallons of gasoline, and that the cellar of another was so cluttered he allowed 24 hours to make a "cleanup" or have his store closed.

Today rigorous inspection is being made and even City Hall has not been overlooked by the men assigned to the task. Several startling discoveries in the business section pointed to menaces of a startling nature.

Chief Billings is determined that fire risks shall be natural ones, and that all merchants must confine themselves to the regulations prescribed for the prevention of fires. He is very enthusiastic in his inspection, and aside from the regulations enacted, he has the solid backing of public opinion.

Much of the inspection work which formerly was done by the State police has been transferred to his department through recent laws, and severe penalties can be imposed for gross and flagrant infractions.

Voters Not Educated in the Use of Stickers

When seen this morning, Col. Henry L. Kincaide said the question of the Progressive nomination for congress from the fourteenth district was still in doubt, although he believed that the ultimate result would be that he would be nominated.

Today the returns from some of the smaller towns are being gone over in an endeavor to verify the figures.

Had Col. Kincaide's name been printed on the ballot there would have

WOULD IMPROVE FIRE DEPARTMENT

Chief Engineer Faxon Billings, in order to stimulate the interest of the men in fire department matters, has secured copies of the rules and regulations published by the Massachusetts commission. They will be distributed to all ambitious enough to study for advancement.

The manuals are published with the approval of the Massachusetts civil service commission, and contain information of value to all members of the department.

Particular mention is made of the practical and modern equipment of apparatus with fire fighting appliances, and chapters are devoted to the most practical and efficient way in which they can be used.

Chief Billings sees a future growth of the department which will increase if so that additional ranking officers will be necessary.

It is generally rumored in circles where fire department matters are discussed, that a movement is on foot to abolish the office of district chiefs and appoint a member of the department to act in that capacity in each district. The change was first suggested several weeks ago, following a club meeting in City Square but has taken no definite shape as yet.

BURGLARIES THE WORK OF BOYS

The police, who were at work all day Thursday on the burglaries at Wollaston, have come to the conclusion that all of the breaks were made by school boys, and the chances are that the boys will be brought into court at an early date. On Wednesday on account of the extreme hot weather several of the schools were dismissed, and the breaks came shortly after. The fact that jewelry, that was in plain sight was not taken, seems to point to the fact that the parties were after money. Another thing that points to it being the work of boys was the fact that, a half basket of peaches was devoured.

Under the new delinquent law it is hard work to give wayward boys the punishment some of them deserve and the idea of the laws today are that minors shall not be brought into court in order that records may not be obtained and a shroud forever be placed on their names.

The persistance of boys, however, in robbing orchards is very provoking and some law should be enacted that these boys may receive the punishment they deserve.

CHRISTMAS TREE AT MERRYMOUNT

Is Proposed By the Quincy Federation of Women's Clubs-- A Municipal Affair

Also Urge Need of Waiting Room in City Square

An interesting meeting of the Quincy Federation of Women's Clubs was held Thursday morning at the Women's clubhouse, the president Mrs. Wilson Marsh presiding. The clubs of the city were well represented by about twenty officers and delegates.

The social and civic work of the city was presented by chairmen of committees. Mrs. Eben W. Sheppard under civics, brought forward the idea of having a municipal Christmas tree at Merrymount park, in which the whole city would co-operate; the clubs, Board of Trade, Y. M. C. A. churches and associations. Mrs. H. H. Kitson, chairman of the Civics committee of the Quincy Women's Club, also spoke on the subject, believing it might be made a merry affair. The tree would be illuminated; churches would be asked to assist with their choirs and choruses for carol singing, the rehearsal of well known hymns to begin at once.

Mrs. Chandler W. Smith told of the need of a waiting room in City Square with sanitary conveniences, seats, etc. It was thought as the Bay State Street Railway made Quincy centre a transfer station, and congested the street and sidewalk with its passengers, it should maintain a properly equipped waiting room at this point, similar to those in Lynn, Gloucester, Brockton and largely populated localities. Mrs. Smith read a letter from Mrs. Poole of the Brockton Women's Club telling of their efforts and success in that city.

Mrs. E. C. Hultman, president of the Quincy Day Nursery Association told of its needs and the co-operation of the women's clubs. Her address was given in full in Thursday's Ledger so as to reach the public a few days before the annual tag day of the Nursery which occurs Saturday.

Mrs. N. S. Hunting, chairman of the Visiting Nurse committee of the Quincy Women's Club, presented its work and needs and brought out the idea that possibly the work could be better carried on as a separate organization or by the Federated clubs, instead of by the Quincy Women's Club. It was a struggle to raise funds, and possibly would be more far reaching under broader auspices. It was voted as it was a work undertaken and carried on for several years by the Quincy Women's Club, that the club be consulted as to its wishes and that it bring the matter before its directors and club members.

Mrs. G. E. Pfaffmann spoke for the Quincy Young Women's Club, and the need of paid workers. She asked for the interest and co-operation of all the clubs of the city. Club women should act as "big sisters" and lend a helping hand. Meetings were held in High school gym, over 75 girls attended the last meeting. Good work was being accomplished but much more could be done along all lines with more workers, more money and co-operation.

The journalists of Europe proposes to fight this war to a finish, if it takes their last typewriter ribbon.

If these $2. a day young men continue to draw $5 an hour for teaching modern dancing, the business is very likely to be overdone.

Some motorists persist in waiting for railroad trains to pass, though they may stand an even chance of getting across alive, and making a good record for their run.

It is quite possible that big Austria would speak a little more gently to little Servia, if she had it to do over again.

It is claimed that war talk should be kept out of the public schools, but it is hoped that this isn't meant to exclude football.

War is a cruel sport, but kings will be kings, and must have their little game.

If every one has to wear white stockings next year, it is hoped they have them washed at least once a fortnight.

If a person's hair suddenly turns grey, it is not necessarily due to prostration from grief owing to the war. It may be because hair-dye has gone up.

Teaching children to write fast is a modern fad. It saves valuable time, as no one ever has to stop to decipher his own handwriting.

Their war being mostly over, the Mexican people have returned to the national industry of loafing.

The returning tourists are now debating whether the crime of the century was the burning of Louvain, or the disappearance of their superflous trunks.

A Chicago magazine offers a $100 prize for the best war poem. Any one can make a dollar or two at his regular occupation by not stopping to take part in this competition.

There is indignation among some of the tourists that they had to come home from Europe by ordinary first cabin accommodations.

CRUELTY IN WAR.

When the American troops landed in Vera Cruz, which city they are soon to evacuate, they encountered a murderous gang of snippers. Yet they undertook no reprisals, save to attack a few buildings where the assailants were sheltering. They at once assumed a task of friendly good nature, cleaning up the town and letting loose prisoners from a pestiferous jail.

The ghastly tale of outrages asserted against the warring soldiers of Europe seems strangely in contrast. The various governments are now engaged in firing charges and counter charges against each other of savage and medieval practices.

This difference deepens one's pride in American achievement and American character. Wherever our soldier and sailor boys go, they seem to be gentlemen, protectors of the weak, chivalrous toward a foe.

American life, with its free schools and democratic feeling, raises the ordinary man to a level previously and elsewhere unknown. European culture may develop its educated classes to a type just as high as our best facilities can produce.

But the final test of national institutions is this: What are they doing for the average man, the artisan of the city, the lonely farmer in his fields, and the miner in his shaft?

In an American school, all kinds of boys come in contact with refined teachers. At our national game of baseball and other sports, they learn lessons of fair play. In the army and navy, they do not break loose in the hellish work reported from the battlefields of Europe. They are still the good sports one sees on the ball ground, ready to give and take without personal rancor. Europe produces no such spectacle of the training of the average man, but is turning loose hordes of undisciplined roughs ready for arson and outrage.

ALL ATTACKS ARE RESISTED BY VON KLUCK

Allies Continue Circling Operations on German Right

PERONNE IS RECAPTURED IN DESPERATE BATTLE

French and British Eating Steadily Into Entrenched Positions of Invaders—Appalling Losses of Life, Wheat Fields Being Covered and Trenches Filled to the Crest With Dead of Both Sides—Allies in Territory Where They Once Fought as Enemies— Furious Fighting on German Left, Where Kaiser's Troops Recapture Varennes, From Which They Had Been Driven Back

London, Sept. 25.—With the capture of Peronne the allied armies are seeking to sunder the army of General von Kluck from the reinforcements under General von Boehm.

These reinforcements, comparatively fresh, have entrenched behind a long line extending from Cambrai to St. Amand, the latter almost on the Belgian-French boundary.

If the Germans can join the armies of Von Kluck and von Boehm, the flanking operations of the allies will have to be changed to a frontal attack, as it would be impossible to continue the turning movement into Belgium. This would weaken the front and invite the Germans to assume the offensive.

The recapture of Peronne was accomplished in the face of extremely desperate resistance by the Germans. The main body of the French and British advance against the invading right wing is in the vicinity of Roye, about twenty miles south of Peronne. This wedge that is being driven north was able to move forward several miles Thursday, the Germans apparently being engaged in trying to draw the original right wing and the Belgian army into contact.

Still Encircling Invaders

Instead of attempting to extend their lines further and further to the west as the allies continued their encircling operations, the invaders have now a line running north and south that they are trying to join to the east and west line.

The French and British are swinging in toward the east, directing a smash where the Germans have not yet entrenched in great strength and hoping to separate the German armies. If this can be done, the flanking movement against von Kluck can be continued, while fresh allied troops take up the fight with von Boehm.

Except upon the extreme east and west, the fighting has practically ceased, although the incessant cannonading goes on night and day. The allies made a slight advance to the northwest of Berry-au-Bac, but outside of this the lines in the centre remained content with their positions.

Awful Cost of Fighting

For nearly two weeks the Germans and the French between Rheims and the Argonne forest have been strengthening their entrenchments until they now bear little resemblance to temporary trenches. Barbed wire has been strung for miles, the ground across which charges are expected has been mined, and batteries are cleverly concealed by trees and bushes. Almost as by magic the peaceful fields of central France have been dug into parallel lines of forts, upon a scale of such magnitude that only from an aeroplane could the extraordinary spectacle be comprehended.

Against the German right wing the fighting has been desperate, with the allies eating steadily into the strongly entrenched positions. They have pushed forward at terrible cost. Fields of wheat across which charges have been ordered are made hideous by the sight of hundreds of corpses, victims of the merciless accuracy of the German machine guns. But in the trenches that have been captured are as horrible spectacles, bodies heaped high until they overtop even the crest of the trenches. Only a few hours ago they were singing "The Marsellaise" in the wheat fields and chanting "Deutschland uber Alles" in the trenches.

Allies Pressing Forward

Still further to the north there are indications that the British and French have pushed beyond any point thus far conjectured. Uhlans have blown up a bridge at Miraumont, not far from Arras and northwest of Cambrai. At Arleux and Courchelottes, the Thirteenth French army corps is less than a day's march from the German lines. This advance has been so startling that Lille and Valenciennes are reported to be wildly excited with the belief that the Germans will soon be forced out of those northern cities that were so easily won on the march down from Belgium.

In this section, especially at Arleaux, Denain and Bouchain, the allies are in territory where they once fought as enemies. The ghosts of the troops of Marlborough and Villars must be haunting this countryside, now aroused once again to strife, for here Marlborough conducted his last campaign, in which he drove his troops at a pace unapproached even by the German advance toward Paris.

In the northeastern part of France, on the German left centre and left, the invaders are seeking to perform the same feat that the allies are trying in the west. Here the French lines form a right angle at Verdun like that formed by the Germans near Cambrai, but extending south instead of north.

Germans Recapture Varennes

Dispatches from Berlin state that some advance has been made in this section, the crown prince's army having recaptured Varennes, from which they were driven back in the opening engagements of the battle of the Aisne.

On the German left the assaults have been continued against the strong Meuse line of fortifications, which run from Verdun to Toul—the barrier forts that are so strongly built that they caused the Germans to try to get into France by way of Belgium instead of by the shorter movement through Lorraine.

The Paris official reports insist that no damage has yet been done to this line by the heavy artillery that has been brought up from Metz. The Germans, however, insist that tremendous injury has been wrought at Troyon les Paroches, Camp des Romans, Gironville and Liouville. Troyon was violently bombarded several days ago from both east and west, but the French advance after the battle of the Marne compelled an end to the cannonading.

Battering Weaker Forts

Verdun and Toul, at the north and south ends of the Meuse line, are surrounded by forts somewhat like those at Liege, but even more impregnable, Toul being regarded as the most strongly fortified place in Europe outside a few great cities like Paris and Antwerp. So far as can be learned the Germans are making no attempts to batter down the Toul and Verdun forts, but are concentrating their fire on the weaker forts and batteries between. If they smash any one of these, as they did Namur, they can wreck the others at their leisure, isolate Toul and Verdun, and open a great unprotected area through which armies can be poured from Lorraine.

On the German left, where they are making a mighty effort to break through between Toul and Verdun, the fighting has been furious. For forty-eight hours the battle has been waged so continuously that neither side has been able to bury its dead. West of the Verdun-Toul forts the Germans gained ground, especially in the recapture of Varennes. But to the east, where the Crown Prince of Bavaria is in command, their efforts have been unavailing, although they hold their positions.

In the Vosges no engagements have been reported. The summits of the highest peaks are now snow covered, and it is said that snow has fallen in some of the valleys. Winter comes early in this part of eastern France, and little more fighting can be expected here except at tremendous sacrifices on the part of those trying to advance across the hills.

"DOWN WITH THE KAISER"

Syndicalist Posters In Berlin Express a Desire For Peace

Despite the watchfulness of the German authorities, says a dispatch to the London Evening News, syndicalist posters proclainming: "We want peace; down with the kaiser!" are appearing on the walls of buildings in Berlin.

Travelers driving through the city between railway stations are ordered to keep the blinds of their vehicles drawn so that the posters may not be seen.

LAUD GERMANS' FEAT

Survivors of North Sea Disaster Give Credit to the Enemy

The rescued English officers from the cruisers destroyed by the German submarines unite in praising the skill and daring of the German naval officers and, far from bearing any grudge, they have nothing but professional praise for the submarines' feat. "Our only grievance," one said, "is that we did not have a shot at the Germans. Our only share in the war has been a few uncomfortable weeks of bad weather, mines and submarines."

RETIRES UNDER FIRE

Turkish Ambassador Resents Suggestions of President Wilson

Washington, Sept. 25.—A. Rustem Bey, Turkish ambassador, has informed President Wilson that he does not alter the view he recently expressed in a published interview and will leave the United States within a fortnight.

The Turkish ambassador in his interview had said that the sending of American warships to Turkey in connection with the report of uprisings against Christians would lead to a serious situation and that while massacres had previously occurred in Turkey they were the same acts as any people might commit under provocation. He cited the lynching of negroes and the water cures in the Philippines as illustrations.

The president asked whether, in view of the situation, the ambassador cared to make another expression. The Turkish envoy replied that he did not wish to alter his view in any way and that he would leave in a fortnight.

HUNDREDS MADE ILL

Forty Persons Fall Unconscious From Inhaling Nitric Acid Fumes

Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 25.—Ten gallons of nitric acid, spilled from a carboy to the floor of the Erie railroad station, gave off fumes which choked scores of persons to unconsciousness, made hundreds ill and stopped traffic on the Hudson tunnels for an hour.

The acid bubbled and boiled over the stone floor, giving off clouds of fumes. Two or three persons collapsed immediately, but in most cases of unconsciousness the poison acted as a slow agent. About forty persons into whose lungs the fumes had been inhaled for several minutes suddenly fell unconscious.

A PATHETIC ROMANCE

Chicago Lovers Commit Suicide Together Rather Than Separate

Chicago, Sept. 25.—Clasped in each other's arms, a big bridal rose pinned to the breast of each, Arthur Rech, a prominent young music teacher, and his fiancee, Miss Katherine Seymour, were found asphyxiated in a closet of Rech's room here.

They left letters asking that they be buried together. Rech was prosperous and healthy, but the young woman's illness seemed chronic. They felt that marriage with this handicap offered little happiness, but they did not care to face the future separately.

MITCHELL FARM MYSTERY

Authorities Would Like Explanation From Gertrude Day

Auburn, N. H., Sept. 25.—Town and county officers continued their search for evidence at the Mitchell farm, where three skeletons were found. A pair of tiny baby shoes, together with more bones, thought to be human ones, were unearthed by Sheriff Spinney.

Word has been sent to all New England cities to watch for Gertrude Day, also known as Mrs. Carter and Mrs. Dexter. Her two alleged husbands, James Carter and Alonzo Dexter, are also wanted by the authorities.

The board of aldermen have been called in a special meeting to pass upon Joyce's resignation.

OUTING AT ADAMS SHORE

Quincy Point Ladies Entertained by Mrs. Barnes

A very enjoyable day was spent Wednesday by the Ladies' Aid of the Washington Street Congregational church at the summer home of Mrs. Bertram Barnes at Adams Shore.

Mrs. Barnes served dinner to 41 guests, the menu being clam chowder, salmon salad, pickles, hot rolls, fancy pies and cakes, fruit and coffee.

One of the pleasaures of the day was the presence of Mrs. A. A. Harlow, an honorary member of the society. A good many members brought their bathing suits, and many more were supplied from a plentiful store at the cottage. A delightful hour was spent in the water.

Grafanola selections were played during the day.

In the afternoon a short business meeting was held, and the penny-a-day barrels were opened, and a goodly amount was gathered from them. Plans were made for a reception to be given October 7 to the minister and his wife. All interested in the Point church are to be cordially invited.

The ladies were sorry to leave one of the cool and pleasant spots on a hot day, but did so with hearty thanks to Mrs. Barnes for her hospitality.

Among the guests were: Rev. and Mrs. Stephen C. Lang, Mrs. A. A. Harlow, Mrs. Daniel Higgins, Mrs. G. E. Bailey, Mrs. L. F. Chubbuck, Mrs. C. W. Newcomb, Mrs. E. Holmes, Mrs. E. R. WHO IS MILLS?

WORK FOR GREATER BOSTON

Granite manufacturers of this city are gleeful over the attitude of Mayor Curley of Boston, who upon the recommendation of Joseph P. Lomasney, chairman of the Boston Schoolhouse Commission, has authorized that commission to incorporate into specifications for all new schoolhouses a clause requiring that the contractor have all wood mill work, steel and iron, and cut stone manufactured from the raw material in shops located within 10 miles of Boston.

The schoolhouse board has had much trouble in the past because these materials were produced in shops so distant that proper supervision and direction by members of the board has been handicapped. While the new ruling will restrict to a 10 mile district, and offer Quincy firms more chance of securing a contract, it will also mean stronger competition among local dealers.

that she was very happy to announce that the third year of her work in Quincy closed with a balance on hand That in her work she had been surprised and pleased at the quick and generous response to her every appeal. No case of need had gone uncared for. Investigations were not to pry into family or private affairs but for intelligent planning for the best way to be helpful. The coming winter on account of the war and living expenses promised to be a hard one and help would be needed. Miss Purchase distributed advance copies of the second annual report of the Associated Charities now in the hands of the printer, a reading of which is recommended.

BETHANY CHURCH.

The services on Sunday will bring messages to young and old. "The bow in the cloud" will bring a word of hope and courage to all. In the evening the lecture will be encouraging to young people; young men are especially invited. On Oct. 4 the pastor will commence a series of sermons in the morning on "The Lord's Prayer" and in the evening "The Revelation of God in the lives of men."

DEMOCRATS WANT CANDIDATE

The nomination of Frederick J. Stimson of Dedham to be Ambassador to the Argentine Republic was favorably received in Washington, in so far as the Democrats are concerned. It is believed that Mr. Stimson owes his nomination to George Fred Williams and Secretary William J. Bryan, both of whom he strongly supported.

It has also been pointed out that there is no breach in the friendship between the Secretary of State and Mr. Williams, whose conduct while American Minister at Athens created an international excitement because he made an expose of what he thought caused the Balkan troubles.

The new appointee is a professor at Harvard college, and was to have been the candidate for the Norfolk county commissionership on the Democratic ticket to oppose John F. Merrill, the present chairman of the board, who is a candidate for re-election.

William J. Sullivan of this city was given the nomination through stickers, but it is understood he was to have withdrawn and Prof. Stimson was to have been substituted by the state committee.

It will now be necessary for the Democrats to secure another candidate to make the run for the position. Dennis Crowley, a well known builder has been mentioned in an unofficial way. Whether or not he will enter the fight is not known. He is well known throughout the district.

Michael T. Shea, former assistant superintendent of public works has also been suggested. It is not known whether he would consent to enter the race.

BENEFIT CONCERT AT ST. PAULS

The benefit concert at St. Paul's Methodist church Thursday evening was well attended, the spacious church being nearly full.

There were vocal selections by the ladies sextette and the men's quartette. Miss Sigrid Lundquist sang three beautiful selections. Miss Lundquist's star as a singer is steadily rising and we predict for her a bright future. Henry Peterson gave a well rendered piano solo. Miss Emma Witting and Miss Walborg Peterson played a piano and organ duet. There was also a piano duet by the Misses Peterson and an instrumental trio by the Misses Peterson and Miss Whitting. All the different numbers were received with applause.

successful. It is thought that they may still be hung up in Berlin. Mails from that country are next to the impossible, and this may be the reason that they have not been heard from. At the time the card received was written there was evidently no war scare in Rusia for no mention was made of any trouble.

Thomas A. L. Musgrave of the Board of Health, whose wife is in Europe, received a letter from her this morning stating that she would sail for home on the steamship Laconia next Tuesday. Mrs. Musgrave left Quincy just before England declared war and as soon as she arrived Mr. Musgrave wrote her to start back home as soon as possible. She has been in England all the time and has met with no difficulty.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

Harry Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Johnson of Adams Shore, was seriously wounded this morning when the gun he carried accidently discharged. The bullet entered the left elbow. He is now in the Quincy City Hospital where the arm may have to be amptated. Harry in company with another boy was gunning in Quincy Bay. They were off shore a mile when the accident occured.

DISPUTE OVER BOUNDARY.

A case of disputed boundary line was heard in the district court this morning before Judge Pratt, when F. Wesley Fuller was arraigned on a complaint of Clarence E. Fuller, for maliciously removing a boundary post.

The boundary post in question was set between the lines of the estates of the two parties, the exact location of the line being in dispute.

The complainant set the boundary post on the line which he claimed was right, and it is alleged that the defendant removed it, or rather that he had his son remove it.

A warrant was issued against both F. Wesley Fuller and his son Camele but the officer who attempted to serve the warrant made a return that the son was out of the state. F. Wesley Fuller was found and appeared in court. After hearing the evidence in the case Judge Pratt continued it for finding until Oct. 16.

MIDNIGHT CLAMBAKE.

In the party of 50 who attended were former alderman Edward Callahan of Charlestown, who rendered vocal selections, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hart of Hyde Park, Mr. and Mrs. John Chellman of Roslindale, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moynahan of Hyde Park, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Greene of Charlestown, Warren Callahan, Miss Ruth McMahon, Miss Roslie Hart, Miss Marie Leary, Miss Agnes Dooley, Miss Theresa McDonough Miss Agnes Leary, and others.

HYDE PARK NOT SATISFIED

Annexation to Boston Not What Was Expected

The voters of Hyde Park who sacrificed their town that they might get a five-cent car fare to Boston, are still waiting for the reduced rate, and also for improvements.

In reply to Hyde Park citizens who believe that their district has not been as well treated since annexation to Boston as they had expected, Mayor Curley says that at present the district is a liability to the city as a whole, not an asset. He is particularly aroused because the burden of the Hyde Park water plant was placed upon the city for $150,000, whereas he says it is not worth more than $15,-000. The city has received but one offer for the plant, $12,000, and that was afterward withdrawn.

The mayor agrees that the Hyde Park police station is unfit for use, but says the city has nothing to do with the subject of 80-cent gas and 5-cent fares. These matters are before the proper state authorities, he says. He points out that a great deal of expensive sewer construction is now being done by the city in the Hyde Park section.

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

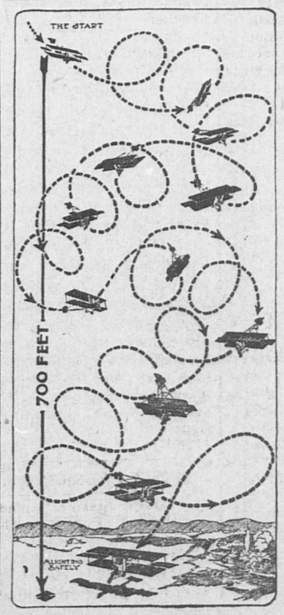
Another mighty good show is on tap for the week-end at Quincy's Popular amusement house. Jack Levey & Symphony Girls gave great pleasure to all with their musical selections. The 5 Merry Kids are well named, for they kept the audience in uproars of laughter and mirth for many minutes. Kimball Brothers brought down the house with their delightful songs and funny jokes. Harrington with his wonderful dogs gave a very interesting exhibition which was warmly applauded.

The war pictures of stricken Louvain are well worth going miles to see. As usual, the two reels of the Million Dollar Mystery were watched with intense interest.

The show coming Monday is full of fun and music. Vaudeville attractions include Joe Case, character comedian, who is cause for much merriment. Holems & Hollest have a rural sketch that will delight all Blondell & Tucker make music and mirth 'twill do you good to enjoy. Reed St. John Trio have a high class musical act the equal of which is seldom seen.

Photo plays to be presented include "Gypsy Love" a beautiful and pathetic drama in two reels; Pathe Daily News showing scenes of interest from all over the world including the war; "Colonel Heezaliar in the Wilderness" the animated comic cartoons that cause so much laughter whenever and wherever shown.

New fall goods in the house furnishing line have arrived at Kincaide's and are selling at values that cannot be duplicated anywhere Beautiful brass beds, parlor suites, dining room furnishings in great variety are being shown.



BEACHEY AT BROCKTON

The above illustration shows the world famous Lincoln Beachey doing his aerial loop-the-loop in the clouds. Beachy will fly every day at the Brockton Fair, Sept. 29, 30, Oct. 1, 2 giving the greatest exhibition ever seen in New England.

The Brockton Fair this year provides $60,00 for premiums and special attractions and it will be the same big show as usual, with Beachey as an added attraction.

BRIEFS

The continued inquest on the death of Ethel Kaplan, who was killed by an automobile on Sumner street, is being held today.

The object of the "safety first" movement will be set forth in an attractive manner Sunday afternoon at Kincaide's theatre. It will be given under the auspices of the Fore River Co. and will be free.

Many Wollaston and Quincy people were delayed on their way to Boston Thursday morning by the bursting at Neponset of the air hose on the 10.04 train. A quick repair was effected and the train was on its way after a seven minutes delay.

Edward P. Powers and James E. Wall, the independent candidates for Mayor, are both to hold rallies in City Square tonight. Mr. Powers has secured a permit to speak from an automobile on Depot street, while Mr. Wall will speak at Alpha hall.

Edward E. Jameson of Wollaston, who for the past two years has been the eminent commander of De Molay commandery, K. T., of Boston, retired at the sixty-sixth annual conclave, which was held at the Temple this week. He was succeeded by William M. Farrington.

Walter E. Piper of Quincy was elected and installed as Captain of the Guards at the annual meeting of Boston Council Royal and Select Masters, which took place at Masonic Temple, Boston, Thursday evening. The council now has a membership of 1553, which includes many from Quincy.

MISS EDITH M. HALL.

Miss Edith May Hall, daughter of Mrs. D. W. Hall of Wollaston, passed away Thursday after a long illness of over two years duration. Miss Hall was graduated from Woodward Institute in the class of 1912, and was popular with her classmates. The funeral will be held Sunday from the Wollaston Baptist church to which members of the class and other friends are invited.

ARRESTED IN BOSTON.

The Boston papers report the arrest in Boston on Thursday of George S. Waterhouse of Conant road, Atlantic, on the charge of uttering a forged check for $19.85 at the Hotel Bellevue. He was arrested by Detective Sergeant Mitchell and Inspector Wolfe as he was leaving the hotel.

The check bore the signature of S. S. Spaine, and was drawn on the Puritan Trust Co. under date of Sept. 23, and was endorsed by C. S. Evans. The police claim that the endorsement is also a forgery. It is alleged that Waterhouse cashed the check for $18 at the hotel on Wednesday.

Waterhouse is well known in Quincy where he has resided for many years. He was formerly a starter for the Quincy and Boston Street railway but of late years he has been with a correspondence school. He has many friends in Quincy who believe that he is innocent of knowingly passing a worthless check and that when the facts come out he will be exonerated.

TEN STRING BOWLING MATCH

Poehler and Kelly Have Over 100 Pins to Spare

Paul Poehler and Spider Kelly easily defeated Jim Olindy and Herb Smith in a special ten-string match at the Wardwell alleys on Thursday evening, 2072 to 1969. A southwest breeze sprung up early in the evening, and the contest was held under the most comfortable circumstances. The gallery, while large and enthusiastic, cheered but little, confining their applause to mere hand clapping when exceptional hits were made.

The real feature of the evening was the 7-10 spare made by Poehler in the ninth string. The layout was difficult. The champion shot his ball down at lightning speed, caught the deadwood on a sharp angle, caromed off to one pin while the deadwood sped across to the other.

Poehler's showing during the match was good, although he worked for all he got, none of the drops favoring him. In his string of 135 he got a 14 spare in the first box, a 19 in the third and a strike in the eighth. On the top of this he piled a 19 spare, and closed out with an 18 spare, making 57 in the last three.

Spider Kelly, a young man who is being developed by Poehler averaged 98. He appeared to be the favorite of the rooters.

Herb Smith of the Fore River league got less than only 100 four times. His high was 118, much larger than his other high strings.

Olindy only pased the century mark three times. He made the hits but did not always get the breaks and his average of less than 96 was hardly up to form. The summary:

Poehler	116, 92, 105, 105, 99
	135, 109, 101, 114, 116	—1092
Kelly	97, 89, 103, 96, 111
	96, 108, 88, 96, 98	—989
Smith	118, 102, 101, 103, 88
	97, 99, 100, 103, 99	—1010
Olindy	93, 93, 93, 86, 102
	100, 94, 97, 97, 104	—959

DAILY LEDGER
SPORTS
All of Local Interest

"Tack" Hardwick of Quincy is enjoying the rigorous practice connected with his right end position on the Harvard football team, and aside from doing fine work in advancing the ball through the medium of the forward he ranks as one of the three best goal kickers on the squad. When team A went against the second team at the beginning of the Thursday afternoon scrimmage, the A team was given the ball on its own 20 yard line. Mahan opened the game with an 80 yard run for a touchdown. The interference was excellent, with "Tack" Hardwick especially active.

The game between the Hibernians of West Quincy and the Red Men of South Quincy, to decide the amateur championship of the city, will be played Saturday afternoon at the Ward Three playground. Both have won a victory and intense rivalry exists between the players and rooters. The Hibernians will strength the team in spots, while the Red Men will play the usual lineup. The first ball will be pitched about 3.30. The fans throughout the city, interested in amateur ball look forward to the game with much interest.

UNPAID BOARD BILS.

Boarding house keepers in the shipyard district have always had more or less difficulty with their boarders, by having them skip leaving an unpaid board bill behind. This is what happened to Charles Wester recently, and he tried to keep square by holding up the dress suit case of one of his boarders. Wester was arraigned in court this morning for the larceny of the bag and contents valued at $13.

The bag was owned by Michael Scenster. Wester claimed that Scenster who formerly boarded with him, brought another man to his house saying that if the man did not pay that he Scenster would. The man remained until he had run a bill of $3 and then skipped. When Scenster started to depart, Wester held on to his baggage refusing to give it up unless the $3 was paid. Scenster denied having agreed to make good the parties board and swore out a warrant aginst Wester. The court ordered the case dismissed on the return of the bag.

SCHOEN CHANGES HIS MIND

"Officially" Repudiates His Interview After Receiving "Calldown"

Washington, Sept. 25.—Repudiation by Baron von Schoen of the German embassy of a newspaper interview quoting him as declaring that war between the United States and Japan is inevitable and that the Japanese masses have "intense hatred" for Americans will be accepted by the administration.

Von Schoen admitted Wednesday that the interview was "substantially correct" and also reiterated his views. Then when President Wilson and Secretary Bryan "got busy" to demand an explanation the baron repudiated the interview—"officially."

No further action against the baron is contemplated, it is stated in high administration circles.

MILTON HIGH VS. WELLESLEY

The opening game in the Milton High school football schedule will be played Saturday afternoon with Wellesley High on the latter's grounds. It was the Wellesley High team which defeated Quincy last Saturday and in doing so caused a little fear in the minds of Milton's players. But Coach "Reggie" Nash has been working the men hard all the week despite the torrid wave, and a snappy foot ball game is expected. The probable lineup for the game is as follows: Capt. "Dutch" Reiser q.b.; Corbett, l.h.b.; "Ken" Hecker f.b.; "Louie" Sprague or Luce r.h.b.; "Mayor" White, r.e.; "Red" Robertson, r.t.; "Chet" McDow or "Jimmie" Parks, r.g.; "Porker" Field, c.; "Bob" Adams, l.g.; "Doc" Crowell, l.t.; "Jim" Driscoll, l.e. The sub men who will be taken are: "Joe" Simpson, "Les" Patterson, "Jim" Small, "Fletch" Long and Burns.

PROHIBITION AMONG BALL PLAYERS

The big base ball leagues were yesterday precipitated into the state-wide campaign of the Anti-Saloon League for national Prohibition.

It came about in a couple of interviews, given by the managers of two of the big league teams.

One was from Connie Mack and another by George T. Stallings of the Braves.

To W. H. Foster, who is representing Ford Hall in the campaign, Stallings said: "I put my players upon honor, they know I don't believe in alcohol and they respect my wishes. I have a fine club of ball players. They are clean physically and morally."

Connie Mack says: "Alcohol slows down a man. I will not hire a youngster who drinks."

In all of the greater ball leagues this spirit prevails, according to the Anti-Saloon League leaders.

Supt. Arthur J. Davis of the Massachusetts Anti-Saoon League yesterday said in connection with the interviews: "This same thing follows true in all athletics. If alcohol slows down a ball player it will slow down a workman in any line of occupation. It does slow them down so that they not only earn less for themselves but for their employer. Then what they do earn they dump into saloons instead of bringing their wages home to the family."

SHIPYARD ACCIDENT

John Johnson, aged 24 years of Howard avenue, employed at the Fore River shipyard, fell through a floor at the works Thursday afternoon a distance of 30 feet to the ground. He was hurried to the Red Cross hospital on the grounds where it was found that he had fractured two bones in one leg, in addition to an anterior dislocation of the elbow of his right arm and probably injuries to his spine and contusions. He was given first aid treatment by Dr. Blanchard and later taken to the City Hospital where his condition was pronounced serious.

HOBSON TO SPEAK.

Captain Richmond P. Hobson, Alabama congressman, will be one of the principal speakers at the big Prohibition rally to be held on Boston Common Saturday night. This rally will be the only meeting of the seven-days' campaign to be held on Saturday. The campaign will close Sunday evening with rallies in the larger cities.

Massachusets has been entertaining, during the week, some of the most notable orators in the United States. Whatever impression they may have made on the electorate of the state it cannot be doubted that they have let folks understand that the Anti-Saloon League is very much in earnest on the subject of national Prohibition.

QUINCY BATTLESHIPS.

The battleship Vermont, built at Quincy, is at Tampico. The Rhode Island is at Hampton Roads. She will go to Norfolk yard for docking and thence to Vera Cruz, Mexico. The cruiser Salem has sailed from Progreso to Key West. The torpedo boats Sterett and Perkins are at Gardiners bay.

DEEDS.

Deeds are greater than words. Deeds have such a life, mute but undeniable, and grow as living trees and fruit-trees do; they people the vacuity of Time and make it green and worthy.—Carlyle.

RE-DEDICATION ON OCT. 14

Plans are rapidly maturing for the re-dedication of the Hibernian building on Franklin street, which since its $10,000 fire early in February has been rebuilt and rearranged to meet the most modern requirements. The committee in charge have chosen Oct. 14 as the date on which the exercises will be held in Quincy Adams hall, the larger of the two in the building.

The special guests will include National Vice president Patrick Cannon of Clinton, State President William F. Donnelly of Cambridge, State Secretary R. J. Dwyer of South Boston, State Treasurer Dennis J. Slattery of Weymouth, County President James White of Walpole, Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, chaplain of the district including the division, and Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor of St. Johns parish.

The names of the halls have been changed since the rebuilding, what had been known as Hibernian hall being now designated as Quincy Adams hall, and the lodge room, enlarged and improved, has been called Franklin hall.

The roof which was gable has been changed to a flat roof, giving the hall a square appearance and additional room. The stage has also been extended while the posts and other handicaps in Franklin hall have been removed.

The affair will be held under the direction of Daniel Mannix of the Div. 5 Building Associates, owners of the building, and John Donahue, president of Div. 5, which makes it their headquarters.

RESCUE AT BATH HOUSE.

James Gilmartin, 24 years, of Gilmore street, a motorman employed by the Bay State street railway, while swimming at the Town river bath house Thursday afternoon was seized with cramps. He was rescued from drowning by Peter Starr who plunged in clothes and all and brought him ashore.

Gilmartin was one of a party of street railway employees bathing in the flood tide. His companions were beyond the second raft when he was seized with the cramps. His cry for assistance was heard by three, John Starr, life guard at the bath house, James Morrisey of South Quincy, and Peter Starr. The latter was reading under a tree on the sharp bank near the shower bath when the S. O. S. reached him. He plunged on the instant and was first of the three to reach the stricken swimmer. Gilmartin was brought ashore and recovered after first aid treatment. He was able to go to his home.

PAY UP OR GO TO JAIL.

War was declared Thursday upon parties who have neglected to pay their taxes of other years and Deputy Collector Curtis has been given warrants and ordered to collect or place the delinquents under arrest. The deputy collector immediately started out and a few minutes later appeared at City Hall, with a man whom he had found working on Chestnut street. The collector made the man drive to City Hall, where he paid up, rather than be placed under arrest. It is announced that the city needs the money and it is proposed that delinquents shall pay up or go to jail.

LOST CHILD.

The lost child call was sounded from Box 114 a little after 8 o'clock Thursday night to summon assistance to search for Vernon Ellsworth the 9 year old son of F. D. Ellsworth of 16 Bird street, Houghs Neck. The boy had left home at 4 o'clock and did not return for supper. When 8 o'clock came and nothing had been heard from him his parents began to get worried. A few minutes later the boy was found on Sea street and escorted to the fire station. The only reason the boy gave was that he had stayed out later than he had intended and was afraid to go home. His parents were overjoyed at his return.

AMUSEMENTS

SHUBERT THEATRE.

Arthur Hammerstein's production of "High Jinks" will enter upon it's fourth week at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, on Monday. "High Jinks" scored one of the strongest hits made in years and capacity audiences are the rule. The Boston critics agree that it is one of the most pleasing entertainments seen in that city for many years. The Globe spoke of the production

"It was fun and music from the start to finish. It is swift and lively and not too noisy. There are fully a dozen musical numbers which caught on immediately and will be whistled and sung everywhere. There is a tilt and delicacy about the music which shows the author to be a musician of creative ability and his orchestration is always worthy of attention even when his work enters the so-called popular strain." The cast of "High Jinks" is headed by Miss Stella Mayhew, who is well supported along comedy lines. The management of the Shubert Theatre made an effort to have the engagement of "High Jinks" prolonged but Mr. Hammerstein was not able to grant their wishes owing to previous bookings.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

"Along Came Ruth", which is now in the second month of its engagement at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, has served more than one purpose. The play, which is intended or laughing purposes and scores its aim with terrific force, proved the inspiration for a real live boom in a well known neighboring city of Boston. Those who have witnessed this delightful comedy recall that the author has woven his story around a young American girl, who, having completed her school studies, visits a small town and starts it booming by the force of wide-awake ideas. Ruth represents the efficiency of the modern school girl. Her ideas are sound and plausible, a feature that was wholly responsible for starting the above mentioned boom. Yet Ruth's desires were accomplished only after a series of amusing complications that offers playgoers an evening of real pleasure. In her encounters with the characters of the town, Holman Day, the author has shown types familiar to New Englanders in many amusing situations. Israel Putnam Hubbard, in whose furniture emporium the play opens, is one of the most original and diverting stage creations that has been discovered in years. The usual Thursday and Saturday matinees are given.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

Arthur Hammerstein's production of "The Trap" which began an engagement at the Majestic Theatre, Boston on Thursday has caught on and will continue to be at that playhouse for some time to come. "The Trap" is a drama with many dramatic features. It not only catches its audience but it holds them from the rise of the first curtain to the fall of the last. The play is the work of Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman. Despite the fact these writers have been responsible for many stage successes, none has equalled their latest effort. The cast is probably the strongest ever seen in a single dramatic production. There are nine leading roles and each one is portrayed by a man or woman who have formerly starred or have been featured in the best productions. Among those well-known to local theatregoers are Orrin Johnson, Fully Marshall, Ralph Delmore, Charles Richman, Elaine Hammerstein, Janet Beecher, Gertrude Dawes, Frank Amos and George Harcourt. Mr. Hammerstein spared no pains nor expense in getting together this cast which everyone immediately recognizes as one of remarkable excellence. During the engagment of "The Trap" at the Majestic, the regular Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given.

WILBUR THEATRE.

Have you traveled "The Road to Happiness" with William Hodge? If not, you should do so at once at the Wilbur Theatre, Boston, where that delightful "comedy of cheerfulness" is now in the third week of its big success. Along this "Road to Happiness" the players will meet many quaint and amusing characters and imbibe much native humor and wisdom. Hodge himself is always inimitable. His Jim Whitman is just as unique in its way as was his Freeman Whitmarsh in "Sag Harbor" or his Daniel Voorhees Pike in "The Man from Home," and it is Yankee to the backbone. For Hodge is always thoroughly American and "The Road to Happiness" is the most American play on the stage today. Village life and home life is depicted with true realism in its four acts and all the types, from the fussy old housekeeper Martha and the farm-hand William to the queer old Farmer Phil and the village Judge, are portrayed in all their naturalness. Farmer Phil and his broken-down spavined horse make a comical picture that provokes a roar of laughter. The Judge's hearing in the fourth act is also an episode of odd drollery. But the chief interest centers in the character of young Whitman, the village carpenter and jack-of-all-trades, whose personality reflects a little of the youth of Abraham Lincoln during his early village days.

BOSTON THEATRE.

One of the strongest dramatic offerings of the season will be next week's attraction at Boston Theatre, Wilton Lackaye whose last Boston appearance was made in the all-star cast of "Oliver Twist" will make his reappearance in Cleveland Moffat's masterful drama, "The Battle." Theatregoers will recall the enormous success scored by Mr. Lackaye in this stirring piece when it was presented for a long run in Boston several seasons ago. The engagement of Mr. Lackaye like those of the preceding well known stars, that have appeared for some weeks at the head of the Majestic Players, will mark his first appearance at popular prices. The presentation of this absorbing play, which presents a graphic picture of conditions in the slum quarters of New York City will be staged under the personal supervision of Mr. Lackaye, and no expense will be spared by Manager Leahy to give it an exact reproduction of its original. Mr. Lackaye will essay his original creation of John J. Haggleton, one of the strongest dramatic achievements of his whole career, Haggleton has amassed an immense fortune by his ingenious monoply of the oil business. Early events in his domestic life have estranged him from his wife and only child, a boy. The opening scene shows the living room in a tenement in Market St., a most crowded quarter of the great metropolis. Haggleton, who has aroused the antipathy of the poor people, is invited, because of his apparent disbelief of conditions, to observe the horrible living situations of the slums which he accepts and with another ingenious stroke of his master mind clearly proves what energy, grit and determination will accomplish. Oct. 5 Mr. Leahy will inaugurate his season of grand opera with "Aida" as the opening bill.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

"Cabiria" continues its engagement at the Tremont Temple. Last week's big audiences prove conclusively the popularity of this marvelous exhibition of motion pictures, and that it has added another to its present long list of triumphs. The story D'Annunzio has written is beautiful in its simplicity and appeal. It tells of the experiences, some sad, even terrible, others happy, of the child Cabiria in her wanderings. The story, closely interwoven with the rapid moving historical events incident to the raging wars between the Roman Empire and Carthage, about three hundred years before the Christian era, all go to make an entertainment of vast educational value. This wonderful picture, together with the big symphony orchestra and vocal chorus, will be seen twice daily at 2 and 8 P. M.

CORT THEATRE.

The banner attraction in Boston this season in undoubtedly Oliver Morosco's clever little comedy "Peg O' My Heart" by J. Hartley Manners which is holding forth at the Cort Theatre at Park Square and is nightly filling this beautiful little playhouse to capacity. Now embarking on its fourth prosperous week "Peg O' My Heart" marches on, although the theatrical pathway in Boston is strewn with the wrecks of other attractions which have come to sudden grief in this, probably the worst season for the theatre in many years owing to disastrous business conditions imposed by the European war. The story of "Peg O' My Heart" is said by many to be parallel to the world famous fairy tale of Cinderella and the Prince. J. Hartley Manners, the author of "Peg O' My Heart," cannot be accused however of plagarizing from the Cinderella story any more than a dozen other playwrights for this tale has been modernized in such big hits as "Merely Mary Ann" and "The Fortune Hunter." Matinees are on Wednesday and Saturday with the mid-week matinee at popular prices.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

With their performance for the first time in Boston of Charles Kenyon's much discussed play "Kindling" Castle Square and the Craig Players have been the centre of dramatic discussion all this week. The press is unanimous in praise of manager Craig's enterprise in giving Boston an opportunity to see for itself a play that created so much controversy at its first production in New York three years ago. Miss Mary Young has seldom done anything finer than her impersonation of the poor little tenement girl wife driven to theit by despair at the living conditions into which her baby must be born unless she escapes in time. The intensity of her acting in this exacting role is a revelation even to those who got a hint of her powers as an actress in "Madame X." William Carleton is a particularly fine and appealing figure as the big stevedore husband and Dudley Hawley as the sinister "Steve" get a role that for the first time this season gives his talents full scope. Kate Ryan is a lovable and gossipy old Irishwoman to the life.

Next week Augustus Thomas' powerful drama "Arizona" will be the offering. The story of Arizona passes at a far away army post in Indian fighting days. The young and heedless wife of the veteran colonel is nearly ensnared by the wiles of a dissolute but handsome captain and is only saved from dishonor by the loyalty and self sacrifice of a junior officer.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

John Mason, one of the comparatively few truly great living American actors, will open the Hollis Street Theatre Monday evening, with a new play entitled "Drugged," written by Owen Davis and produced by A. H. Woods. The new play is frankly described as a melodrama, but is a melodrama of the highest order, and reports from other cities indicate that it is one of the most thrilling spectacles produced in recent years. There is punch in every scene, the situations being so cleverly devised and the climaxes so well developed that the audience is kept literally on the edge of its seat from the rise of the first curtain to the fall of the final one.

In the leading role John Mason has found a character to which he can bring all the art which has made his name famous as America's leading romantic actor of virile roles. But there are other well known artists in the cast besides the star. In fact, Manager Woods has spared no expense to gather together a company which might be said to be all-star in its every detail. As the title of the play indicates "Drugged" has been written to expose the terrible effects of the morphine habit. How this habit is woven into the story is responsible for the strong undercurrent of sympathy which in several scenes brings the tears. But there is plenty of comedy to relieve the strain and all forth in many years. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

WOULD CODIFY THE ROAD LAWS

County Commissioner Merrill Before Committee

Chairman Merrill of the Norfolk County Commissioners appeared before the recess committee of the Legislature on Thursday when the questions of county road finances and clerical assistance were discussed.

Under the present laws, if extra clerical assistance is required in the probate and treasurers office, permission must be obtained from the legislature. This provision seemed to the committee and county officers unnecessary.

It was also urged that there is no good need of so many special acts for highway in towns, and that the counties in the case of small towns should have the right to make the appropriation for highways and streets.

Commissioner Merrill argued that in every case where a road is built under special statute it should be a State highway, and that the state highway commission should have the right to repair the road and charge the cost to the town. The town would then see that the road was kept in proper condition.

It was also agreed that all of the road laws of the state should be codified.

REMICK'S POLICY.

A most invigorating policy is mapped out for the ensuing autumn and winter at Remicks. First of these events is described in today's advertisement. Men will appreciate, at a glance, what a record breaking enterprise this is, when new and right clothes are offered at the opening of season at prices one would be glad to pay six months later, at the season's end. And so, after enlarging the store, REMICK is now in a position to give better service, better light, well, in fact everything that a modern, high grade, men's wide-awake store should give. In addition Remick handles new and standard merchandise, carefully chosen by Mr. Remick at moderate prices. A leader in shoes for the family.

NO DIVIDEND.

A Cleveland dispatch says that directors of the American Shipbuilding Company have decided that because of the falling off in earnings and present war conditions, the company will not pay dividends on the preferred stock for the present. No statement was made as to when payments could be resumed. The resignation of James C. Wallace as president was accepted and Edward Smith of Buffalo was elected in his place. M. E. Farr of Detroit was elected vice-president, succeeding Mr. Smith.

NORFOLK CLUB.

The Norfolk Republican Club will hold a meeting in the American House Boston, Monday, Sept. 28, at 1 o'clock P. M. Prominent speakers to address the meeting. Places may be secured at the table by notifying John O. Hall, 25 Adams building, Quincy, by Saturday morning. Luncheon tickets, $1 50

DISTRICT COURT.

Charles Wester was arraigned for the larceny of a dress suit case from Michael Scenster at Quincy. Case placed on file on return of the suit case.

F. Wesley Fuller was arraigned for maliciously removing a boundary post. Case continued until Oct. 16.

The Quincy Women's Riverside Club observed "Guests day" on Wednesday with an entertainment which included piano solos by Miss Hazel Estey, readings by Mrs. William Hodgkinson, and a play, "The Census Taker," presented by Frances Ward, Edith Avery, Mabel Jilbert. Refreshments were served.

WEST QUINCY LIQUOR CASE

Cornellia Palma of 1 Willard street, who was convicted in the District Court a short time ago on a charge of unlawfully keeping and exposing liquor for sale, faced Judge Avery again this morning on a charge of maintaining a liquor nuisance.

At the request of J. J. McAnarney the case was continued to Oct. 2, so the defense could present new evidence In granting the continuance Judge Avery said sufficient evidence already had been offered by the Inspector Goodhue.

The police alleged that liquor was consigned to the house in the names of people not living there. John Wentworth testified that he had ordered one half barrel of beer, and his son five cases for the house. The police say however that a large quantity has been delivered in their name.

The testimony of one witness was amusing. He testified he had purchased a bottle of something for 10 cents, and wasn't sure whether or not it was tonic.

Inspector Goodhue asked if it wasn't beer, and witness replied, it was so cold he couldn't determine what it was.

Palma, who has been under bail of $300, was surrendered by the surety after the session, and is now in the detention room of the court.

BREAK AT WOLLASTON PARK

The gang of boys who ransacked houses in the Merrymount Park section Wednesday transferred their activities to the Wollaston Park Thursday afternoon, but as far as is known nothing was stolen although a systematic search of one house was made.

Mrs. W. F. Kimball, after several hours bathing at Wollaston beach, returned to her home at 6 West Elm avenue and found things upset in general. Drawers were open and the contents piled on the floor, and everything pointed to a daring burglary. In making an examination, however, it was found that silverware, toy banks with large amounts and valuables had not been disturbed.

The police made an immediate investigation and found heel marks around the house, similar to those on the lawn of the other houses. They believe a gang of boys are responsible for the breaks. The residents feel very uneasy over the conditions.

NOMINATION IN DOUBT

been no question, but strickers were used with the usual result. That is while many attached the sticker to the ballot they neglected to mark a cross against the name. In other cases the name was written in, and the voter neglected to attach the address of Col. Kincaide. The result has been that a very large number of votes intended for Col. Kincaide have been thrown out.

At the present time it is impossible to give the vote of every city and town in the district for this reason.

REED TO WORK FOR KINCAIDE

Says the Colonel Was His First Choice

The following letter is self-explanatory:

Atlantic, Sept. 24, 1914.
Col. Henry L. Kincaide, Quincy, Mass.

My dear Col. Kincaide: I wish to repeat at this time the assurances given you previous to the primaries, that I shall loyally support you as the Progressive candidate for Congress.

Since I went into the campaign, only because, at the time, you felt that you could not make the run, and since I did no campaigning nor made any appeal to the voters, after you agreed to accept the nomination, I have not felt that we were opponents in reality, even though we were apparently opposed, due to the fact that it was too late to have my name withdrawn from the ballot.

I am sure that all those who supported me at the primaries did so out of personal friendship and will now join me in working for your election. I feel certain that with proper work on the part of all of us, your election is sure.

With best regards, and the assurance that I am at your command during the campaign, I beg to remain,
Most cordially yours,
(Signed) Edwin C. Reed.

GOOD MOTTOES.

Nixon Waterman of the Monitor says: As reminders that taxes are high, living expensive, and that money should not be spent carelessly, it might be well for every municipality to display mottoes pertaining to the value of thrift in its council chambers. "Extravagance and plenty cannot long dwell in the same house," is a good one. Also there is a good deal of wisdom in the words of philosophical Josh Billings: "We should be keerful how we encurridge luxuries. It is but a step forward from hoe cake to plum puddin', but is a mile and a half by the nearest road when we have to go back again."

BUSINESS MEN INTERESTED.

It is interesting, that David S. Byer, who is to be the chief speaker at the meeting which the Fore River Shipbuilding Company are to hold on "Safety First" in Kincaide's theatre will also speak briefly at the rally for National Constitutional Prohibition in Music hall. Mr. Byer is the manager of the Accident Prevention department of the Massachusetts Employees Insurance Co,, and as such recognizes how large a part liquor plays in accidents. One of the notable features in the Anti-Saloon movement throughout the nation is the way big business is lining up on its side. More and more the dollars and cents of business is against the saloon

ANOTHER BREAK.

The publicity given to the burglaries on Standish Avenue brings out the fact that between Sept. 1 and 8 the Pfaffmann house on Clay street was entered and ransacked. The only thing missed was a $10 bill. Probably when the first break was kept quiet the boys thought the others would be, and became bolder, but they are known and will be before the court in a few days.

The latest development of the series of cases of diphtheria in Wollaston is the case of Wendell Boyden, the ten year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Boyden of Beach street, who is confined to his home with this disease.

WALL RALLY AT UNION HALL

Barbecue to be Held Later in the Campaign

Nearly 300 attended the reception tendered to James E. Wall, candidate for Mayor by the Taxpayers Association in Union hall Friday evening. A musical entertainment was furnished by the orchestra of the Sullivan sisters. The campaign song dedicated to the candidate was sung by the composer, James Cahill of Wollaston. Ice cream and lemonade were served.

The meeting was an enthusiastic one, Arthur L. Thomas presiding. The speakers were Andrew Morrison, David McIntosh who spoke of the discrimination of the police who prosecuted domino players and dropped the case against the Sunday tennis players; James Hagan of Squantum, who told what his townlet desired; Niel McDonald; Councilman Carlson who said that this year's board of assessors had made a sincere effort to equalize taxation; and Temple A. Winsloe.

Candidate Wall made a brief address which was enthusiastically received. He told of what changes he would bring about if elected.

It was announced that the Taxpayers Association would hold a barbecue on the Aviation field at Squantum on Oct. 10, to which the men, women and children of the city will be invited. Oxen and lambs will be roasted and all the "fixins" served with them.

MR. POWERS STANDS ALONE.

Edward P. Powers fired the first shot in his battle for the taxpayers from the rear seat of an auto on Depot street, City Square, last evening. His audience was large and attentive.

Mr. Powers in his 45 minute address called his hearers attention to the fact that he stood alone, that no one else occupied his auto with him, and that it will be that way the entire campaign. "You will be unable to point at my machine and tell your friends, the man sitting beside me is the next commissioner of public works, chief assessor, etc. My appointees will not know of their appointment until they are notified. Promises can never be extracted and the offices are to be filled from the people whose support results in election."

PROMISES LOWER TAX RATE

Open Letter From G. B. Bates Mayoralty Candidate

Editors Daily Ledger:

Nomination papers for the Mayoralty in my interest are now being circulated throughout the city. I would like to have these papers generally signed. We have reached a crisis in municipal matters here in Quincy, and solely with the belief that I can, with your help bring about much better conditions, do I ask for your co-operation.

My plan and purpose will appear in detail later, but for the present I will only state that if the voters give me the responsibility of the Mayoralty the tax rate for the year 1915 will not exceed $18.50 per thousand of valuation, and while there will be a re-adjustment of values the average property owner will be paying on a much smaller valuation than is the case today.

In making this promise I do not imply that there will be any curtailment of municipal activities, but rather that these many services will be extended and amplified.

This result can and will be brought about with out revolutionary or exceptional methods. All that is needed is re-adjustment in rightly estimating our sources of means, and employing correct methods of distribution.

The average man's burden can be greatly lessened without diminishing any of the services which the city now give him, and when we have entirely superseded the present system everyone will feel the influence of the new order.

There is absolutely no necessity for the present situation; for its change I will later offer a plan which will amply justify the promise here made of an $1800 rate.

DISPLAY OF COURAGE

Harry Johnson's Left Arm Amputated at Hospital

The surgeons at the City Hospital, where Harry Johnson the 16 year old son of Benjamin Johnson was hurried Friday noon, after his left arm had been shattered by the accidental discharge of a gun, found the arm so bad that it was necessary to amputate it at the shoulder. All through the trying ordeal young Johnson showed remarkable grit. Not once from the time the accident happened, until he was placed under ether on the operating table at the City hospital, did he lose consciousness.

The young man started out Friday morning with John Grediere in a row boat to shoot ducks. When about three miles off shore young Johnson reached to the bottom of the boat to draw the gun to him, when it was discharged, the charge entering his left elbow which was badly shattered.

Realizing his condition he never lost his nerve and did his best to stop the flow of blood while his companion bent his energy toward rowing the boat over the three miles to shore. An ambulance was called and he was hurried to the City Hospital, and immediately placed on the operating table. All of this time not a word of complaint was made and he was in the best of spirits and joked with the surgeons. Althought weak from the loss of blood, he smiled at Dr. Hunting and said, "Well doctor, I guess you can put me to sleep now." Dr. Hunting said h had never seen more display of grit, and doubted if many men would have been as brave.

The surgeons said that the young man was in a remarkably good physical condition, and that this would probably pull him through, and that he had an excellent chance for recovery.

It was late Friday night before he came out of the ether, and at that time the surgeons in charge said he was doing as well as could be expcted.

CLARA SING ARRESTED

Went to New York With Miss Bassett and Chinaman

Morning papers report the arrest in New York on Friday of a white woman who gave the name of Mrs. Clara Sing of 62 Shannon street, Quincy. The Sing woman is the wife of Charles Sing who runs a laundry at Houghs Neck.

The arrest of the Sing woman came in connection with the arrest of Flat Wong, a Chinaman, who gave his address as 77 Tyler street, Boston, on suspicion of having abducted Helen Bassett, a 17-year old girl living at 34 Eastman street, Dorchester. When arrested the Sing woman protested and declared that Wong was a graduate of a Chicago University, and that he had come to New York with the Bassett girl to be married, as she understood the laws of Massachusetts forbid a Chinaman and white girl to marry, and that she had come on with them to chaperon the girl.

When seen Friday night at his laundry at Houghs Neck Sing told the police that his wife had left the night before with Wong and the Bassett girl for New York where the tow latter were to be married. He further said tht Mrs. Bassett had given her consent in writing for her daughter to marry the Chinaman.

He did not know the Bassett girl very well, although she had been in Quincy several times. The man Wong, he said, was employed in a Chinese restaurant on Beach street, Boston, and that he intended after his marriage to go to Nashua, N. H., and open a restaurant there.

The warrant was issued and Mrs. Prudenti will be arraigned Monday.

BRAINTREE IS PLEASED

Mother Town Happy That Quincy Is Flourishing

(From the Braintree Observer)

The people of Quincy are energetically booming their city and evidently intend to place it on the map in larger letters than before. We wish them all success in the undertaking, the good results of which will be gratifying to the people of this town as well, for it is a well known fact that Quincy was once a part of Braintree. Settled as Mount Wollaston in 1625, Quincy is one of the oldest permanent settlements in Massachusetts. The settlement formed a part of Braintree until 1792 when it was incorporated under its present name in honor of John Quincy. It was chartered as a city in 1888. Although the time is not ripe here perhaps for such a wide spread movement as they have launched in Quincy, still each one of us can do his or her part in "boosting" Braintree. It is a fine town in which to live and possesses a multitude of advantages so if you really believe it, do not be afraid to say so. Speak a good word for the old town whenever possible and do your part in other ways to help the good work along. A lot can be done if everybody is willing to be a "booster."

ANOTHER TRIAL OF RIVADAVIA

The turbine of the battleship Rivadavia, which was badly smashed when a heavy weight fell upon it some weeks ago, is in good shape again, and will be taken immediately to the Charlestown navy yard where the Rivadavia now is, and placed in position. It is expected that it will be tried out next Wednesday. As soon as the trial has been completed the Rivadavia will go to Brooklyn where she will go into dry dock to have her bottom scraped, after which she will return at once to Boston for several hundred tons of amunition. Through the courtesy of the United States government most of her amunition and projectiles have been stored at the naval magazine at Hingham, and it will be transferred to the battleship on government lighters, technically known as powder boats.

The year book of the Wollaston Woman's club for the season of 1914-1915 is out and presents a very attractive program. The membership list shows many new members admitted and a large increase in the waiting list.

AT WATERWAYS CONVENTION

Board of Trade Delegates Having Good Time

The seventh annual convention of the Atlantic Deeper aWterways Association in New York has been a fine success, according to the delegates of the Quincy Board of Trade—Jonathan A. Swingle, Joseph A. Sedgewick and Frank Fessenden Crane, all of whom are accompanied by their wives.

Four of the five days have been spent on the water, aboard the palatial S. S. Berkshire, one of the most modern of the New York ships.

Addresses by Gov. Fielding of New Jersey and Gov. Glynn of New York, receptions at all the points where stops are made, auto rides, teas and banquets has been the program so far.

The delegates gathered at New York city for the first session and then went aboard th Berkshire for the river and harbor trips, with the torpedo boat McDougal acting as escort. The most brilliant receptions were at Albany and Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

The affair was honored with the presence of Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, who took a conspicuous part in the planning of the extension of waterways.

The men, devoted their day to the meetings while the women of the party were the gust of the cities' clubs.

The convention closes tonight with a moonlight hsail down the Hudson river to New York. The Quincy party expects to start for home from Albany.

CONTRACTS AWARDED.

Commissioner Brown this morning awarded two contracts. That for the concrete steps on Saville street was awarded to Henry Lavelle the lowest bidder; while the contract for paving Penn street was awarded to W. Shea & Son who were also the lowest bidders for that job.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the First Church of Squantum held a meeting in the church parlor Friday night to hear reports of the committees on the supper given in Community hall Wednesday evening. The reports show over seventy-five dollars to turn in toward the church building fund.

MAKING CHILDREN THINK.

There is no end of discussion as to what courses of study shall be taken up by the schools. Different views are expressed, ranging from the bare outlines of the old time "Three R's," to the most elaborate idea of culture study, or more practical forms of teaching hand work and home arts.

Meanwhile, there is one great essential running for all instruction. That is, that children be taught to think things out for themselves. Almost any course of study is good if this power is given.

As the routine teacher looks at it, it is her duty to see that her pupils commit certain lessons to memory. A child rises and recites a passage of history, and if he misses one or two words, he is completely off the track, and can not recover himself. In a few weeks at best, all recollection of the events described has passed out of the pupil's mind, and nothing has been accomplished.

The way in which geometry has been taught in many High schools is a case in point. Pupils would rise and recite by heart certain theorems and demonstrations. These had no practical value, save as they led pupils to think out the argument for themselves. Most of them did not do so. They got no mental training out of it, save a little practice in memorizing. Had they had to work out original demonstrations for themselves, there would have been practice in the art of a personal solving of problems.

Arithmetic, as it was studied in the older schools, was not especially practical. An enormous amount of time was spent on square and cube root, and combinations of fractions that occur but few times in real life. But at least these old tanglers and teasers of the text books made pupils think for themselves.

Life is all a school. Each day has its problem. The one who wins is the one who acquires the power of thinking out a problem correctly. If the schools are good, the pupils get practice daily in this one great essential of life.

GREAT CHARGE BEATEN OFF BY THE ALLIES

Situation Is Made Desperately Critical For a Few Hours

THEIR LINES ARE BENT BY VON KLUCK'S ARMY

Concentration of Troops by Germans Was Unexpected and Terrific Battle Is Now Raging—Issue of Greatest Conflict of All Time Depends Upon Success or Failure of Invaders' Smashing Assaults—Approximately 750,000 Men Killed or Wounded Thus Far During the War—Warships In North Sea Sank Within Few Minutes After Being Torpedoed

London, Sept. 26.—The bitterest fighting on a great scale that the world has ever known is raging on the far-flung wings of the huge hostile armies that are grapling in northern France.

Between St. Quentin and Tergnier, where the British and French are seeking to find a weak spot on the flank of General von Kluck, a terrific struggle is in progress with a steady but slow advance smashing toward the east. British troops, English, Irish and Scottish, are vying here with the French and the picturesque Turcos, driving a wedge straight toward the vital lines of communication that stretch toward the Belgian frontier.

Another great battle is on in full strength a few miles toward the south, where the Germans are making a valliant effort to break the lines of the allies. The battling began here in the neighborhood of Noyon, sixty-seven miles north and slighfly east from Paris.

The invaders, confident that the remarkably strong positions that they held in the centre could not be pierced by French charges, have moved thousands of men from the heights of Craonne and the vicinity of Rheims to reinforce this force.

Allies Driven Back

The battle thunder of rifles and machine guns, which had been preceded b the usual cannonading throughout the night, began almost at dawn Friday. After the positions of the British and French had been thoroughly shelled, the Germans launched a series of charges that drove back the French. For a few hours the situation seemed desperately critical for the allies.

The concentration of German troops in this section was apparently somewhat of a surprise, as it had been thought that they were massing in greatest numbers further toward the north, about St. Quentin and Tergnier. The overwhelming power of the German columns drove over the trenches where the allies had dug themselves in. Heroic efforts were made to stem the human tide but it flowed on, seemingly irresistible.

Slowly backward bent the British and French lines. But the invaders, if they thought that another advance upon Paris had been started, were soon shown their mistake. Telephones and telegraphs summoned up fresh troops to the aid of the allies and these were at last able to check the German rush.

Allies Resume Offensive

The precise location of the fighting south of Noyon is not disclosed in the official French dispatches. The night report says that first the allies were compelled to give way but that before the last charge of the day was ordered the offensive had again been resumed.

From a source believed to be official, it was learned that the Germans had not succeeded in getting into Ribecourt, somewhat less than ten miles south of Noyon. It is believed that some of this ten miles was regained by the allies before nightfall and that the German forward movement could not have made a total gain of more than five miles.

No reports from the battlefield have been received since last night. But every dispatch from the scene of action as well as those from Paris indicate that the battles begun at St. Quentin and Noyon in the west and near St. Mihiel in the east mark the high tide of the battle of the Aisne.

All the fighting on this long line that has been so acute for the last twelve days has been unimportant as contrasted with the smashing assaults of yesterday. Upon their success or failure depends the issue of the greatest battle of all time.

Decisive Blow Not Struck

Of the three distinct battles that are being waged with tremendous numbers, that at Noyon is believed to be of the least importance. If the Germans had been able to shatter the line of the allies, it would have perhaps turned out to be a decisive blow. But now that their attempt has been frustrated and the French and British seem to have forced the invaders to assume the defensive, it is thought that the St. Quentin and St. Mihiel battles will decide whether there is to be further battling on French soil.

While the battle, now under way for nearly two weeks, continues practically unabated, the British censorship has been clamped on even more tightly than before. Heavy losses have been sustained by the allies, for a British official report says that they have now "realized the folly of sacrificing men" in attacks upon well-nigh impregnable positions.

Little data exists upon which to base estimates of losses, but from such information as can be obtained it would appear that approximately 750,000 men have been killed or wounded, thus far, in the European conflict.

The North Sea Disaster

The facts concerning the sinking of the British cruisers Aboukir, Hogue and Cressy by a German submarine, or submarines, in the North sea, with a loss of nearly sixty officers and 1400 men, are contained in an admiralty statement.

The reports of Commanders Nicholson of the Cressy and Norton of the Hogue state that the Aboukir was hit by one torpedo and sunk in 35 minutes. Three torpedoes were fired at the Cressy, one of the explosives missing narrowly. She lasted from 35 to 45 minutes. The Hogue was struck twice, 10 to 20 seconds elapsing between the torpedoes, and went under in five minutes.

The Cressy fired on the submarine and some of the officers were confident that the shots sank her. Nicholson says that the three torpedoes directed against his ship might have been fired by the same submarine, and that there is no real proof that more than one was engaged.

The reports show that the greatest discipline was maintained and that acts of heroism were performed, but the admiralty has established the rule that such affairs must be governed by the same laws as prevail in naval action and that disabled ships must be left to their own resources rather than that other ships should be jeopardized by rescue work.

ADRIATIC BASE SEIZED

British and French Flags Flying Over Austrian Garrison

The Anglo-French fleet has secured a base in the Adriatic through the occupation of the city of Lissa, the capital of the island of that name, situated just off the Dalmatian coast.

The fleet bombarded the city, which surrendered. The British and French marines were then landed and the Austrian garrison has been imprisoned.

It is expected that, as a result of this occupation, the Austrian fleet, which has been anchored inside of the naval base at Pola, will attempt to drive the British and French fleet from Lissa and a naval battle will result.

DUEL IN THE AIR

German Machine Falls After Exchanging Shots With Belgian

A duel in the air over Brussels, between a Belgian biplane, which was making a reconnaissance, and a German machine, which was in pursuit of the biplane, is described briefly by a correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company, who witnessed the contest.

The two machines ascended to a great altitude, and after a swift flight the aviators exchanged shots at short range. Suddenly the German machine overturned and fell, and the Belgian biplane returned toward Antwerp.

SLAUGHTER AT THE FRONT

World Will Be Sick at Heart When It Learns All the Facts

"It is not war; it is a holocaust. The greatest slaughter in the world's history is going on behind that censorship curtain in France. When the world learns of the price that has been paid it will be staggered, sick at heart."

That was the way Rev. Fr. Malloy, who landed at New York from the Mauretania, summed up the European war. He knows far more about it than anyone else who has so far reached these shores. For two weeks and five days Malloy was on the actual firing line. He acted as chaplain attached to General French's personal headquarters and he recited a story of conflict, of men slain by the hundreds, that thrilled even skeptical ship news reporters.

Malloy is a native of Trenton, N. J. He was in London when the war began and on Aug. 17 was invited to accompany the British expedition to France as a Catholic chaplain, which he did.

INDIAN TROOPS' WANTS

They Include Spices, Sugar, Tobacco, Candy and Betel

Preparations are being made by the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, a hospital association, to provide for the special needs of the Indian troops which are on their way to the front.

Transferred suddenly to a climte to which they are not used, and fighting in a territory whose population is unacquainted with their habits, they will naturally be at some disadvantage, hence the plan to aid them.

The artcles required for them will include cardamon, cloves, cinnamon, sugar, candied cocoanut, tobacco, cigarets and betel. Betel is a sort of substitute for chewing tobacco, both narcotic and stimulating in its effects.

FAVORS MERCHANT MARINE

Other Points In Platform of New Hampshire Republicans

Concord, N. H., Sept. 26.—The Republican state convention adopted a platform declaring for "hearty approval and co-operation with honest men engaged in business pursuits" on the part of the national government; for the re-establishment of the protective principle in tariff legislation and the appointment of an expert tariff commission and for the establishment of an American merchant marine.

The record of the Democratic state administration was assailed, credit for progressive legislation claimed for the Republicans of New Hampshire, and a pledge given "to improve and strengthen all advanced legislation which Republican initiative has written into our laws."

Proposed amendments to the direct primary, employers' liability, fish and game and highway laws were indorsed, and a declaration made in favor of a budget system for public expenditure.

WILSON DECLINES HONOR

Refuses New Jersey Indorsement For a Second Term

Washington, Sept. 26.—Presidential Secretary Tumulty declined the offer of State Treasurer Grosscup to get the New Jersey indorsement of the president for a second term. He explained that the president did not desire to take advantage of an extraordinary situation to gain a personal advantage.

It is understood the president decided not to allow the New Jersey Democrats to indorse him for a second term because he believed it would look as though he were seeking renomination.

His attitude, however, is not taken by friends here to mean that he has decided not to accept a renomination if it is offered to him. Democrats in other states have recently indorsed him for a second term and no objection was made at the White House.

MORE TREATIES RATIFIED

Great Britain, France and Spain In American Peace Pact

Washington, Sept. 26.—Peace commission treaties with Great Britain, France and Spain were ratified by the senate, making twenty-five in the series negotiated by the state department which have been approved by this government.

No opposition developed to the agreements with Great Britain, France and Spain. The treaties provide for investigation for a year before resort to arms in all international disputes which cannot be settled by ordinary resources of diplomacy. The theory is that a year's reflection would serve to allay bitterness which might precipitate war.

Lyndon T. D. Gurney of Walker street, has purchased a touring car.

Sunday, will be observed as rally day by Memorial Church Sunday school.

The first meeting of the season of the Girls Friendly Society of St. Chrysostoms is announced for Wednesday evening, Oct. 8.

Ex-Councilman Charles E. Cherrington of Clive street went Friday to the Boston Homeopathic Hospital to undergo an operation for hernia.

The annual reception of Memorial church to which all the parishioners and friends are invited, is to be held Wednesday evening in the vestry of the church.

The fire in Thompson's garage on Upthorp street at 6 A. M. Tuesday and the delay in getting telephone connection emphasizies the need of a fire alarm box in that locality.

Elna Olsson, the nine year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Olsson of Webster street, who has been seriously sick with rheumatic fever the past fortnight is somewhat improved.

The Quincy Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet at the home of Mrs. A. N. Thompson, 198 Whitwell street, Friday, October 2 at 2.30 P. M. It is hoped that every member will invite others to attend and help this most important work.

A series of revival meetings will begin at the Atlantic Methodist church Oct. 4, to continue to Nov. 1. Prominent pastors of Boston and Quincy churches will assist. An experienced and efficient singer will conduct the music.

At the great National Constitutional Prohibition rally in Quincy Music hall tomorrow, it is proposed to have not merely the Orpheus Male Quartet, but to have rousing singing on the part of the audience. All who like to sing or to hear hundreds of people in stirring song, should come.

Sunday evening at 7.30 a union service in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition is to be held in the Wollaston Baptist church. Rev. T. J. Swearingen, evangelist and temperance orator from Delaware will give the address and the public is invited.

The Walther Men's class meets Sunday at 12.15 in the Wollaston Baptist church. Prelude: "The National Constitutional Prohibition Movement." Regular lesson "Some Lessons from the Life of Christ." Song service and discussions. All men invited.

The committee working to sell shares in the Atlantic club is pushing its work with good success. There has been no public discussion permitted thus far in regard to the purchase or lease of a building as the committee wishes to get shares enough subscribed to turn the work over to the share holders for decision. Much credit thus far is due to the vigorous push of W. G. Young and Captain Packard.

THIRTY-FIFTH YEAR.

With a larger enrolment of students than ever before in its history, Burdett Business College of Boston has opened its doors for its 35th year.

The home of Burdett College means more than the four walls and equipment that go to make up a school. It is an organization of men and women with exact knowledge, a rare enthusiasm and a whole-souled desire to serve. Their interest in the welfare of Burdett students is deep and abiding. It continues after they have gone out into the business world to make their careers.

This latter spirit is splendidly exemplified by the Burdett College Employment Service which places all of its graduates in good positions and continues to supply positions whenever needed.

WIN FIRST AT HOME GAME

Quincy High Shuts Out Hingham High 31-0

Quincy High school had no difficulty in defeating Hingham High 31 to 0 Friday afternoon, in the first home game of the season on the Merrymount oval. The first touchdown was scored in the first six minutes of play, and the balance of the points in the last half.

The first and second periods were demonstrations of crude football on the part of Quincy High. The Hingham team, one of the second raters in the state, with the assistance of six fumbles and no team work, were able to prevent Quincy from scoring. A sudden change in the spirit of Quincy in the third period showed to what extent the local team can be developed before the season is over.

The first goal was made by Jepson who bucked the line. Captain Larkin contributed the second on an end play. The feature of the game came in the third period, when Quincy advanced the ball from their own 40 to the visitor's 45 yard line by a pretty forward, Bogan to Larkin.

Larkin took the next one on the run, just reaching it with his finger tips, packed the ball into his arm, dodged three men and fought his way down the field for the third score.

Hamlin went in in the second half and scored two more goals. Open play materially assisted in getting the ball within scoring distance.

The worst feature of the game was the constant fumbling of Quincy, Jepson being the worst offender. Whet Browne fumbled after a pretty line buck and Paul Larkin fumbled a punt.

The line played spasmodic football, the only player making determined and successful attacks being Buck Reardon, who held an open hole in the centre line throughout the game.

Bogan played a star game at quarter, but his work showed to better advantage after Quincy High got going in football style. Several of the players imitated "perfect ladies," but pulled themselves together finally and played good football. The summary:

MILTON ACADEMY COACHES.

A new system of coaches has been instituted at the Milton Academy this year. The idea is to have three different departments, represented by a coach, to do all the work. The faculty coach is Waldo Forbes, head coach Mr. Allen, and graduate coach George M. Reynolds Harvard '17. There are 30 candidates out for the football team, and some very promising candidates are: Apthorp, Broughton, E. Cabot, A. Clark, Codman, P. Dickson, Faxon, Felton, Florence, Humphry, Hutchinson, Johnson, Liecty, Mitton, S. Thurber, Towle, Trainer and H. Whitcomb.

Some of the strings were close and points were not decided until the last pinfall.

The Government Draftsmen beat the Mold Loftsmen three to one. They lost the first by 32 pins, but recovered them in the second and easily took the last.

NEIGHBORHOOD CLUB AT MILTON

The Neighborhood Club began the season Friday afternoon with an attendance of 30 ladies at the first meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. C. Crawford Hollidge on Adams street.

The ladies are planning to do various things this year. On Oct. 10, a mammoth food sale will be held in the vestry of the East Congregational church. The committee in charge is: Mrs. J. H. Macguire, Mrs. William D. Parsons, Mrs. Henry E. Sheldon, Mrs. C. Crawford Hollidge and Mrs. Samuel D. Kirland.

In November the society will give a reception to their many friends.

The big event of the year will take place in January when the fifth anniversary of the organization of the club will be observed. A great celebration is being planned for this important occasion and the ladies are sure to make a success of it.

An important work of the club is for the Red Cross. Everyone has taken a fine hold to help the innocent sufferers of the terrible European war now raging. The ladies are planning to sew and do anything and everything that will help those unfortunate people.

The next meeting will be held Oct. 9, at the home of Mrs. Albert Hecker on Huntington road.

Plain to Observation.

Wife—"Notice that third chorus girl in the first row. She used to go to school with me. Poor thing! She went on the stage because she had nothing to wear." Husband—"So I see."—London Opinion.

RIVADAVIA GETS ITS BEER

The crew of the Argentine battleship Rivadavia passed a bad half hour Friday when a consignment of beer to the battleship was held up. Liquor of any kind has been barred from navy yards and United States battleships by Secretary Daniels, and for this reason when a team with a load of beer drove up to the main gate at the Charlestown navy yard, and was about to enter, the driver was held up by the sentry.

In response to the challenge of "Who comes here" the teamster is said to have replied "A friend with a load of beer." The beer looked good to the sentry, but mindful of the orders of Sec. Daniels, he replied, "You can't pass here."

The teamster protested that the beer was for the Rivadavia, but the sentry knew his business and was firm, although there were a lot of thirsty South American throats that were parched and nothing but beer would quench their thirst. Things were getting complicated when it was recalled that there was such a thing known in naval circles as a bumboat, and this was pressed into service.

The team in the meantime had left the navy yard gate and gone to the waters edge where the load was transferred to the bumboat and in course of time reached the side of the big fighting ship by the water route, without passing through the navy yard and the burning thirst was quenched.

It is said that Sec. Daniels has fully approved of the action of the sentry in preventing what at one time looked like an international complication.

SURPRISE PARTY.

A pleasant little affair was the surprise party tendered to Mrs. Addie Day in honor of her birthday, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Thayer, Braintree Wednesday evening. A large number of friends assembled at the house in response to invitations and meanwhile Mrs. Day had been invited to take an automobile ride with Mr. and Mrs. Thayer. On their return, everything was quiet and the parlor in darkness but a turn of the electric switch revealed the merry company assembled there and the secret was out.

Mrs. Day was completely surprised and almost overcome by her feelings but soon recovered her equanimity and responded in a graceful speech of thanks for the portfolio which was presented her in behalf of her many friends. Refreshments were served and the evening passed pleasantly with music and other diversions.

Commissioner Brown had the street sprinklers out bright and early this morning, and the streets in and about City Square were sprinkled. The hot weather for the past few days had dried up the streets to such an extent that the dust was blowing about in great clouds, and was very disagreeable to both pedestrians and carriages and to the merchants. City teams are also gathering up the leaves.

SATISFACTION FIRST.

It is hoped that we all give Mr. Remick our loyal support in maintaining his policy of "satisfaction first." There seems to be an air of welcome as soon as you enter this modern, wide-awake store. Salesmen are courteous and obliging, all working for the same policy, "Satisfaction First." As you read his advertisement in this paper you wonder how such values can be given at the beginning of the season. Why; one would be glad to pay such prices at the season's end. Another important event is the shoe department. There you see a wide variety of the latest niceties in the shoe line. As we all know the Packard Shoe is known the country over for their comfort, style and lasting qualities. After summing up everything Remick should be congratulated for his careful judgment in carrying nothing but new and standard merchandise. All in all, it hardly seems essential to travel to larger cities for clothes values, does it?

NOT GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

Assessor Eric Bergfors is a happy man today, for he was found not guilty by the Abington court this morning on the complaint against him for manslaughter. The case grew out of an automobile accident in which Mr. Bergfors was in no way to blame. He was riding through Abington the Sunday previous to Labor Day, going at a moderate rate of speed, when suddenly a boy started to run across the street directly in front of his automobile. The accident was entirely unavoidable and no one felt worse about it than did Mr. Bergfors.

He remained on the scene and did what he could and after another automobile had taken the boy to the hospital he started for home. On arriving in Quincy he went immediately to the police station where he informed Chief Burrell. The Chief informed him that he should have notified the Abington police and as Mr. Bergfors understood it, the chief agreed to do this for him.

Mr. Bergfors notified the Highway Commission immediately, but a warrant for manslaughter was issued and a trial had. The findingf was given in the Abington court this morning when Mr. Bergfors was found not guilty and discharged.

Unwittingly however Mr. Bergfors had violated the rule about informing the police and on this complaint a small fine was imposed.

GARDNER CLUB.

The Gardner Club of Christ church held its first meeting of the year Thursday evening. Although it was the hottest September 24th in a good many years, quite a number turned out to begin what will probably be the best year yet. The executive committee has prepared a fine calendar which contains several well known speakers. A debate and two or three socials are also included in it.

The President has called a special meeting for next Thursday evening in order to vote on a large number of applications for membership. This was necessitated in order that the successful applicants may be initiated Oct. 8, which is the first date set for initiation.

SAFETY FIRST CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED

Moving Pictures Convincing Arguments That There is Too Much Carelessness

David S. Byers Addresses Fully 1,200 People

The launching of the city wide "Safety First" campaign in the Kincaide theatre Sunday afternoon was witnessed by upwards of 1200 men, women and children who were treated to a remarkable exposition of the value of such campaigns by moving pictures and a short lecture by David S. Byers of the Massachusetts Liability Co.

The gathering was a large representation of the cosmopolitan population ofthe city, all nationalities and all interested in the prevention of accidents, being numbered in the great crowd that thronged the theatre. Although scheduled to start at 3 o'clock, the majority of the seats were taken half an hour earlier and late comers were obliged to stand in the rear.

President Joseph W. Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, under whose auspices the meeting was held, said the "Safety First" had been introduced at the shipyard because it was good for the men and good for the company. An even 80 per cent of accidents he declared to be due to the carelessness of workmen and in asking the people of the city to co-operate in a movement of this kind he was simply asking them to watch out and avoid the ordinary risks to which everyone through habit exposed himself.

The education of the men can accomplish results and the teaching of the men is largely in their own hands, he said, as he presented David S. Byers of the Massachusetts Liability Insurance Co.

The applause which greeted Mr. Powell's remarks suddenly died down as a slide, showing what is left of a workman's mangled hand, was thrown on the screen, and as similar slides showing the results of accidents were exhibited smiles and laughter changed to deep feeling of sympathy for the unfortunates who suffer from the effects of industrial accidents and are disabled for life.

Mr. Byers said that 4000 men were idle every day last year through industrial accidents, entailing a loss in wages of more than $10,0000.

Mr. Byers in closing pointed out the danger of the nail, a danger to which all are exposed and one which sometimes develops into blood poisoning with serious and often fatal results.

Three films were then shown which in some respects were nerve racking for they faithfully presented, with all detail, actual accidents and the subsequent treatment given at emergency hospitals.

The first was the "Workmen's Lesson," a story founded on the contempt of an old man for safety devices, which spirit he communicates to the young man who asks the hand of his daughter in marriage, and which results in a mangled left arm.

The second was the "Price of Thoughtlessness," a film showing boys and girls playing in the streets and other places, and through their own thoughtlessness being run over by cars, automobiles and injured in other ways.

The last film was inspirational, "What he might have been," being a demonstration of the value of vocation training.

Mr. Powell brought the meeting to a close with a few words, urging the practice of the lessons taught, and was roundly applauded. Music during the afternoon was furnished by Wilson's orchestra.

CLOSING DAY AT PLAYGROUND

Interesting Series of Sports at Quincy--Wollaston

The closing day of the new Wollaston playground held Saturday afternoon was a gala event and took the form of a childrens field day. A gathering of nearly five hundred children, parents and teachers assembled soon after 2 o'clock to take part in the extensive program prepared by the committee of the Wollaston Parents and Teachers association, with David H. Goodspeed in charge.

The series of games and races was carefully planned and gave practically every member of the playground an opportunity to participate in some of the events. The program consisted of relay races both for boys and for girls, contests between bos', straddle ball teams, fifty yard dashes, sack and chariot races, and a slug ball game for the boys and games in dodge ball and curtain ball for girls. In all games the two sides were designated as Harvard and Yale in order to make a distinction between the teams.

A novel race which caused much interest was the boys' baseball relay, which consisted of a run and a ball throw back to the next man in line for each player on the two teams.

Considerable excitement was caused during the races by a vigorous dog fight in the crowd, which was finally brought to an end by one of the belligerents being restored to his mistress.

The final event was the ball game between the playground team and a team consisting of boys of the Wollaston Methodist church. The teams were evenly matched and the game ended in favor of the playground team with a score of 7 to 5.

The apparatus on the playground which was in use more than ever before was purchased with contributions made by the people of Wollaston. The plans for the purchase of this apparatus were developed last April and at that time subscriptions were made to the amount of $300, of which $25 was a gift of the Civics committee of the Wollaston Woman's club.

The apparatus containing approximately 90 feet of steel pipe was purchased and made up locally with an estimated saving of fifty per cent of the cost of similar equipment if pur-

PROHIBITION SWEEPING COUNTRY

Dr. Howard H. Russell, Founder of Anti-Saloon League, Speaks at Music Hall

Resolutions Endorsing the Stand of Mayor Miller

One of the 300 meetings in the interest of National Prohibition, held throughout the state in the campaign that is being waged, was held Sunday afternoon at Music hall, and although the Safety First gathering at Kincaide's theatre claimed many, there was a large audience present, which included many ladies. Immediately after the close of the theatre meeting many of the audience there came to Music hall.

Delcevare King, vice president of the Anti-Saloon League of Massachusetts, presided, and during the time the audience was arriving, music was furnished by a victrola and by piano solos. Around the walls were hung many of the Prohibition cards giving various facts about the results of intemperance, while across the front of the platform was a large banner reading: "This is not the cause of faction nor party, nor of any individual, but the cause of mankind."

The meeting opened with selections by the Orpheus male quartette, Messrs James C. McFarlane, Everett M. Clark, Alfred G. Halverson and Francis E. Wharton, and the singing of temperance songs by the audience.

Mr. King in his remarks, spoke of the no-license movement and the local option law which he said was enforced by local authorities, but with National Prohibition the law would be enforced by Uncle Sam and it would be done, and the distilleries and breweries would be wiped out. He advised all to read Jack London's, book "John Barleycorn" which he said was an autobiography of the author. He hoped that Massachusetts would line up in this wonderful movement for National Prohibition, the biggest cause in the world.

Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, as president of the Quincy Minister's Association, said that while the great majority of men might feel favorable to this movement, they were asking if it was possible. The day for that has gone by, and we should stop tinkering with this question. Our jails and asylums are full and we must build more to care for these people, many of whom are brought there through drink. In the olden days when a man was hurt he was picked up. That is what we have been doing. We have been trying to mitigate the suffering caused by intemperance, so we have all these institutions, maintained at the expense of the country. The time has come to cut off the dogs tail behind the ears and end the fight. He felt extremely hopeful in this fight and felt that the ministers will say we are with you to a man.

David S. Byers of the Massachusetts Employees Industrial Insurance Co., spoke of his twelve years work in this line, and cited many individual accident cases whose cause could be directly traced to drink. He said that in Germany, the largest manufacturing plants were taking steps to reduce the drinking habit among employees by furnishing soft drinks. Business interests have come to realize that the liquor traffic must be condemned.

At this point John D Mackay, chairman of the School Committee offered the following resolution which was adopted

"Whereas we learn that the Honorable John L. Miller, Mayor of the City of Quincy, is seriously ill and

Whereas, the said Miller in private life and in public life has always been a firm and consistent opponent of the rum traffic and its nefarious influence be it

Resolved that we extend to our esteemed Mayor an expression of our deep regret for his illness, and our earnest hope for his restoration to health and continued usefulness."

CHARLES LYMAN PRESCOTT.

Charles Lyman Prescott, formerly of Quincy, died of hemorrhage at Hull on Saturday, aged 54 years. He was the son of the late William Gardner Prescott, the pioneer ice dealer of Quincy, who established the plant now operated by the Meadow Brook Ice Company at South Quincy, and was also a pioneer market gardener with a garden on what is now Upland road. For many years Charles L. Prescott was a contractor, building the house at the corner of Baxter and Curtis avenues at Quincy Point. When business was dull he devoted all his spare time to fishing and gunning. When trap shooting was popular he was one of the crack shots of the city. During the administration of Mayor Bryant, he was city scavenger. At one time he was in the fish business.

Mr. Prescott leaves a widow; a brother, Gardner Spear Prescott of Norwell; and a sister, Mrs. Minnie Gordon of Lynn. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, the burial being at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

The men are now discussing which looks the better, a derby or a soft felt. They would be much more likely to settle the question right if they permitted their wives to pick out their hats.

MADE IN AMERICA.

The "made in America" idea is being extensively used by retailers and other business men. Signs are posted asking customers to purchase home-made goods. They are said to be accomplishing their purpose.

Before the war it used to work the other way. To many people the fact that an article came from abroad surrounded it with a glamor of style. Or they imagined it was made more thoroughly. American manufacturers would sometimes stamp their goods as made in some foreign country.

It would seem good policy, whenever two articles appear of equal intrinsic value, to prefer the American goods. The notion that an article must give good wear in order to be profitable in the long run, has been pretty well learned by our business men.

Any one who ever travelled in Europe knows how he was cheated by hotels and shop-keepers at every turn. The spirit of gouge seems far more prevalent there. The same spirit has very likely existed on their manufactured goods. As a general thing, the nearer home you buy goods, the better you can depend on the quality.

A duty that extends Quite plainly to the public weal
As well as to my friends.

And maybe I will ride."

Charges at Battle of the Aisne Made More Vicious

ALLIES SEEM SURE OF WINNING ENGAGEMENT

Fighting Has Continued Day and Night Since Last Friday, Invading Troops Being Balked In Desperate Effort to Smash Through Allied Lines—Many Thousand Men Must Fall Before Conflict Is Over—Lines So Close Together That Bayonet Charges Are Frequent—Loss of Life In Previous Days Surpassed In Present Conflict—Bombs Create Terror In France and Belgium

London, Sept. 28.—The tide has at last turned against the Germans in the battle of the Aisne.

After seventy-two hours of uninterrupted fighting, upon a greater scale and with greater desperation than was ever known before, the power of the German machine has been unable to check the attacks upon its right wing or to drive on to triumph upon its left.

Many thousands more will be slain before the battle of the Aisne is over; many hours the Germans may still be in the trenches that they now hold.

But the invading troops, spurred on by their officers, who have received word from the kaiser and General von Moltke to smash through the allied lines in the east and to hold them in the west, have tried their utmost and have failed.

The fall of Fort du Camp des Romains, near St. Mihiel, has not resulted in further advances by the Germans against the Meuse line of fortifications. On the contrary, the French have thrown trooos by thousands into the threatened area and have compelled the Germans to give over their bombardment of Fort des Paroches.

Allies Making Progress

In the west, the allied turning movement has continuel to make progress. Almost foot by foot, facing batteries of machine guns and the heaviest artillery that the Germans could get into action, the English, Irish, Scottish, French and Algerian regiments have battered their way into the enemy's trenches.

More significant is the omission from the French official reports of the places gained during the fighting of Sunday. A similar reticence was noticed in the closing hours of the battle of the Marne, just before the right wing of General von Kluck crumpled under the wild charges and the merciless artillery fire directed unerringly against it.

Between the Oise and the Somme rivers—a great extent of territory cut by rivers everywhere, thickly settled and made accessible by a network of railroads and the famous white roads of France—the furious fighting which began last Friday has continued day and night.

There has hardly been a minute in which assaults of strongly fortified positions have not been ordered in some section of this great battlefield. Yet, great as it is in extent, the forces fighting here are but the wings of the greatest armies that have ever been gathered.

Long Line of Assaults

The Germans, foiled in their attempts to break through the allied line at Noyon, continued their counter charges Sunday. There were moments when, from the farthest extremity of the invading lines, assaults seemed to be in progress for miles, even as far as the country north of battle-scarred Rheims.

But against the fresh troops rushed to the battleground by the allies, the charges broke in vain. Wherever ground was gained by the invaders, they were swept back by an irresistible attack to the trenches that they had but a few moments before left. They never returned in the numbers that had gone forth.

Bayonets, long ago supposed relegated to museums by the increased range and power of great guns, were conspicuous in the actions. It was literally hand-to-hand fighting, with the artillery unable to take much part except at rare intervals.

Not only has every German attack been foiled, but in many widely separated places the British and French have driven deep wedges into the lines of the foe. Von Kluck seems to be in great danger, as on Saturday night he ordered a retreat from his position northeast of Paris.

Losses Are Enormous

Heavy as have been the German losses in previous days, they have been surpassed in the fighting that has been waged since Friday. The desperation of their charges, the heroism of their officers, the tremendous strength in reinforcements that they have gathered on this right wing—all these bear out the belief of the French generals that an order has come from the kaiser to stake everything upon this attempt to remain on French soil.

General Joffre and Sir John French have been able, through the efficacy of their flying men, to keep well posted upon the movements of the enemy. As soon as it was learned that fresh soldiers by thousands were being hurried to the right wing from the Vosges, Lorraine and the centre, long trains began to empty thousands of French and British troops in the rear of the allied lines. They were moved up in the fighting zone to replace the men who had been steadily engaged for days. Since Friday these veterans of the battles of the Marne and the Aisne have begun to reappear, so that the numerical superiority of the allies continues.

A wireless dispatch from Berlin indicates the advance of the allied turning movement. This message states that a small force of Germans was able to drive back a large number of French at Bapaume. This is nearly twenty miles north of Peronne and on the road to Cambrai, where the German army of General von Boehm is centred.

Allies Pressing Forward

Here and there in this region, the new British expeditionary army and the latest French reserve army, perhaps aided by a corps from the army of Paris, are pressing eastward, forcing a way between the armies of von Boehm and von Kluck.

The fighting in many places between the Somme and the Oise is made desperate by the short distances that separate the hostile trenches. In many places the earthworks are scarcely more than 100 yards distant. The charges are consequently more vicious now than at any other period of the battle. There is no time for ranks to break before the enemy is among them and consequently the bayonet struggles in the trenches are furious.

Probably never before in the history of warfare have there been so many night attacks. The bitterest assaults of strongly held positions have been most frequently ordered between midnight and dawn. Day attacks, although oftern made, are not so capable of being turned into surprises now as in previous great wars. The aeroplane has here brought about another change in military maneuvers.

Saturday night there were many pessimists in London. The news that one of the formidable Meuse line forts on the eastern frontier of France had been captured by the enemy led to many gloomy forecastings.

French Line Strengthened

But reassurance came with Sunday's messages from the front. Through the night trains filled with troops were being rushed to the Meuse line. Joffre did not intend to place too strong a reliance upon the French forts, especially now that the Bavarian army had the assistance of the heavy howitzers brought over the boundary from Metz.

Along the west bank of the Meuse, prepared to throw back any attempt to cross the river, were drawn up thousands of French soldiers, their lines made strong by the forts that rise at frequent intervals between Verdun and Toul. Nowhere were the Germans able to gain ground across the Meuse and their cannonading of the forts grew less intense as the day passed.

South of Toul, where there is an unprotected gap between Toul and Epinal, the invading columns were driven back. They made some progress westward from Blamont, but now they are back in the town, after an engagement that caused them serious losses. Still further south and slightly nearer the Alsace boundary, they were compelled to evacuate Badonviller. From Lessaux also they were pried out of a strong position and driven from the dense woods in that stretch between Lessaux and Nisenbache.

Allies Gain In Centre

Even in the heavily entrenched centre of the lines, the alies have been able to make progress. Saturday only artillery duels, fought at long range, were witnessed between Rheims and Verdun, but on Sunday charges were frequent. The Prussian Guard, well rested since its last disastrous attempt against the French lines, was hurled time after time at the French in Berry-au-Bac and Nogent L'Abbaye, but not once were they able to hold any of the ground that they gained.

The most violent attacks in the centre, however, were those of the armies of the Duke of Wuertemberg and the crown prince. They, too, had been inactive for days, with the exception of a slight advance by the crown prince's forces to Varennes. Yesterday the Duke of Wuertemberg ordered an advance along the roads leading from Sommepy to Chalons-sur-Marne, while simultaneously the crown prince drove his troops along the highways from Vouziers to St. Menehould.

For a few hours the armies made considerable progress, and it seemed probable that they might get into a position to attack the Meuse line of forts from the west. But by nightfall the French had fought back to the positions that they had held at daybreak, and another menace to the fortifications was removed.

In the Vosges and in the strip of Alsatian territory held by the French, no engagements of importance were reported. Here alone on the great battle line, the fighting has been desultory.

Bomb Droppers Busy

Bomb dropping by German aircraft has created terror in France and Belgium. Paris was visited by an aeroplane that dropped one bomb near the American embassy. One man was killed and a girl crippled by the bomb. The aviator flew above the Eiffel tower, evidently taking that as his target, and threw a German flag down after one of the bombs.

Several Belgian cities were likewise favored with aerial callers, but although a number of bombs were dropped, only one fatally, the death of a man 82 years old, is reported.

The French ministry of marine announced that the French gunboat Surprise took possession of Coco Beach, in Kamarun, the German colony in Western Equatorial Africa.

Victor Augagneur, minister of marine, said that previous to landing her marines, who dislodged the German troops on shore, the Surprise, which is an unarmored vessel of 680 tons, sank two vessels belonging to the German auxiliary fleet, the Rhine and the Italo.

Coco Beach is at the mouth of the Muni river, on Corisco bay. The territory was ceded to Germany as a result of the Franco-German Congo agreement of 1911.

NEW PEACE MOVEMENT

Washington Hears of Plans Inaugurated by King of Spain

Another movement to bring peace in Europe has been formally inaugurated by King Alfonso of Spain, who has communicated his plans to the state department at Washington. He also has taken up the subject officially with Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway and the other nations which have remained neutral.

It is believed that Alfonso is in a strong position to lead a peace movement in Europe and that his efforts may lead to direct negotiations with the warring powers.

For the present the Washington government will not make public its views on Alfonso's movements or any plans it has in contemplation by itself or in combination with the other powers.

NEW FRENCH EXPLOSIVE

American Experts Believe It to Be Picric Acid Compound

United States army and navy ordnance and powder experts admit an ignorance of turpenite, the French explosive, said to kill by spreading gas when the shell in which the explosive is held bursts.

These officers say they never heard of it before. All of them give the opinion, however, that it is a picric acid compound. In their opinion the shell is charged very highly with a compound of which picric acid forms the major part, and is encased in a thin shell with a supersensitive explosive cap.

The new British army, composed of 150,000 volunteers, was reviewed at Aldershot by King George, who was lustily cheered by the soldiers, who will soon be fighting for him on French soil.

Most of the men were in khaki, but here and there were seen splashes of black, where regiments of men who had not yet received their uniforms were drawn up. Many of them wore ribbons and medals of the South African and other campaigns.

MISS RUTH ENTERTAINED

Is Enthusiastic Over Quincy and Its Attractions

A warm friendship has arise between the Quincy Boosters' Club and Miss Florence Shirley, the charming young actress who has the title role in the comedy "Along Came Ruth," now playing at the Plymouth theatre, and her number of admirers in Quincy are increasing daily. At each performance there are Quincy people in the audience and all come away enthused over "Miss Ruth" and the lesson of the play, which shows what one or two can do to wake up a town or city. This is why they are Boosting Quincy.

Yesterday, Miss Shirley was the guest of the President of the Quincy Board of Trade, John L. Hamilton, and Mrs. Hamilton, who motored to Boston and escorted her to Quincy. She was accompanied by Alfred D. Lunt of the Castle Square Company. Others at the dinner party were Miss Mildred Gray Huston (the Miss Ruth Ambrose of Quincy,) Carl Fisher Prescott and Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Prescott of the Daily Ledger. All found Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton delightful hosts.

After dinner others joined the party including Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane and wife, Col. and Mrs. Henry L. Kincaide, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Gilliatt, Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Woodward, Secretary John O. Hall of the Board of Trade and Mrs. Hall, and Miss Sue Rice. And little Janet Hamilton, the two-year old daughter of President and Mrs. Hamilton, should not be overlooked, as she certainly did her part at entertaining.

Most of the afternoon was devoted to motoring about the city, on visits to other Quincy Boosters, and to points of interest. One of the most attractive places visited was the dahlia farm of George F. Elcock on Copeland street, where there were fully 5,000 flowers in blossom, and such a variety of colors, some of the most beautiful ever seen. It was Mr. Elcock who furnished the 1000 dahlias for the mammoth "Q" presented to Miss Shirley at the Plymouth theatre on "Quincy night" Sept. 15.

Mr. Elcock and his daughter Miss "Nimrod" Elcock extended every courtesy to the party. They first loaded down Miss Shirley with the choicest blooms in great variety, more in fact than she could carry, and each of the ladies in the party also received bouquets of dahlias. It was impossible to tell which blooms were the prettiest.

Mr. and Miss Elcock also showed a valuable string of fox skins, many of the animals having been shot by "Nimrod." Mr. Elcock's large kennel of dogs was also enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. William Patterson, the florists on South Central avenue who designed the big "Q" were visited, and were also delighted to welcome Miss Shirley to Quincy. They presented her a bouquet of fifty pink delights. Miss Shirley thanked them again and again for both the big "Q" and the pinks.

Reservoir park on Third hill was visited. It was a clear day, and the view could not be excelled anywhere on the Atlantic coast.

The birthplaces of President John Adams and President John Quincy Adams were visited, and the time was altogether too short to see all the interesting relics. Other places pointed out to Miss Shirley were the home of the Presidents on Adams street, the burial place of the Presidents and their wives beneath the First Parish church, the site of the birthplace of John Hancock, the Quincy Homestead of Dorothy Q fame, the Thomas Crane Public Library and Quincy's beautiful civic centre about the library, the schoolhouses, churches, Kincaide Theatre, etc. It was the general opinion that Quincy has more attractive drives than any city in Massachusetts.

Returning from the ride, the party was photographed at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton by Miss Sue Rice, and then entertained at lunch in the evening an automobile took Miss Shirley and escort back to Boston.

Many regret that this is the last week of "Along Came Ruth" at the Plymouth, but they thank "Miss Ruth" for the new life which the comedy and her acting have given the city of Quincy, and hope the Quincy Ruth may continue the good work. Evidently Quincy has not heard the last of the Booster Club.

Among Our Churches

FIRST PARISH CHURCH.

"The growing disregard for authority among the prosperous and influential people of our country is even a greater menace to the stability of our democratic institutions than the vast influx of unassimilated aliens," said the Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson in his sermon at the First Parish church Sunday morning.

"When each one does the thing that is most pleasing to himself, that is not democracy but anarchy; and anarchy has always led, first to chaos, and then to despotism. We Americans believe in democracy without analyzing very closely what it means. We need to learn that in a successful democracy, where the final authority rests with the people themselves, a fine sense of moral obligation is necessary among all the people and especially among those who have the most influence in shaping policies.

The trouble with us is that we have come to be very much more concerned about our special rights, exemptions, priveleges and pleasures, than about our common duties. And our social fabric is being dangerously weakened by this lack of loyalty to the true ideals of democracy."

Mr. Hudson then went on to show from historic parallels that moral development has always required a religious basis, and that the weakening of moral standards today may be directly traced to a decline in authority among the Protestant churches.

"Protestant Christianity from the very first," he said, "has emphasized the most important element in democracy—the supreme worth of the individual That was the whole burden of the Master's teaching, while Roman Catholicism from the first has used and supported autocratic methods involving absolute domination over the individual, and consequently has allied itself with monarchical forms of government."

"But Protestant Christianity has largely lost its power by reason of its fatal division into rival sects with diverse and conflicting creeds. While Roman Catholicism, with its autocratic methods, has preserved its unity and authority, and as it gains in power is beginning, here and there, to lay its heavy hand upon the growth of true democracy.

"If the Protestant churches are to be of any use to modern society, in its present crisis, they must learn to subordinate their theological differences and sectarian jealousies and combine on the great fundamental ideals for which they all stand.

"First, among these fundamental ideals stands the eternal primacy of the spiritual forces of life over the physical, of mind over matter, of ideas over things—in other words the fact that we have bodies, but we are souls; or as St. Paul puts it: 'The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal.'"

This is most important today because for the past two centuries and especially during the past half century. Europe and America have been rapidly, and in part unconsciously, drifting into an absolute materialism. In the swift development of industry and commerce, the harnessing of the mighty forces of nature, the conquest of the western continent including the building of cities of great systems for the transport of produce and the transmission of business transactions and news over land, under seas and through the air, together with the destructive agencies of war in all this vast surrender of civilization to the material things, we have lost sight of the unutterable folly of modern civilization in striving to gain the whole world, while losing its own soul."

"Now we are learning how destructible are 'things', however great their intrinsic or historic value when the sense of moral obligation has been permitted to take second place. The present crisis is the greatest challenge that Protestant Christianity has ever faced; and its first duty is to meet the swelling tide of materialism with a united persistent and intelligent assertion of the priceless value of the human soul."

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

Large audiences attended both services on Sunday at Bethany church. The musical program at the morning service included the anthem, "Ye that stand in the house of the Lord," Spinney; Response, "Father hear our prayer;" After the offertory, "The King of love my Shepherd is," Schelley. At the evening service the vested girls choir sang for the anthem, "God who madest earth and heaven," Schmaker. The offertory solo was rendered by Miss Wilbas who sang "The way of Peace" The response was "Father hear the prayer we offer."

The Norfolk Association of Congregation churches will meet at this church tomorrow with sessions at 9.45 A. M. and 1.30 P. M., to which the public is invited. Among the speakers will be Dr. Barton whose subject will be "The relation of war to missions."

A rally of the teachers and officers of the Bible school will be held Tuesday evening. The pastor will outline plans for the winter.

The Christian Endeavor society will hold a cafeteria lunch on Wednesday at 6.15 and the annual meeting will follow.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

Mrs. William Hodges of East Weymouth was the soloist at the Sunday morning service and the Girls' Choir sang most acceptably Barnby's "O Lord how manifold are they Works." The beautiful asters that adorned the communion table and the pulpit were the gift of Frederick H. Bishop and were distributed among the sick after the service.

The pastor's sermon was entitled "Windows toward Jerusalem" from the text Daniel 6, 10. He said "If we are wise we provide windows and sit at them and look through them out upon the heights. The Bible, Sunday and the Church are windows we cannot do without. May God deliver us from Sunday baseball games in good old New England. You cannot have a base ball game without any amount of infernal noise and yelling. Whatever tends to make Sunday like any other day is not for the best interests of society. Of excitement we have already too much and we need all the more one day in seven on which to cultivate an enjoyment of serene and quiet things."

A meeting of the Sunday School teachers will be held at the pastor's home, 39 Grand View avenue, Wednesday evening at 7.30 oclock.

The kindergarten department, which meets in the vestry during the hour of worship Sunday mornings is this season in charge of the well known kindergartner Mrs. Aylmer Hatch. All children in Wollaston over three years of age are cordially welcomed to this department of our church.

Mr. Otto Lyding of Harvard Divinty School is to be ordained to the Christian ministry and installed as assistant minister to the Rev. James DeNormandie, D. D. in the First church in Roxbury., Sunday evening, Oct. 4. at 7.30 o'clock.

The sessions of the Sunday School will be resumed Sunday morning, Oct. 4. Mrs. H. C. Needham of 525 Harvard street, Brookline, has been engaged to have charge of the Sunday School for the ensuing year.

The fall meeting of the Norfolk Conference of Unitarian churches will be held with the Channing church, Dorchester, Wednesday, Oct. 8.

Rev. Addison Moore, for several years assistant pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, New York, and teacher of the Rockefeller Bible Class is to become minister of the Unitarian church, Schenectady, N. PARK AND DOWNS.

Rev. Wiliam B. Ayers at the Sunday morning service gave his hearers an informal talk from the 24th Chapter of St. Luke. The evening service was the third in the series on "The lessons of the War." The subject of this lecture was "The folly of strife." The text was found in Daniel 12:13. "Stand in thy lot." The speaker traced the causes of war through certain jealouscies and which came from the memory of old wars. He showed how one war bred and brought on another. He traced his tendency down from the very beginning of history, showing relationship which each great social struggle held to some conquest which went before. One of the strong violent passions of men is the passion for revenge: the desire to square acounts and punish wrong done to him. Any large social conquest is only a temporary triumph As soon as the enslaved people is strong enough they will arise and fight for the freedom for which all races yearn.

Another thing the races of the world have apparently settled into what uppears to be natural cradles for their races life. They ask to be let alone in these places. The nation that interferes with the liberty and life of another is laying up for itself a store of wrath which will sooner or later break forth in devouring torrents. This is the history of the World. When an enslaved race feel themselves just as good as their conquerors then they refuse longer to be tributaries. By the time they have won a few battles they believe themselves to be better than thir former masters. Then they in turn begin to conquer other people and the circle commences again.

The races of the world must learn to stand in their own environment, make the most of their own life and bend all their splendid energies to the work of peace. It is the business of Christianity to teach this great lesson.

It is not different amony individuals We are not placed for nothing in our places of opportunity and promises. We are inviting failure when we close our eyes to the great opportunity of character and helpful achievement in our own lot and seek to acquireq what rightfully belongs to others.

Let each nation and each man stand its own great social life and on his own God given manhood, and make the most of that with Gods help. The business of men and nations is not to acquire greater life by dishonesty and theft but by self development and mutual helpfulness and brotherhood. To keep my neighbor helps me.

Mr. Arthur F. Capen the tenor of the First congregational church at Manchester, N. H. again gave his his hearers some beautifully rendered solos, possessing as he does a remarkably fine voice These lectures already commence to test the seating capacity.

H. F. TILDEN WOULD ACCEPT

Spontaneous Movement in Favor of His Candidacy

When the committee of citizens waited upon ex-City Treasurer Henry F. Tilden last Tuesday evening, and urged him to allow the use of his name as a Republican candidate for Mayor at the coming municipal caucuses, he promised to give his final answer Saturday evening. Since the announcement that he was being urged to enter the contest, he has been besieged on all sides to consider the proposition favorably, yet he gave no intimation of what his answer would be.

Saturday evening however a dozen or more of the citizens, who were behind the movement called upon him at his summer home at Adams Shore, and after the situation had been reviewed, he announced that he would enter the caucuses. The announcement was received with pleasure, for the committee believe that he is the Moses which the city needs at the present time to lead it out darkness into the light.

Steps were immediately taken to form a campaign organization, which the gentlemen promise shall be the livelist the city has ever known. At the start Mr. Tilden said he wanted it understood that there should be no mud throwing, but that the campaign should be conducted in a clean manner, and that if he was nominated he wanted to be so on his merits. He also said that he should absolutely refuse to make any promises of any nature as to whom he should appoint in event of an election. This the committee agreed to, and the preliminary steps for the campaign were started by the election of Joseph L. Whiton as chairman.

Arrangements were made for a meeting of the committee for this evening to be held at Union hall to which a general invitation is extended to all who favor Mr. Tilden's candidacy to attend.

Immediately on leaving Mr. Tildens home party leaders in the different wards were reached, and the results were even more than were anticipated. Everywhere there seemed to be the feeling that the right man had been secured and that his nomination and election was assured.

Strong and large working committees have already been formed in Wards One, Two, Three, Four, and Six, while in Ward Five, the home ward of another candidate, a committee had also been formed with surprising activity, for the movement seems to be of a spontaneous nature. These committees will meet this evening at Union hall and a general invitation is extended to all who are favorable to Mr. Tilden's candidacy be present. A rally has also been arranged for Ward Six tonight at which the candidate will speak following the Union hall meeting.

PLUMBERS WILL NOW ENTERTAIN

The Carpenters won the base ball championship of the building trades by deefating the Plumbers at Merrymount Park Saturday afternoon 4 to 2. The losers will entertain them at a theatre party during the coming week. It was the second time the teams clashed, the Plumbers, dissatisfied with their first loss, having asked for another game. The score by innings:

Carpenters	0	1	3	0	0	0	0	0	x	—4

Batteries—Ericson and Saunders, Foster; Troupe and Tully.

EAST MILTON WINS.

The second game in the championship of Milton series was played Saturday at the Brook Road playground with a victory for the East Milton boys Each team has now won a game so the "rubber" game must be played to decide the championship. Everything went in favor of the winners in Saturday's game. "Ed" Palucci pitched an excellent game striking out 7 of the Mattapan team. The East Milton team got 12 hits to Mattapan's six.

The game started off in the first inning with two runs for East Milton. In the second Mattapan was able to procure two so the score was tied until the fifth inning, when Mattapan brought in their last two runs.

For three innings everything looked sort of black for East Milton since only one run was made. But there came the lucky eighth when four runs were added and the game won.

"Sid" Duggan and "Eddie" Hoyt each got three hits, the latter knocking out a three bagger. The fielding of "Frankie" Hoyt was very good and caused a lot of comment from the 150 fans present. Flynn, "Freckie" and "Eddie" Hoyt, and Stevens all come from Quincy, and brought a good crowd of fans along iwth them.

Next Saturday's game will be even more interesting as it will decide who gets the $100 purse. The game will be played at Cunnigham aPrk and all conditions point to a mighty close and interesting game. The score by innings at Saturday's game was as follows:

E. Milton	2	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	4	x—7

CHAMPIONSHIP IS UNDECIDED

The game between the Red Men and Div. 22, A. O. H., to decide the base ball amateur championship of the city, on the Ward Three playground Saturday afternoon, was called in the ninth inning on account of darkness with the score 6 to 6.

The Red Men led until the last inning when errors gave the Hibernians two runs. Hebert was taken out as Division twirler in the third, when he showed a tendency to aviate and Knight, formerly of the Fore Rivers, went in. He was touched for two hits. The score by innings:

Red Men	0	1	3	0	0	2	0	0	—6
Hibernians	0	0	2	0	0	0	0	0	2—6

Johnson and Moorehouse; Hebert and Knight, Duggan.

MILTON HIGH DEFEATED.

The Milton High School football team opened the season Saturday afternoon at Wellesley against the High School team of that town. Milton's "flukes" were very costly since they counted two touchdowns in favor of the opposing team who won by the score of 20 to 0. The game was very fast and full of life. The teams were a good match in size and weight, and had it not been ofr the penalties given to Milton team the score would in all probability have been different. Wellesley made three touchdowns in all and two points from goal kicks. "Red" Robertson for Milton did some excellent tackling and "Dutch" Reiser and Corbett did most of the work for the losers. The lineup for the Milton team was: qb,Reiser; rg, Parks rt, Robertson; re, White; lg, Adams; lt, Simpson, Crowell; le, Driscoll; c, Field; lb, Hecker; lhb, Luce, Sprague; rhb, Corbett.

MANY STILL ALARMS.

The Central station apparatus were kept busy Saturday and Sunday answering alarms. The first call came from Box 27 at 4.30 and was a slight fire on the roof of the old house on the corner of Washington and Canal streets owned by the Hardwick heirs.

At 5.30 Saturday afternoon a telephone call sent the auto chemical to extinguish a lively blaze among the pines bordering along the Adams estate near Merrymount park, but now owned by the State.

At 5.30 a call was received for a grass fire near the residence of ex-Mayor Russell A. Sears on Glendale road, and at 7.20 the auto was again called to the fire in the pines adjoining the Adams farm.

On Sunday the auto responded three time for a fire in these same pines, the first coming to 8 o'clock in the morning and the other calls coming at 2 o'clock and 5.20.

SALVATION ARMY LOSES

Court Says It Cannot Solicit Alms in City of Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 28.—The Salvation Army, which recently was forbidden to solicit alms in this city, lost its legal fight against the ruling of the municipal charities commission.

Judge Wood dissolved a temporary injuction to restrain the charities commission from enforcing its order, and denied the Salvation Army a permanent injunction to the same effect.

The ruling was the outcome of defiance of a local regulation which prescribes that all charity funds shall be used for the relief of the needy within the city of Los Angeles.

FOREIGNERS ARE BARRED

Senate Restricts Leases of Alaskan Coal Lands to Americans

Washington, Sept. 28.—A new bill for leasing government coal lands in Alaska passed the senate as a substitute for a similar bill recently passed by the house. It would restrict leases to Americans. It was pointed out that there was danger that foreign corporations might otherwise control much Alaskan territory.

The bill provides for the leasing by the federal government of coal lands in blocks of forty acres or multiples thereof, but in no case exceeding 2560 acres.

SURROUNDED BY CZAR'S TROOPS

Austria's Last Defense In Galicia Must Soon Fall

RUSSIANS REPORT SUCCESS

Defenders In Flight as Invaders Surround Big Eastern Fortress—Germany's Attempted Invasion of Russian Poland, With Capture of Warsaw as Objective, Is Frustrated

London, Sept. 28.—Important news of the crushing progress of the Russians reached here from Vienna by way of Rome. The greater part of the city of Przemysl, which the Austrians have been defending with enormous garrisons, has been occupied by the czar's troops, who have forced the enemy to take shelter in the eastern forts.

Austrians in flight before the invaders have been pouring into Przemysl for several days. These are now entirely surrounded. The bulk of the Russian army is advancing rapidly from Grodek on the eastern forts, while other forces are coming from the north. The troops already inside the city limits are preparing to press their attack from the south.

The capture of Przemysl with its garrison will mean that the Austrian army, making its last stand, is being consumed piecemeal, while the Russians in the meanwhile are gathering up an enormous amount of heavy guns, ammunition, stores and searchlights, which the defeated troops used in their desperate defense of the river San.

The Petrograd correspondent of The Daily Telegraph has forwarded the following semi-official statement:

The movement of German troops from East Prussia in the direction of Warsaw has come to nothing. In the government of Suwalki (Russian Poland) the Germans have suffered a serious repulse. The left flank of the Russian army has defeated the troops under the command of General von Hindenburg near Suwalki.

At the same time our troops won a complete victory at Mariampol, and the attacking Germans were thrown back ten miles across the river Scheschupa with a loss of many guns and prisoners. On the right flank at the Meimen river the battle ended in success for us at Sredniki, where a German attempt to cross the river was repulsed with great loss.

Another dispatch from the same capital presents the situation from another angle. It says:

A great and decisive battle is imminent on the borders of East Prussia. There is complete confidence in General Rennenkamp, who has had his own way, inasmuch as the fight when it comes is to be on ground chosen by him.

One army corps a day, carried in 250 trains on four available railways, is the rate at which Germany is reinforcing her army in East Prussia. To these must be added the troops which are being hurried from Berlin and Schneidemuhl down to Baltic ports for transport by sea.

Along the whole western line from near Memel in the north, to the frontier of the government of Kalisch, the armies are in touch, groping, by means of reconnaissances and minor collisions, at the facts of each other's strength and position.

It is known that to the eleven army corps already in East Prussia must now be added at least five more, of which three are reserves, and that further there is a secondary army on the Kalisch frontier whose function is to sever the German right. At least 800,000 German troops of all classes are gathered to try to balance the Austrian failures.

Mrs. Wakefield Serving Life Sentence For Killing Husband

New Haven, Sept. 28.—Mrs. Bessie J. Wakefield, sentenced to state prison for life after a second trial for the murder of her husband, has again appealed to the supreme court for a new trial. Her attorneys have filed twenty-two reasons why they claim she should have a new trial.

Mrs. Wakefield was accused of having been an accomplice of Henry Plew, who was found guilty of having killed Wakefield and who was hanged. Mrs. Wakefield has already spent two years in prison.

CARRANZA MUST QUIT OR FIGHT

Villa's Reply to Officials Who Criticised His Attitude

HE WOULD AVOID BLOODSHED

But Hostilities Can Only Be Avoided by "First Chief" Turning Over His Office to Calderon, Liberal Leader Mentioned Some Months Ago as Possibility For Presidency

Chihuahua City, Mex., Sept. 28.—Immediate resignation of General Carranza as first chief of the constitutionalists is the only basis on which General Villa will agree to settlement of the differences between himself and Carranza.

This was his reply to messages from officials in Mexico City, who protested against his attitude toward Carranza.

Villa declared he never would accept Carranza as head of the republic. Villa's reply, as given out in Chihuahua City, follows:

"I lament the circumstances that have brought about grave danger, but I sincerely protest that my sole ambition will be to arrance existing difficulties without shedding blood if possible.

"I emphatically state, however, that the only move that can bring about cessation of hostilities on my part is that Venustiano Carranza deliver supreme command to Fernando Iglesias Calderon, so that, in the shortest possible time, elections may be called. At the same time I declare I shall not accept Carranza as president or vice president, or president ad interim of the republic.

"I shall prove the rectitude of my intentions and the disinterestedness which animates the force of this division. Later the world will realize where rests true disinterestedness and where abortive ambitions."

Calderon, the choice of Villa for president of Mexico, some months ago was mentioned as a possiblity for the presidency during his trip to Washington, where he conferred with American officials. He is at present in Mexico City, it is said.

Calderon is leader of the Liberty party, a political organization which allied itself with the constitutionalists in the revolution. It has been announced that he would run at the elections.

While an answer to Villa's proposal is awaited from Mexico City, the northern leader has not halted his movement of troops toward the opposing Carranza forces.

It was declared by Villa officials that they had assurances that Zacatecas, a strategic place to the south of Chihuahua City, would be turned over to Villa's men without a fight.

It was learned that a Villa brigade was on its march into Sonora, the western border state, to assist Governor Maytorena in his attacks on the Carranza forces in that state. Another strong group of Villa men is moving into Cohuila, to the east.

GIRL PERHAPS DEAD

Three Arrests In Connection With Her Disappearance

Boston, Sept. 28.—As a result of arrests made here a Maine mystery more baffling than any of the myriads which have preceded it was uncovered.

A Presque Isle physician and two sisters are in custody, he charged with being the principal in the case and the girls with being accessories after the fact in the performance of a criminal operation on Mildred Sullivan, 17, of Houlton, Me., known as the prettiest girl in Aroostook county.

Dr. Lionel E. Dudley, 36; Miss Alice Pelletier, 22, and Miss Etta Pelletier, 24, all of Presque Isle, are prisoners. That Miss Sulivan is dead is the openly expressed fear of the Boston police.

Mrs. Wood was Ball's former sweetheart and she jilted him and married Wood a year ago. She was on her way from her father's farm when Ball confronted her in the road at 10 o'clock at night and shot her.

A Stagecoach Romance

It Contrasted With Travel In These Latter Days

By THOMAS R. DAWN

A gentleman riding in a luxurious parlor car on the Central Pacific railroad read a novel which appeared to bore him, closed it, yawned, cast a glance through the window, yawned again and was about to settle himself for a nap when a white bearded septuagenarian in the chair next to him said:

"Dull traveling nowadays, isn't it?"

The bored man looked at the other as much as to say, "I have no acquaintance with you, sir, and I don't wish any." Then he grunted an assent and was settling himself further for slumber when the old man continued:

"When I traveled as a youngster there was something to keep a fellow awake. At ten years of age I went from Pittsburgh across the Allegheny mountains, part way by stage, part way by canal and the rest on a snorting steamboat on a river. On that canalboat there wasn't any porcelain bowl to wash up as there is on this car. There were only a tin wash basin and a piece of bar soap, with a roller towel to wipe on. But there was something better than there is here.

"SHE HAD ME COVEERED."

There were two of the most eminent lecturers in the United States aboard, and one evening they both gave the passengers a talk."

The man who was obliged to take all this made a virtue of necessity and listened.

"I've crossed the prairies of Illinois in a stagecoach with a party the members of which had never seen one another before starting and before the end of the trip became friends for life. One man who had a stentorian voice said he never felt he had room enough to sing except when he was on what was then called the grand prairie of Illinois. We turned in, sitting straight up as we were, about 10 o'clock and were jarred from side to side and jolted up and down all night. But after the first night we slept well and were ready to crack jokes at one another in the morning. There were two matrimonial matches made on that trip. Curious, wasn't it? The parties had no acquaintance before."

A rough looking man not quite so old, sitting in a seat opposite, had been listening to this contrast between the old and new methods of travel and at this point spoke up:

"Mebbe you gents would like to hear one of them stagecoach romances."

The old man acquiesced. The other passenger looked as if he would like to call the conductor and have both men put off the train as nuisances.

"I don't look like a man as has had a romance, do I?" the third party went on. "I was better lookin' before a feller went gunnin' for me in the Alhambra gamblin' saloon at Cheyenne in 1868 and give me the scar. You talk about travelin' furder east in the forties and fifties. You didn't hev no sich places to stop as Cheyenne when it was the terminal of the U. P. And as for your canalboats, with lecturers on 'em, they couldn't 'a' been as lively as a stagecoach with road agents stoppin' the way and linin' up the passengers for their valuables. I was sittin' on the box with the driver of a coach one day—the inside was empty—when right out on the plain, where there wa'n't anything but cactus and gopher holes—not a tree or even a shrub to shade her—we come up with the purtiest gal I ever see walkin' in the hot sun. She looked awful tired and hot, and I suggested to the driver to take her up. He said if she wanted to ride she'd have to pay her fare. I asked her why she was walkin', and she said she hadn't no money; she'd run away from home on account of a stepmother and was tryin' to get to some civilized town where she could locate and make a livin'.

"The upshot of it was I agreed to pay her fare, and she got inside. The money wa'n't nothin' to me, seein' I'd just raked in some $3,000 at faro, and I didn't mind a little sum like that when a purty gal was concerned. The tears almost come into her eyes when she thanked me for doin' of it, and I wished I had some excuse to give her a lot more.

"Waal, after a spell I climbed down and got inside the coach. The old coachin' days in the east back in the forties might 'a' been sociable, but I reckon a feller seldom had a coach all to hisself with a purty gal. And mebbe there wa'n't nothin' to start a love affair on one o' them Illinois or Allegheny mounting rides. In my case there was a mighty big favor to start one. A gal as has jist been saved from walkin' on an alkali plain in the hot sun and transferred to the leather seat of a stagecoach is in a mighty good condition to be made love to by the man as done it.

"She told the pitifulest story of that stepmother o' hers I ever heered. It almost made me weep. I couldn't understand how the gal could 'a' stood it, or, rather, would 'a' stood it, seein' that she wa'n't no measly, bony little thing, but a real strappin', strong girl.

"Suddint it occurred to me that this was a good chance for me to reform and settle down. I tole the girl about myself and offered if she'd marry a galoot I'd quit gamblin', put the money I had in my pocket into stockin' a store and we'd be as happy as two turtledoves. She said it was awful suddint, but seein' she didn't know what on airth she was goin' to do—here she covered her face with her handkerchief and blubbered—she reckoned she'd better take up with me even if I was a stranger. I kissed her and promised to make her a good husband. Then she cried a leetle more and said such a generous man deserved a wife that would be kind to him and she'd devote the hull of her life to me.

"There's somepin I heered about 'a rulin' passion,' and I reckon I had one on 'em in them days. I got tired o' lovemakin', after awhile, jist as some married pursons want to come home and stop loafin' before the honeymoon has come to an end. Happenin' to put my hand in my coat pocket, I felt a pack of keerds and, takin' 'em out, asked the gal if she knowed any game. She said she'd never seen any keerds before. I allowed I'd teach her a leetle poker, and, she sittin' on the back seat and I on the front, we made a table o' the middle one. I loaned her some money to begin on.

"She was so stupid about it and played so bad, bettin' when she hadn't nothin' and layin' down a full hand, that I soon won all I'd lent her. She said if I'd try it ag'in she thort she could do better, so I loaned her some more money, and we went on with the game. This time she did better, although she was mighty stupid.

"'How much is one king wo'th?' she asked.

"'Nothin',' I answered.

"'Two kings?'

"'Not very much.'

"'Five kings?'

"'There ain't no sich thing.'

"'Well,' she said, 'I'm goin' to bluff this time.'

"I thort I'd show her that it didn't pay to tell she was goin' to bluff, and, havin' three aces, I went for her. After she'd exhausted what I'd loaned her she borryed some more and raised me and kep' borryin' and raisin' till there was a big pot on the table. When I thort I'd done enough to give her a good lesson I called her.

"D'ye know, that gal held four kings and cleaned me outen $400. I larfed and thort I'd show her how easy it would be to win it all back, and I started in. In an hour she had my pile in her bag.

"'My dear,' I said, 'seein' I tuck you into this yere coach out o' the broilin' sun and paid yer fare and considerin' that I lent you the fust stake, I reckon you'll not refuse to lend me somepin to start in with to get revenge?'

"'No,' she said, 'I better not. Seein' you're goin' to be my husband and I've got to reform you, I'd better hold on to any cash that comes into my hands. Your passion for gamblin' mought git the better o' yer in spite o' all yer good resolutions.'

"I don't like to spile yer idee o' this yer stagecoach romance by tellin' the rest o' it, 'cause it degenerated from a love affair to a draw, not a draw in a game o' poker, but a draw after a game o' poker, the difference bein' that the article drawed wasn't a keerd, but a weepon. I was so gol darned disgusted with the gal that I tole her I wouldn't trouble her to keep my cash as my sweetheart or my wife nuther and she could jist turn over the winnin's.

"She answered that the days when wimmen knuckled down to men was over and she proposed to stand for her rights. With that she tuk her hand from under a jacket she wore, and before I could say Jack Robinson she had me covered.

"'Up with yer hands, y' measly galoot,' she hollered, 'or I'll bore a hole through that stupid skull o' yours.'

"Somehow her voice didn't sound so soft as before—fact is, it sounded like a man's.

"'Who be you, anyway?' I asked.

"'Jimmie the Kid.'

"My brain become illuminated suddint. Jimmie the Kid was a desperado with a face and voice as soft as a gal's. He had lots o' ways o' doin' strangers, but his favorite one was the gal racket. I knowed that my money was gone and if I give the feller any sass I'd go up too.

"'I reckon you kin walk the rest o' the way,' he said. 'Walkin' was good enough fer me, and it's good enough fer my husband that is to be. Seein' the wimmen is gettin' the upper hand, I've calculated to be one of 'em myself.'

"Openin' the door, he told me to git, and I got."

PROHIBITION

sired to make a patriotic suggestion, and with that he took from his pocket a silk American flag, which he said he carried with him all over the country. This he spread over the speaker's desk. He told of his first sight of this flag and the awful carnage of war. Today we have again heard the bugle call to fight, but not for any sectional cause but to rally against a national sin. We are here to establish under this flag the greatest moral emancipation the world has ever seen since the birth of Christ.

He spoke of the work that had already been accomplished by the National league, and of the movement that was now sweeping over the country, speaking especially of what had been accomplished during the past year. He then spoke of the petition that had been presented to Congress known as the Sheppard-Hobson resolution for National constitutional prohibition, which provided ratification by the several states.

In connection with this he spoke of the foundation stones of hope which the movement stood upon. First, the manifest presence of a God to see this thing through. Then the co-operation of the women in the use of the ballot. In the building up of christian and moral forces of the country to see the thing through. God has heard and blessed our prayer during the past 21 years and will continue to do so.

Dr. Russell spoke of the conditions in Ohio before the adoption of the movement which drove the distilleries breweries and saloons from the state. It was a long fight but God blessed our cause and victory came after nine years of warfare.

He spoke of the organization of the campaign, and of the large printing bureau that was being maintained and was kept busy getting out the temperance literature, and the need of more printing establishments and of the amounts of money that were being expended to keep up the fight.

He went into detail on the financial end of the question and made an appeal for funds. Cards were passed among the audience and they were asked to contribute so much a month for five years, and also to contribute anything they chose in cash toward the movement. He also spoke of the yellow cards placed in every seat, by which the signer agreed, when called upon to write to his congressman, urging him to vote and work for National constitutional prohibition.

After giving the audience time to fill out the cards they were collected by the ushers, and the meeting closed with the audience rising and joining in singing "America."

THE MARKET BASKET.

These are sad days for the family market basket.

Many events seem to have conspired to bring about higher prices, and the careful housewife must be wide awake to make ends meet.

She cannot afford to purchase haphazard.

She must have the best available information of products and prices.

In these days the advertising columns of a live newspaper like the Daily Ledger are immensely valuable.

They are the public market place. They keep a woman informed ta to the greatest purchasing power of her dollar.

The woman who uses newspaper advertising for her guide is more apt to get 100 cents plus for her dollar than her neighbor who shops haphazard.

COLDEST DAY SINCE MAY

Lower Than Any Noon Temperature in September 1913

The temperature at noon today was 56 degrees which is the lowest point it has reached at noon since May 13 when it registered 43 degrees. It is also two degrees lower than the coldest day at noon in September 1913, which was on the 19th, and it is as cold as the coldest day in October 1913. The cold wave began to be felt Saturday night, and while Sunday was an ideal day it began to get cool in the late afternoon and by sunset it was cool enough to make fires in the home feel comfortable. What made the late Sunday afternoon feel more uncomfortable was the high wind which prevailed. This morning the air continued cold, and there was considerable wind. It warmed up a little along toward noon. The predictions are that Tuesday and Wednesday will be considerably warmer.

RECEPTION AT TROY GRAND

One of the most brilliant receptions given the delegates to the Waterways convention, which included representatives of the Quincy Board of Trade was that of the citizens of Troy, N. Y. A river pageant in their honor consumed a great part of the day, after which there was a general inspection of the city's development. The women of Troy took charge of the visiting ladies and personally conducted them in a tour about the city.

The guests were transferred from the Berkshire to the Rennselaer at Albany, because the former was too large to be safely navigated to the flourishing city.

The Quincy delegates, Jonathan S. Swingle, Joseph A. Sedgwick and Frank Fessenden Crane have arrived home and say that they knew Troy did things, but they never looked for the reception accorded the party. It was beyond all expectation.

Special Officer Charles Nelson, aged 30, of 71 Hancock street is believed to be dying at the Boston City Hospital as a result of being set upon and beaten by a crowd of young men as he was waiting for a car in Neponset after midnight Sunday morning. It was reported at the hospital this morning that he is on the dangerous list but is fairly comfortable. Nelson was suddenly attacked while he was waiting for a Quincy car. The members circled around him and without warning knocked him down and beat and kicked him severely, causing a fracture of the skull and internal injuries. They ran before any officer could interfere. Nelson is thought to have incurred their enmity while doing police work in this city, and that they took advantage of his being alone and attempted to settle old scores is beyond doubt. The Dorchester police are at work on the case and expect to make arrests today.

Here's Where We Stand In Regard to Keeping This Town a Clean Place to Live In!

PUBLICITY is the one sure cure for IMMORALITY.

VICE CANNOT THRIVE WHEN THE SPOT LIGHT IS THROWN ON IT.

THE HOME NEWSPAPER does more to preserve the morals of a community than any other single factor.

A HABITUAL ATTENDANT IN THE COURTS FEARS PUBLICITY MORE THAN THE POSSIBILITY OF BEING FINED. PUBLICITY IS THE PREVENTIVE OF VICE.

This HOME NEWSPAPER should receive the unalloyed support of every citizen who is anxious to uplift the morals of our community.

This newspaper works hand in hand with the churches in all worthy efforts to make this community a better place. It supports all movements tending to improve conditions.

The churches, the citizens and the press should co-operate in making this a clean town in which to live, in which to bring up our children.

Every one should read this newspaper. Every one should assist in ridding the town of all forms of immorality.

It would be easy to open a gambling den on the principal street of the town were it not for the publicity that would be accorded such an undertaking. Illicit selling of intoxicating liquors would be easy were it not for publicity. Other nauseous forms of vice would thrive were it not for fear of publicity.

YOU CAN HELP MAKE THIS A BETTER PLACE IN WHICH TO LIVE, A FAR BETTER HOME FOR OUR CHILDREN, BY CORDIAL CO-OPERATION WITH THIS NEWSPAPER. YOU CAN POINT OUT WHERE VICE EXISTS. THIS NEWSPAPER WILL FOCUS PUBLIC ATTENTION TOWARD EVIL SURROUNDINGS. PUBLIC SENTIMENT WILL THEN BE AROUSED. NO INSTITUTION IS STRONG ENOUGH TO OVERCOME PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

FALL MEETING AT BETHANY CHURCH

Congregational Churches of Norfolk County Largely Represented Here Today

Entertained at Noon at Dinner by the Ladies

The ninety-fifth fall meeting of the Norfolk association of Congregational churches is being held today at Bethany church, Quincy, and the pleasant fall day has resulted in an unusually large attendance of pastors and delegates from the different churches. Although it is a conference of Norfolk county churches, pastors of some churches outside of the county were noticed among those present, who numbered between 250 and 200 at the morning session. Each church in the county was expected to be represented by its pastor and four delegates and the response was most general.

The morning session opened at 9.45 with devotional exercises which were conducted by Rev. Albert P. Watson of Weymouth. This was followed of organization and a business session. In the absence of Rev. Granville Yager of Braintree, the moderator, Rev. Mr. Watson was elected as moderator of the session. The records of the last session held at Gardner were read by the assistant scribe and reports were received from various standing committees.

The moderator then appointed the conference committees on business, resolutions, registration, place of next meeting, and nominations for the annual meeting.

The first address of the morning was made by Rev. J. C. Archer, assistant pastor of the Brockton church, whose subject was Mohammedanism. Commerce, war and missionary activity, said the speaker, has brought people into intimate contact, and the question is which is the true religion. The speaker compared the two faiths, and spoke of the ethics of the Mohammedan religion as compared with the ethics of the Christian religion.

We can not sit unconcerned in the great religious battle now going on, the greatest in the worlds history. We should take the attitude of masters, be sympathetic and appreciative. We should study the question and get familiar with it, so that we may get some idea of the christianity which is now forcing its way into the countries of Mohammedanism.

The address of Rev. Mr. Archer was followed by a hymn by the congregation. Rev. George W. Owen spoke on "Some plans for the fall campaign" which was followed by "The biggest thing my church plans to do this fall."

Under this number the conference roll was called and each church was allowed three minutes in which to make reports, and in accordance with the suggestion the most of these reports were made by the laymen of the churches represented.

At 12 o'clock noon there was a short social period after which an adjournment was made for the noon recess, during which time a lunch was served in the dining room by the ladies of Bethany church.

The afternoon session convened at 1.30, and opened with a devotional exercise conducted by Rev. Henry C. Alvord of South Weymouth, this was followed by a short business session at which reports were received from the committees appointed at the morning session.

The address for the afternoon will be by Rev. James L. Barton, D. D. whose subject is "The relation of the war to missions." This will be followed by an offering for association expenses and congregation singing.

At 2.45 a communion sermon will be delivered by Rev. James N. Pierce, and followed at 3.10 by the Lord's supper conducted by Rev. Almon J. Dyer with Albert V. House, presiding. The conference adjourns at 3.30.

NEW COMMANDER OF KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

John Morgan Installed at the Head of Quincy Commandery, 250 Swords

Acting Grand Warder Fay Installs His Son

It was a pretty mark of friendship which Rt. Em. Sir William H. H. Soule, past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, conferred upon Em. Sir Albert W. Fay, who was acting as grand warder, at the installation of the newly elected officers of Quincy commandery, Knights Templar, Monday evening, when he temporarily resigned the office of grand commander to Em. Sir Fay, that he might have the honor of inducting into the office of Warder of Quincy commandery his son, Sir Waldo B. Way.

In accepting this high honor Em. Sir Fay expressed his appreciation and his sincere thanks for the honor that had thus been conferred upon him. It was also a signal honor which Sir John Morgan enjoyed when a Mason of such high standing as Rt. Em. Soule consented to represent the Grand Commander as installing officer.

At the business session which preceeded the installation, reports of the treasurer, recorder, and trustees were received. These showed that the commandry now numbered 250 swords, and that its finances were in the best of condition.

Following the installation ceremony Rt. Em. Soule spoke briefly of warm receptions that had always been accorded him when he visited Quincy commandery, and that when he had been requested to install its officers, his love for Quincy commandery would not allow him to refuse. He said that he had now reached an age when he thought it about time he retired and he assured the sir knights that this was the last year that he should take an active part in installations.

In reply Em. Sir Morgan expressed his sincere thanks to the Right Eminent, and also, to the sir knights of Quincy commandery for the honor which they had conferred upon him, and asked their co-operation. He then presented to the Right Eminent a hansome bouquet of roses, and immediately after presented a similar bouquet to Em. Sir. Fay, to whom he

KINGS DAUGHTERS TO PRINT PAPER

Unity Circle, Kings Daughters, the leading charitable organization of the city, is in need of funds to carry on its grand work which is non-sectarian and city wide. It is the largest circle in New England, and has contributed to many of its charitable institutions as well as the needy poor of the city. The Pond Home at Pondville for aged men and women is a monument to the Kings Daughters of Norfolk County, and the Quincy circles have been among its most liberal supporters. The Day Nursery, Visiting Nurse, and Associated Charities have all been helped materially by Unity circle, and when the Overseer of the Poor needs assistance he knows just whom to call upon.

The circle has adopted a novel plan to raise funds this season, and early in November will issue a mammoth edition of the Daily Ledger. Probably 5,000 copies will be printed and the edition will number 12 or 18 pages, possibly more. Favorable action was taken at a meeting Monday evening, and editors, business manager, reporters, circulation manager, artists news girls, etc., will be selected this week. Mrs. Victor E. Miller is leader of the circle and all the members are enthusiastic over their undertaking. But they are equal to anything, and are sure to make the Kings Daughters' edition of the Daily Ledger a grand success. The regular staff of the Ledger is pleased because they will have a holiday.

THE FAST WRITING FAD.

The teaching of penmanship in the public schools has seen many vicissitudes. Fads, ideas, and theories have their rise and fall. Years ago there was the old fashioned copy book style, with writing inclined at a considerable angle. Then vertical writing became very common. It produced a very legible hand, but it was generally condemned as too slow. Then there came other systems and methods, more or less practical.

One of the more pervasive of the modern theories is that children have been writing too slowly. It is argued that old time writing was practically "drawing."

As a consequence, in many schools the teachers insist that pupils write on a time schedule. They are not encouraged to form their letters slowly ,securing legibility before they attempt speed.

Yet in all other kinds of work done with the hands, muscular control has to come before speed. The student of music must learn to play a passage correctly before he can play it up to time. It is to be feared that this insistence on speed is developing thousands of poor writers, who feel that quantity rather than quality is the end in view.

Speed writing is not as desirable as it was a few years ago. The very wide use of the typewriter has greatly reduced the amount of hand work to be done. The business man needs legibility first, so that when he makes memoranda they shall be legible to himself and others.

Of course book-keepers still need speed. But probably not one person in a hundred becomes a book-keeper. Is it wise to train every one to most the needs of a small class? Should a pupil ever be encouraged to speed up, until he has acquired the habit of clear, plain writing? It will not seem so to sensible people.

THE COUNTY FAIRS.

The politicians long ago learned the educational value of county fairs. Their addresses on these occasions, sandwiched in between horse trots, were too brief to give the people any education in statecraft. But fitted out with their most democratic manners, inured to a day of handshaking, they annexed the popular heart, and went home plus a bag of votes.

It was not until many years after that that people who are seeking to increase agricultural production learned how good an opportunity the county fair gives them. Of course as an exhibition of good farm stock and produce, these shows have always served a real use. A fellow gifted with ambition and industry could alway get recognition for handsome vegetables or fat cattle.

But the public looked at these contests as merely a scramble for money prizes. It admired the handsome cattle, without learning much how they were to be duplicated. After a few moments looking at the prize stock, every one proceeded to complete his course of agricultural study by applauding the horse trots from the grand stand.

The county fairs are the one event of the year that assemble thousands of real farmers. It is no gentleman agriculturist type of affair. Here are the men that dig and delve and reap, out for a frolic may be, yet with an active eye to the main chance also. It is a big opportunity to disseminate interest in scientific farming.

Give a good practical agricultural school teacher a tent, fit him out with sample ears of corn showing how much improvement can be made by using fertilizers and treatment fitted to soil, and you have a proposition that will interest the every day farmer. He will quit the grand stand to hear such a fellow talk. Much of this kind of work is already being done. Much more could be done. Every county fair and cattle show should be a little extension school, with demonstration of real results attained by actual farmers.

GERMANS FIGHT BRAVELY UPON THE DEFENSIVE

Fail to Repeat Smashing Success of Last Week, Though Repeatedly Dashing Upon Strong Positions of Allies—Forced to Give Way Slowly but Surely—Fighting of Past Four Days of Unprecedented Violence—Allies Use Axes and Picks as Well as Rifles In Getting Through Invaders' Barricades—Advance of German Left Wing Upon Frontier Forts Thwarted—Vicious Fighting Continues In Centre

London, Sept. 29.—Marked by the bitterest fighting ever known, the allies have been steadily pressing back the German right wing.

The resistance has been desperate, for the German generals, convinced that they must win this battle or yield their mastery over northern France, have not only battled bravely upon the defensive, but again and again have dashed upon the strong positions of the British and French.

But nowhere have they repeated the smashing success that they gained last week south of Noyon. Every attack has been foiled. The allies, however, have continued to make substantial gains which have weakened the control of the communications through Belgium by which the mighty armies of Generals von Boehm, von Kluck and von Buelow are armed and fed.

The gains, although described as substantial by many French officials, are naturally not to be measured in miles. With the trenches so close that a golf ball could easily be driven from the British lines over the heads of the enemy in their trenches, long advances are impossible.

Hammer Strokes Are Telling

But here and there the hammer strokes have told. Slowly but relentlessy the invading force has been forced to give way. So critical is the struggle, however, that the official and unofficial dispatches from Paris and the front contain almost no mention of localities. These, if written in the original messages, do not get beyond the merciless scrutiny of the censors, the same officials who so ruthlessly cut out the names of towns and cities when the battle of the Marne was nearing its closing stages.

Despite the terrible havoc in the German armies sustained throughout Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the men have been driven against the allied lines as furiously as ever.

From Bapaune, much nearer to the Belgian boundary than to Paris, as far as the Argonne forest in northeastern France, the counter assaults have become so frequent that the French and British no longer experience strange emotions when they see a mass of gray-clad figures climb out of their entrenchments and dash forward.

A Terrible Conflict

At the extreme end of the turning movement, where are concentrated the French colonial infantry, the native African troops and the newest British army, the men have had four days of more violent fighting than generally falls to the lot of troops in months of warfare.

In four days they have been under fire so incessantly that the least trained soldier in the ranks is already a veteran, unaffected by the shriek of shells that tear over and into the trenches, unperturbed by the moans of the wounded and the stark bodies of the dead.

The Germans have proven themselves better fighters on the defensive than they were on the offensive. They were courageous and untiring in their dash upon Paris, but they showed little ingenuity. But on the defensive, since their remarkable rally after that retreat that so closely approached a rout, they have displayed extraordinary ability in choosing positions and especially in fortifying them under fire and constant pressure.

Barricades Are Pierced

Their lines, whenever captured, reveal that they have left nothing undone to hold back the bitter assaults of the French and British troops. Trenches and earthworks are almost the least part of their defensive fortifications. Everywhere they have woven tremendous barricades, with miles upon miles of barbed wire and thousands of iron bars which are interwoven with standing and felled trees. These are commanded by great batteries of rapid-fire guns as well as by heavy artillery.

But somehow, although the troops themselves are often at a loss to understand how they could have penetrated these barriers, the British and French soldiers have fought their way through, with axes and picks as well as with rifles.

It is believed that the Germans will now make their last desperate effort to resume the offensive. If their attacks fail, and the allied lines are prepared for the most violent fighting, it is not thought that the invaders on the right wing will again be able to deliver assaults with such vigor as in the last few days. Their losses have been so severe and their attacks so unsuccessful that the fighting spirits of the men will prove unable to continue the terrible charges into the face of almost certain death for thousands.

Reinforcing Allies' Ranks

Feeling that the German advance along the Meuse line has been checked, the French and British reinforcements have been hurried by thousands into the depleted ranks of the left wing which is bending back the German right.

Rumors are heard that the allies have been unable to get a foothold in St. Quentin, but that they are seriously menacing Cambrai, believed to be the headquarters of General von Boehm, who brought down troops from Belgium to aid von Kluck. If a sharp and decisive advance can be made into Cambrai, the German right wing will be in even a more perilous plight than at present. Von Boehm's army will be driven northward into Belgium and von Kluck s will have to race eastward at tremendous speed to escape the attacks that will be delivered from north and south.

Frontier Forts Saved

The German advance against the frontier forts from Verdun to Toul, which threatened on Saturday to wreck the operations against the German right wing, has seemingly been thwarted by the readiness with which the French generals hastened reinforcements to this district and by the swift movements of the army of Toul, which has hitherto distinguished itself by its sorties in the direction of Nancy.

The German wireless messages report that the forts south of Verdun are still under bombardment, but apparently no others have fallen except Camp des Romains, on the eastern bank of the Meuse, captured on Saturday. The French official statements indicate that they have been able to make some advances along the heights of the Meuse. If any Germans remain across the river they must be few in numbers and concentrated near St. Mihiel, the only place where crossings have been held.

In the Woevre district, not far from the frontier forts, practically all operations have been held up by a thick fog which hangs low over valleys and rivers.

Vicious Fighting In Centre

In the centre the fighting has at some places been as vicious as that against the German right wing. Particularly was this true of the frantic attacks made by the Prussian Guard, which is rumored to have suffered terribly in Monday's battling.

It is reported that two entire German battalions have been all but destroyed, that some companies have lost over half their troops and that the officers have been so conspicuously leaders that only the merest few have escaped either death or serious wounds.

Despite the stories sent out that the crown prince's army was virtually destroyed in the battle of the Marne, persistent reports are heard that this force was able to make some advance, the only one made and held by the invaders during Monday. Wireless messages from Berlin state that this German army has driven the French back upon Clermont-en-Aire and St. Menehould.

The setback for the allies is not yet admitted by the French war office. Even if it proves true, it can hardly be of great importance until Clermont and St. Menehould are taken.

Should these towns fall, the Germans will have cut off the principal railroad to Verdun from the west. They would be in a position to sweep down from the rear upon the Verdun-Toul lines and would have little difficulty in isolating Verdun from the French lines.

But the French generals are preparing to hold Clermont and St. Menehould at all cost and they have a great advantage in the many hours that have elapsed since it became evident that the German assault upon the Meuse forts was not a mere feint, but a frantic effort to batter down the fortifications, to shorten the approach into France and to withdraw the tremendous pressure exerted upon the German right.

SEA LOSS FROM WAR

Germany's Shown to Be Much Larger Than That of England

Emphasizing the heavy losses to German commerce resulting from the war as contrasted with the comparatively minor losses to England, the British official war bureau issued a lengthy statement dealing with the subject.

Up to Sept. 23 there had been sunk on the high seas by German warships and converted cruisers, 12; there had been sunk by mines in the North sea 15 British and neutral merchantmen and 22 fishing boats. There were detained in German ports 74, the total British tonnage being 229,000.

On the German side there were detained in British ports at the outbreak of the war 102; captured since then, 88. Of the German vessels capable of being armed as auxiliary cruisers there are in United States ports 15, and of those captured by the allies that could have been used for the same purpose there are 163. The total German tonnage lost to Germany is 1,140,000.

ITALY WILL FIGHT SOON

Austria Massing Troops For Expected Conflict on Border

Despite the official denials by Austria, it is positively known that the forces on the Italian frontier are being reinforced.

All of the regiments made up of troops of Italian birth from the frontier itself, where Italian sympathy is strong, have been transferred to the battle line in Galicia. Their places have been taken by Hungarian regiments and those from the Russian frontier, who, because of pro-Slavic sympathies, are not to be depended upon to fight whole-heartedly with the Russians.

While there is no change in the official Italian attitude, there is little doubt anywhere that the date for Italy to enter the war is rapidly approaching.

MILTON HIGH ON PICNIC

Seniors Have Outing at Glen Echo Park

The fire apparatus was called out Saturday afternoon to the home of Mr. Holden on Randolph avenue. The fire was in the ell of the house and destroyed this part of the building completely. The cause of the fire was due to spontaneous combustion caused by a pile of rags in one corner. The Holden family were away from home so the fire made considerable headway before seen by a neighbor.

Miss Florence Marchant and Miss Ethel Keepe, both of East Milton have entered Radcliffe College for their junior year.

Miss Edith C. Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Johnson of Washington street, has entered Radcliff College. Miss Johnson was graduated from the four years course at the Bridgewater Normal school last June and is to enter the Junior class at Radcliffe.

Miss Eleanor Claire of Framingham Normal school, spent the week end at her home on Huntington road.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hamlin of Granite avenue have returned from a trip to Intervale in the White Mountains, N. H.

The Misses Alma Jardine Josephine Rogers and Gladys Carter all of East Milton spent the week end with the Misses Rogers' parents at Waveland, Nantasket.

Sunday was observed as "rally day" in the First Baptist church. In the morning the pastor Rev. J. Hamilton Woodsam, preached on "Everyday aspiration." The Sunday school met at 12M. with 142 present. A roll-call of the classes was held and George Tocher's class had the largest attendance in percentage, 90. The pastor gave a brief adress on "The call of rally day." The C. E. society held no service on account of the concert at 7 P. M. The rally day concert was given by members of the Sunday school and there was a large attendance. The program consisted of songs and recitations by the pupils.

Rev. MacVey of Mansfield occupied the pulpit at the East Congregational church Sunday morning. His topic was: "The War in Europe."

A very enjoyable picnic was held Saturday by members of the Senior class of the High School at Glen Echo Park, Stoughton. There were fifteen in the party altogether but the boys were conspicuous by their absence as there were only three present. The reason for this "misfortune" was due to the fact that several boys in the class played in the foot ball game at Wellesley. The fellows that did go walked from Milton over to the park, a distance of about nine miles and got there about a half an hour before the arrival of the rest of the party. Even though everything at the park was closed up and there was no boating nor bathing everyone had a fine time. Everyone arrived at the park about 12M. so the first "duty" attended to was the "eats." After this "task" was completed in a very favorable manner, games and story telling were enjoyed until 4 P. M. when the party left for home. Miss Adelaide Swift, Mt. Holyoke College '13, acted as chaperone and Miss Belcher and Miss Forde were the honored guests. The other members of the party were: Eleanor Bradlee, Mary White, Alice Thompson, Josephine Rice, Bena Erhard, Marion Hathaway, Hazel Pond, Edith Swift, Irene Maxwell, Kenneth D. Johnson, Milton Tucker and J. Randall Pratt.

ACCIDENT.

Charles Mills of Middleboro, while operating a motor cycle in City Square Sunday afternoon was thrown to the street when his machine collided with an automobile. He escaped uninjured but his machine was wrecked. The auto was owned and operated by John M. Ross of 27 Chauncy street, Brighton. Mrs. Ross who was a passenger was cut by flying glass and was slightly shaken up. She was treated by Dr. Diehl.

JOHN S. SUTHERLAND.

John S, Sutherland, a retired business man of Brighton and father of Mrs. Herman L. Keene of Francis court, Quincy, died at his home on Murdock street Saturday afternoon after a long illness aged 72 years. Mr. Sutherland was for many years engaged in the contracting business and during his business career built the foundations for many of Boston's largest buildings. He is survived by a widow and six daughters.

The General says:

When we began our career in the manufacture of roofing, we were only a modest little organization in a big competitive field. Today we manufacture a much greater quantity of ready-to-lay roofings and a much greater tonnage of building papers than any competitor in the world. This remarkable growth is the result of the universal satisfaction given by Certain-teed Roofing is guaranteed 5 years for 1-ply, 10 years for 2-ply, and 15 years for 3-ply, and this guarantee is backed by the assets of our three big mills.

COMPETITION.

The Kind That Wins.

In fair competition lies the true sport of good business. There is no calling, no profession, or occupation, equal to it for absorbing interest and endless succession of exciting incident. But it should be that kind of a healthy competition and friendly rivalry that does not strain neighborly relations. On the contrary, it should tend to bring those men together who are engaged in a similar business for the purpose of free discussion and publicity of opinion.

Unfortunately, this does not often occur. Men engaged in a like business sometimes get too friendly, combine their interests, and form a combination, contrary to the laws of the realm.

Others enter into a bitter personal conflict with each other, endeavoring with might and main to throw ignominy upon and disrespect for the house of their competitors and their goods.

The intensity of the competitive struggle is subject to a great deal of variation. At times it may be characterized as cut-throat, where the slashing of prices has for its object the elimination of one or more of the contestants. Each competitor is confronted by the ever-present threat that if his service is poor, or the quality of his goods is not up to the standard, some other house of business will outstrip him. But the house that considers service, high quality and no more than a fair profit as the paramount factors in business, is the one that in the long run is sure to win.

Certain-teed Roofing is the highest quality possible to make. It is for sale by dealers everywhere at reasonable prices.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

The sermon Sunday morning was one of power and gave many strong lessons from God's word. The pastor, Rev. Joseph Walther, spoke on "God's complaints against Israel." These complaints are all registered in the Book of Malachi, the last book in the Old Testament written 400 years before the birth of Christ. God had been wonderfully good to Israel. Rescued and saved the people from Egypt's bondage, led them through the Red Sea, guided them through the Wilderness, fed and furnished them all that was necessary through a period of 40 years. Given a land that was provided with generals, leaders, judges, kings, and prophets. So that there was no people like God's people.

Now what was the attitude of the people in view of all this? God's was an unappreciated and unrequited love. We see this in husbands toward wives; wives towards husbands; children toward parents; friend toward friend, men and women toward God.

The Lord God has revealed himself not only as a God of love but as a jealous God. He wants our first and best and holiest service. The following verses given as a contrast, Psalm 86: 7—8 How excellent is thy loving kindness oh God. Therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of Thy wings;" and in Pauls words "The love of Christ constraineth me." to surender, to obey to sacrifice; to serve.

There is great danger in these days of failure, to honor and revenence God, by offering him unworthy sacrifice and unworthy gifts; only offering selfish an d mercenary service and complaining at that; even getting weary and indifferent at what we should do lovingly and willingly; robbing God of time, money, strength and service, by not trusting in his promise; believing with all the heart his warnings and promises, and giving him the very best we have.

Given below is God's promise to them that fear him, Malachi 3: 16—17 —"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them, at a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

The prayer of the morning brought much comfort to many as it carried with it a loving thought for burdened hearts.

The Sunday School is growing, as there were six new members added at the noon session. We feel that this is encouraging as from time to time there is a new enrollment.

The Juniors had a most interesting topic to talk upon "How can we cause others to like us." Mrs. Joseph Walther had charge.

Harold B. Thomas had charge of Y. P. S. C. E. meeting. The subject being, "How every Christian can be a missionary." Mr. Thomas was just the right one to lead a meeting of this kind.

Union service was held in the auditorium at 7.45 in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition. Rev. M. J. Swearingen of Delaware was the speaker of the evening. Music was rendered by the chorus choir. All the services of the day were well attended.

The annual business meeting and supper of the Rand class will be held Wednesday. Rev. C. C. Tilley of the Calvary Baptist church of Quincy will speak to the young men. All young men interested in the Rand class are cordially invited.

Thursday evening, at 7.45, the monthly Covenant meeting of the church will be held in the chapel. Subject; "What we believe about the church." Come and help make this the best meeting yet. All strangers are welcome.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

At the Sunday morning service the pastor gave a special sermon to young people, it being Rally day. He took Dr. Cabot's four points as he presents them in his new book, "What men live by," and emphasized them. These four essentials to true living are: Work, Play, Love and Religion.

Dr. Sneath gave his own convictions upon these four essentials as life's ideals. He urged young people to determine a successful career for themselves in life; but to learn the first lesson, viz that unremitting toil is necessary to success. The lazy rich and the lazy poor never succeed. He believed that life should seek some diversions for the welfare of the body and relief of the mind. He urged young people to play fair and to strive to be good losers.

He believed every young person should seek a companion to love through life and for whom to sacrifice. Love builds up, while selfishness destroys. Every young person should strive to live the Christian life. There is a duty we owe to God which we dare not neglect. God will bless the life that honors him.

Mrs. Bessie D. Ducey led a very interesting missionary meeting at 6 o'clock, in connection with the Y. P. S. C. E.

The topic at the mid-week service on Thursday evening will be "The peace of God; What it is and what it does."

ATLANTIC METHODIST.

The pastor preached Sunday from 1 Sam. 14—6," An unparalled feat in war." It was a graphic discription of the heroism of Jonathan and his armor bearer. The speaker said, The text is but a challenge for us as a Christian Nation to Christianize the whole world. A challenge for the 20 millions of Christians of the United States to evangelize 100 million. It was a challenge for 400 Christians of Atlantic to convert 4000 non church goers. The text furthermore was significant of faith in God. It was a venture on God's power. Nothing is accomplished in the world without a venture. Martin Luther made a venture when he nailed his 99 theses on the doors of his church. By the venture the Reformation was the result. John Wesley ventured and a great church was launched that today numbers eight millions. William Butler went to India in 1856 and ventured to plant a mission; as a result Methodism has six Conferences and thousands of communicants. Pilmare and Boardman, English missionaries, ventured to cross the Atlantic and preach the gospel in the wilds of America; today we have American Methodism. Will not Atlantic Methodism venture on the same God?

In the evening sermon the speaker took up the same text, and dwelt upon this clause,—"He is unrestrained." He lacks not in wisdom; possessed all wealth." Here an inventory of God's wealth was given; as seen here on this globe; as seen in the 100 million worlds above us; and the Gold of the Celestial City. He can battle with few as well as many, but the most encouraging feature is that He is a God of Power. Great generals have had numbers and wealth, but lacked in Power. Herein is the success of Christianity. Our God endures with power. He commands his followers to tarry till power descends. A powerless church, a powerless Christian, is a misnomer. He can save by few as by many.

PLEADS GUILTY TO ARSON

How John Swenson of North Weymouth, formerly of this city, set fire to the three story tenement house at 113 Kendrick avenue after midnight on Sept. 22, for revenge and thereby endangered the lives of the members of four families, two young children and two infants, was aired in the District Court this morning when he pleaded guilty to a charge of arson and was held for the Grand Jury with bail set at $1000.

The fire was discovered at 1 o'clock by occupants of the house who were attracted by the brilliant illumination They promptly extinguished it and notified the police, who carefully guarded the details while they searched for the man who applied the torch.

The house is owned by Christian Tallekson, who lived on the second floor with his family consisting of a wife and child. The first floor was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. James Leary, and their infant, and the third floor by Mr. and Mrs. James Lackie and two children, one an infant.

The owner of the property is a foreman in the asbestos shop at the Fore River shipyard, and Swenson had been in his employ until two weeks ago when he was laid off because of the scarcity of work. This furnished Inspector Goodhue a clue and after a weeks investigation he arrested Swenson and obtained a confession in the presence of the owner of the house, Capt. Daniel R. McKay of the policedepartment and others.

Swenson in pleading guilty this morning, caused some suprise since he had intimated that although he had confessed he intended to fight the charge.

Chief Engineer Faxon Billings of the Fire department, who inspected the fire on the morning of Sept. 23, said that the lattice work on the rear of the house had been consumed, and that the fire had scorched theoutside of the house and had commenced to eat its way into the partitions when extinguished. He said that under the conditions, with a high wind blowing, the house which is situated on the top of Penns Hill would have been destroyed if the fire gained any headway despite the efforts of his department.

Christian Talleksen, the owner, testified that Swenson had admitted having set the fire and that he said he did it for fun. Some mention was also made of his being under the influence of liquor at the time.

The fire created much excitement in the neighborhood, and resulted in one of the occupants moving out a few days later.

QUINCY ATHLETES AT BROCKTON

Quincy athletes will be conspicuous in the track and field events at the Brockton fair on Thursday.

Joseph A. Phelan and Ralph Prout, running for the Filene A. A. are entered in the century dash and 440 yard run, the latter in the novice race. The former has been a consistent performer all season and is one of the fastest men in the state. It is probable that he will finish in a winning position. Ralph Prout has done but little running the past year. His condition is good, however, and on that account should acquit himself admirably.

James A. McLaughlin of West Quincy national junior hop, step and jump champion, who went 47 feet, 5 inches, at the junior events two weeks ago will be a competition in the running broad jump.

Frank Bruce and Peter Fruzetti of the Italian A. C. of this city are entered in the three-mile run. Bruce went to Italy two years ago to qualify for the Olympic team of that country and has done but little track work since his return. Fruzetti, although not a speed marvel is one of the strongest athletes starting in a distance race. He has been a frequent good finisher.

For the first time the city will be represented by a pole vaulter in the person of Harry Wessels, the chemist at the Bradley Fertilizer Works at North Weymouth. He makes his home here. Wessels was captain of the Trilby academy in 1912, and that year held the junior amateur championship in the vault. His best mark as far as is known is 12 feet. He is a former member of the New York A. C.

The Quincy Y. M. C. A. has entered a fast relay team which should take first place. The runners include Ralph Prout, Fred Kingsbury, Thomas Djerf, Allan Connors, Fay Phelan.

Watches and record medals are offered as the prizes and the event will be a strictly amateur one under the diction of the N. E. A. A. A. U.

ON THE ALLEYS

Lincoln of the Electricians caused an upset in the season's records of the Fore River league in the matches at the Coliseum Monday evening when he smashed the single and three string marks in a fine exhibition. He jumped Thomas Djerf's record single of 123 by one pin and set the record total of 324. His strings were 124, 114 and 86.

For the first time this season several men trippled, Dubois with a single of 113 to help him. Tirrell was runner up to Lincoln, opening with 109 and 114. His 97 in the last string cost him the record total. The team single high figures are now 500.

The Electricians in pushing the Hull Draftsmen to the wall got the first team total of more than 1400. Smith was their only man to drop below a century mark in three strings. Their 4 to 0 win over their opponents was the decisive of the matches to date.

DEMAND FOR BOOSTER PAPERS

That the Booster Campaign in Quincy is attracting the attention of townspeople and former residents and others is shown by the following letter received by the Daily Ledger. It is only one of the many kind words that reach the editor:

203 Main St.,
Ossining, N. Y., Sept. 24, 1914

Editor Daily Ledger:

My good friend L. A. Chapin has just sent me some copies of the Ledger containing a description of the "booming" of Quincy, and it has interested me so much I wish you would send me copies from Sept. 1 to Sept. 15 inclusive, for which I enclose 25 cents in stamps.

Greetings to all my friends and neighbors in dear old Quincy. I came away in such a hurry I had no time to see half of those I wished to.

To Curtail Cotton Crop

Washington, Sept. 29.—Committees were selected at a conference here to devise a plan for curtailment of the cotton crop next year because of the amount of the 1914 crop remaining on hand through the closing of the European market by the war.

More Banks on Blacklist

Washington, Sept. 29.—Treasury department officials completed a second "blacklist" of banks accused of "hoarding" reserves and charging excessive interest rates.

ENTIRE ACTIVE ARMY MOVING

Russians Plan to Enter Berlin by First of January

CONTROL CARPATHIAN PASSES

Czar's Troops Block Way of Hungarian Army That May Try to Flank Them In Galicia, Which They Claim to Have Already Entered—Austrians on the Retreat

Petrograd, Sept. 29.—The significant announcement was made at the war office that the Russian armies which are operating in Galicia now control all of the six passes which penetrate the Carpathian mountains. In addition, Russian troops are in force in the towns of Sztarna and Uzsok, having gone south from Lemberg and followed the rivers Oprit and Nagy-Ag.

This movement has for its object the heading off of Hungarian reinforcements which may be proceeding north in the hope of gaining Galicia through the Carpathian passes and attempting a flank attack on the main Russian armies.

The Russians are in force at Tarnow, fifty miles from Cracow on the main line of the railway. Although they are unable to move with the great speed shown in the earlier days of the Galician operations, because of the swollen rivers and marshy condition of the territory through which the army is advancing, the Russian forces are declared to be making steady progress.

Russians are moving steadily forward in four separate movements. The bombardment of Przemysl continues, with one of the main forts already reported as occupied by the Russians. It is stated that the Russians have again taken a number of guns and that the Cosascks are cutting to pieces the rear guard of the retreating Austrians.

The Germans are reported gathering in force in the territory between the Warta river and a line running north and south between Posen and Breslau.

It is officially announced that a great battle has apparently commenced between the Germans and the Russians along the line of the railroad just inside of the East Prussian frontier. The Russian army is being heavily reinforced. Alternate sleet and rain falls make speedy movements of troops almost impossible.

While necessarily all plans are closely guarded, the declaration is freely made at Petrograd that the Russians will have entered Berlin by the first of January next. The entire Russian active army is being moved. That part not required for the present operations is being placed in strategic locations where it can be used to fill the gaps in the active ranks as needed.

The following official communication has been received from the staff of Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian forces in the field:

"An engagement near Sepotskin, on the Nieman river in Russian Poland, and Druseniki came to an end with the retreat of the Germans.

"The enemy has approached Ossowetz from the north and has begun the bombardment of the fortress.

"In Galicia we have occupied Dembica, on the railroad, sixty-five miles east of Cracow and between Rzeszow and Tarnow.

"A numerous column of the enemy is retreating from Przemysl in the direction of Sanok, thirty-eight miles southeast of Jaroslav. In their flight they abandoned artillery and automobile transports.

"At Colonjok we defeated a detachment of the enemy and captured his artillery and many prisoners. Continuing the pursuit, we entered Hungary."

ALBANIA'S NEW RULER

Son of Abdul Hamid Is Chosen to Ascend Throne

Rome, Sept. 29.—A message from Durazzo, Albania, announces that the Albanian senate has elected Prince Burhan-Eddin, son of the former Sultan Abdul Hamid, Prince of Albania, in succession to Prince William of Wied, who left his kingdom and subsequently renounced his throne.

The correspondent adds that Essad Pasha has arrived at Dibra and declares his intention of proceeding to Durazzo at the head of 10,000 men.

CARMAN REQUEST DENIED

Indicted Woman Cannot Examine Grand Jury Testimony

Mineola, L. I., Sept. 29.—Justice Kelby denied the application made by Mrs. Florence Carman to examine the testimony given recently before the grand jury which resulted in her indictment for murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey.

Mrs. Carman's counsel claims the indictment had been found upon improper and insufficient evidence.

Unhappy Marriages.

The reason why so few marriages are happy is because young ladies spend their time in making nets and not in making cages.—Jonathan Swift.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

LIPPINCOTT'S—Vacation days are in full retreat, the Kiddies have mobilized and are laying siege to the fortress Education, and the Grown-ups are now entering vigorously upon a fresh campaign, the objects of which are to earn a livelihood and to get some fun out of life. In the latter Lippincott's will prove of inestimable assistance.

The complete novel this month is extra long and extra good. "The Rose-Garden Husband" is its title, and the author is Margaret Widdemer, a young writer who seems destined to do big things. The plot of the story is daring and brand-new, yet entirely logical; and the characters are drawn with commendable fidelity. When the story is brought out in book-form, as it will be later, it will be pretty sure to enter the "best-seller" class at a bound. The heroine is an ingenuous young librarian, who becomes the wife of a supposedly dying man, under the strangest imaginable circumstances.

AMERICAN MAGAZINE—In the October American Magazine appears a thrilling letter from an American contributor now in Europe entitled "Pity the Women of Europe," in which the point is graphically made that in war time the men get some thrill out of the adventure and the new experience, but the women are left at home to suffer alone and to make the struggle to feed their children, with poverty and high prices staring them in the face.

In the same issue announcement is made of a new series of articles by Ida M. Tarbell, "The Golden Rule in Business; How it Pays in Dollars and Cents, Personal Satisfaction and Human Happiness." Ray Stannard Baker writes entertainingly of a United States representative from California, who is the philosopher of Congress. Walter Prichard Eaton, the theatrical critic, discusses a new epoch in the movies. "Jerry" Travers, four times amateur golf champion of the United States, tells how to get back on your game.

Fiction is contributed by Maravene Thompson, Marjorie Benton Cooke, Philip Curtis and others, and the Interesting People Department contains five short articles about men and women in various parts of the country who are doing unusual things.

THE COUNTRYSIDE—The development of Surburban Life into "The Countryside Magazine and Suburban Life" is announced in the October issue, a greatly enlarged number of striking makeup. The association of Dr. L. H. Bailey, for the past ten years Director of the College of Agriculture at Cornell and Chairman of President Roosevelt's Country Life Commission, with the Countryside Magazine as contributing editor is also announced in the same issue, for which Dr. Bailey writes an interesting foreword, "The Countryside Outlook." The publisher states, in telling of the broadened field of the magazine:

"The great vital questions of the next ten years will be those which have to do with the open country; the development of rural communities into suburbs; the intensive cultivation of the ten-acre farm, owned perhaps by the city business-man; the conservation of natural resources; reconstruction of the social life of individual communities; in a word, the many problems which have to do primarily with the land and the human interests identified with it.

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION—One of the special features of the October Woman's Home Companion is a call to American women to support American industries. The idea is that in the past American women have preferred imported goods an dthat in the present crisis they have a splendid chance to show real patriotism by supporting our American industries. The author of the article is Ida M. Tarbell.

Another special war feature of great interest is a French woman's personal recollections of the siege of Paris at the close of the Franco-Prussian war.

The new dances are also described with illustrations in color by Troy Kinney;

The fashion department conducted by Grace Margaret Gould, fashion editor of the Woman's Home Companion, is filled with the latest news and suggestions, beautifully illustrated and admirably adapted to the practical needs of women.

Fiction of singular interest and power is contributed by Grace S. Richmond, Mary Heaton Vorse, Margarita Spalding Gerry, Fannie Heaslip Lea, Kathleen Norris, and Temple Bailey.

THE ENGINEERING MAGAZINE—In the October issue of the Engineering Magazine the leading position is given to an article, by Alex. Del Mar, discussing the probable price consequences of the European War. In a similar article published in the same journal a year ago, the present author gave a critical forecast of future contrast prices. Important alterations in money, credit, exchanges, commerce, taxation, and the cost of living have been caused by the war of the great nations, and these factors must be considered by engineers and contractors in future negotiations. In a highly illustrated article, Rollin W. Hutchinson, Jr., describes with admirable clarity and brevity how the Great Powers have motorized their military operations; he gives facts and figures of the subsidies established, showing the kind of vehicle prescribed and the number secured. The publishers promise a later article taking up the transportation by motor of artillery, supplies, men, and aeroplanes, the ambulance service and wireless equipment.

MASONIC LECTURES.

A series of lectures on Masonry has been arranged to be given in Ionic Hall, Masonic Temple, Boston. The first in the course will be by the Grand Master on Thursday evening of this week, his subject being "The establishment and early history of Masonry in America." Other lectures in the course to be given by Wor. Roscoe Pound, LL. D. Professor of equity in the Harvard Law school, will be as follows:— Oct. 8, Preston; Oct. 15, Krause; Oct. 22, Oliver; Oct. 29, Pike; Nov. 5, "A twentieth century Masonic philosophy." On Nov. 10, Wor. Frederick W. Hamilton, D. D., LL. D., will lecture on "The true history of the suppression of the Templars—I" and on Nov. 19, "The true history of the Templars—II." On Thursday evening Dec. 3, there will be a question box conducted by the Grand Master.

TRUE ECONOMY.

With practically all Europe in a tangle the price of leather will increase, so a person has to use good judgment in order to economize. It would seem much cheaper to have our old shoes repaired instead of relegating them to the waste-pile. I find for myself that Edmonston's is a good place for shoe repairing, in fact, he made my shoes look like new, one thing stood out prominently, and that was I saved the price of a new pair, so you see that was true economy, indeed.

MISS MICHAUD UNDER ARREST

Maine Woman Held at Boston as Fugitive From Justice

MAKES IMPORTANT ADMISSION

Was With Mildred Sullivan, For Whom Wide Search Is Being Conducted, Five Days After Girl's Disappearance—Doctor and Pelletier Sisters Held In Heavy Bonds

Boston, Sept. 29.—The fourth arrest in connection with the mysterious disappearance of Mildred Sullivan, the Presque Isle, Me., girl, came last night, when Miss Catherine Michaud, who gives her home as Fort Kent, Me., was taken in custody from an Acton Centre farmhouse and locked up in Boston on the charge of being a fugitive from justice.

She is the woman who, according to the Maine authorities, was chiefly responsible for an operation performed on Miss Sullivan, and is believed to have been present during the operation, and is said to have superintended the moving of the sick girl.

She admitted to the police that she was with Miss Sullivan on the night of Sept. 7, five days after the girl's disappearance, and her presence with the missing young woman may be traced to a later date when she is observed by a man whose name is withheld by the Boston police.

This man, following the stories of Miss Michaud, informed the local police that he had seen a woman of her description and a girl of Miss Sullivan's description on a boat which plied between Bar Harbor and Rockland. He said the girl lay on a couch and was waited on by the woman.

Following his story and word of the arrest of Miss Michaud he was taken to the detention prison, where, although not positive in his identification, he was sufficiently impressed to ask to return later that he might see the woman under more favorable conditions. The date of his seeing the woman and girl was last Tuesday. He lost sight of them at Rockland when he left the boat.

The arrest of Miss Michaud, who is 24 years old, came after an automobile trip from Boston to Acton, where she was finally located in an Acton Centre farmhouse.

Miss Michaud left Boston less than twelve hours before Sergeant Irwin of the Boston police located her. Sunday night she had been warned of the arrest of the physician and the Pelletier sisters, and early yesterday morning she left the house on Appleton street, where she had been lodging. She went directly to Acton.

Her arrest, together with the arraignment of Dr. Lionel E. Dudley and Alice and Etta Pelletier, all of Presque Isle, on fugitive charges, were the developments of the day.

Dudley, who is alleged to have performed the illegal operation, and the Pelletier sisters, who are charged with being accessories, pleaded not guilty and were held in $2500 bonds each.

CARRANZA WILL QUIT

Prevailing Opinion In Latin-American Colony In Washington

Washington, Sept. 29.—Developments in the Mexican situation, especially the outcome of conferences between representatives of General Carranza and General Villa, are awaited with interest in official and diplomatic circles.

The prevailing opinion in the Latin-American colony is that Carranza will withdraw and further bloodshed will be avoided. President Wilson refused to comment on the situation, saying it was too indefinite and that his information was incomplete.

AFTER SACRIFICING ALL

Claflin Cannot Join In Reorganization of Big Corporation

New York, Sept. 29.—After giving his all to the creditors of his dry goods corporation, H. B. Claflin fought hard for a part in the reorganization scheme. The creditors' committee stated, however, that the former head of the corporation had been barred from any connection with the business.

Five trustees have been named to hold all the stock in the mercantile stores company and name its directors until all debts have been paid.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Fourteen horses owned by Mrs. Katherine A. Driscoll, who conducts a teaming business, were burned to death in a fire at Beverly, Mass.

Two men were badly injured, Anthony Vigloni probably fatally, when an explosion of gasolene wrecked a bicycle repair shop at Farmington, Me.

Alvin Kent of Orono, Me., 45, fell from a wagon loaded with wood and was killed.

Joseph E. Gay, 82, former president of the Mohawk and Wolverine copper companies, died at New York.

The first snow of the season fell at Quebec.

Charles H. Giggey, a painter, was electrocuted at Bangor, Me., by coming in contact with a feed wire.

TAX PAYERS AT CITY HALL

Assessors Find It Necessary to Seek Larger Office

If one thinks for a minute that there are no kickers over the tax bills his ideas would quickly have been dispelled had he visited City hall Monday morning. Instead of holding their meeting in their office as usual, the Assessors found that room much too small, and they adjourned to the committee room in the Council Chamber. Here there was a large crowd of men and women who one by one were admitted into the sacred presence of the Assessors, where they made their kick in due form.

Some have asked how the Assessors can abate taxes without money, which it is well known they have not got. There is a way, however, under the new law. That is the Assessors can abate any amount desired, but that amount must be included in the tax levy of the following year. So that if the assessors abate twenty thousand dollars of this year's taxes that amount must be put in the tax levy of 1915.

BOYS ARRESTED FOR BURGLARIES

Chief of Police Frank E. Burrell reached Quincy this morning with Ralph Faulkner and Wendell Nason, 15 years old Wollaston boys, who were held in Bangor, Me., in connection with small burglaries in that city. Both are wanted here for their alleged work in connection with the wholesale burglaries of houses in Wollaston last week. Because of their age the cases will receive the attention of Judge Avery at the juvenile session next Thursday.

Jem Pratt, motorman on the 12.15 car from Thomas's corner at midnight last night pulled Box 17, for a spectacular fire which wholly destroyed a barn, partly converted into a dwelling. The building is owned by Frank Blanchard and is a total loss. It was undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

A record attendance marked the opening meeting for the year of the Universalist Men's club, which was also the annual election of officers. Supper was served to forty-eight members and guests by Mrs. Frank H. Torrey, Miss Doris Torrey, Mrs. George Ames, Mrs. Manuel Page. The newly elected officers are: President S. G. Dunbar; 1st Vice President, A. W. Gardner; 2nd Vice President, R. O. Clark; Secretary, H. B. Stiles; Treasurer, E. D. Williams. As a token of esteem the club presented Rev. R. H. Dix, who has recently moved to his new pastorate at Newton, a fitted walrus hide travelling bag. S. G. Dunbar made the presentation speech and Mr. Dix responded feelingly.

THE MARKET BASKET.

These are sad days for the family market basket.

Many events seem to have conspired to bring about higher prices, and the careful housewife must be wide awake to make ends meet.

She cannot afford to purchase haphazard.

She must have the best available information of products and prices.

In these days the advertising columns of a live newspaper like the Daily Ledger are immensely valuable.

They are the public market place. They keep a woman informed to the greatest purchasing power of her dollar.

The woman who uses newspaper advertising for her guide is more apt to get 100 cents plus for her dollar than her neighbor who shops haphazard.

SHIPPING BILL MAY GO OVER

Congress in Favor of Pos'ponement to December

A Washington dispatch to the Herald under date of Sept. 28 says: There was little doubt in congressional circles tonight that the bill for government purchase of merchant ships would go over to the winter session without action. President Wilson in conferences with House leaders today, declared he still thought it advisable to pass the measure immediately and would urge that it be taken up. He was told, however, by both advocates and opponents of the project that there was a powerful sentiment against beginning consideration of the bill at this time.

Democratic Leader Underwood and Representative Alexander of Missouri chairman of the merchant marine committee, both favoring the measure, informed the President that a large number of the House members, restive over the prolonged session and anxious to get into their home districts, were strongly in favor of postponing action until next session. Representative Shirley of Kentucky and Page of North Carolina, opponents of the bill, spent nearly an hour urging the President to change his position.

The question was still open when the conferences ended, but everywhere except at the White House postponement was accepted as certain.

DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

Councillor Charles W. Guy is expected to make his first speech in his campaign for re-election when he joins hands with the extensive list of speakers at the meeting of the Democratic City Committee in Wilson hall this evevoning. Mr. Guy who seldom orates, usually depending on the judgment of the voters, will be armed with the endorsement of Governor Walsh and other prominent members of the party and will probably discuss his work of the past year.

Councillor Guy's election created consternation in the Republican ranks last year, for it brought about the defeat of Guy A. Ham. "Confusion of names," was the explanation of party leaders, but that cannot hold this year because Guy Adams Ham, the full name of his opponent will appear on the ballots. To name the winner of the two is about as difficult as solving the "Million Dollar Mystery."

Another speaker will be Hon. Richard Olney, 2nd, of Dedham, candidate for congress, who seeks to displace Col. Kincaide's chance of representing the district in Washington.

☞The only bad habit which Florence Shirley, the girl who plays the title part in "Along Came Ruth," has, is her fondness for ice cream cones. However she promises to reform this habit just as soon as the weather gets cold.

RUTH COMING TO QUINCY

Board of Trade to Present Comedy, "Along Came Ruth"

It is among the possibilities that "Along Came Ruth" will be presented at Kincalde's Theatre next Monday evening. Negotiations were opened on Monday, when it was learned that this was the last week of the comedy at the Plymouth Theatre, and that the company had an open date on Oct. 5. It is the only date possible, and the time is short to secure a favorable contract and properly announce the event.

It certainly will be an event if this grand production of Henry A. Savage comes from a theatre with the reputation of the Plymouth, where seats have been sold at $2 each, to Quincy. The expense will be fully a thousand dollars, but the Quincy Boad of Trade and Quincy Boosters believe it would be worth ten times that amount to Quincy to continue our boom which is already the talk of New England.

LATER—At noon President Hamilton of the Board of Trade telephoned to the Daily Ledger that a contract had been signed with the "Along Came Ruth" Company to give the production in Kincaide's Theatre, Quincy, on Monday evening, Oct. 5.

Here is an evidence that the Quincy Board of Trade is alive and hustling for Quincy. President Hamilton and others have been inspired by the clever acting of Miss Florence Shirley as Ruth Ambrose, and the boost lesson of the comedy.

While $2 is the price for orchestra seats at the Plymouth Theatre this week, the highest price in Quincy will be only $1.50, and the production will be exactly the same, with the same cast and the same scenery.

The Board of Trade hope to have the co-operation of all the Women's clubs of the city, the Improvement Association of the city, the Men's clubs the schools, and everybody to make the Quincy production a great event in the history of the city. It was on Sept. 15 that Quincy was rejuvenated. Keep up the good work and Boost Quincy.

QUINCY ATLANTIC

Mrs. Coyle Allan of Shrewsbury, is spending a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Harding of Botolph street.

The Memorial Minute Boys are attending the Brockton Fair today.

Miss Marion Letteney of Webster street, spent the week end with relatives in Everett.

Several committees, of the annual Christmas fair of the Memorial church, have already started work for their tables.

Mrs. G. Walter Bass of 517 Quincy Shore parkway died on Sunday in her 63d year. Mr. and Mrs. Bass came to Quincy from Hyde Park. Funeral services will be held Wednesday the body being taken to Forest Hills.

Good music has been secured for the annual reception on Wednesday evening of the Memorial church. The people of Quincy-Atlantic are invited, and it promises to be an enjoyable evening. Sociability is the keynote.

The revival meetings at the Atlantic Methodist church will begin Oct. and continue to Nov. 1.

The large attendance each Sunday at Squantum's new church is surprising and very gratifying. On Sunday Miss Jardine Davison sang two beautiful solos, and Miss Hazel Davison was the organist. The pastor spoke from the text found in Hebrew 12:2—"Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross."

Mrs. Georgianna Sanger, 83 years, of 95 Squantum street, was taken to the Quincy City Hospital, Sunday, in the police ambulance, suffering it is believed from a fractured hip. Mrs. Sanger retired Saturday night in good condition and on awakening Sunday morning was unable to leave her bed. Physicians ordered her removal to the hospital and although suffering great pain she exhibited wonderful nerve. As she was being put in the ambulance she said to the officers "I am doing all I can to keep quiet" and up to then she had uttered no complaint. She is resting comfortably.

Former special police officer Charles Nelson of Squantum, who was brutally assaulted at Neponset after midnight Saturday, is still on the dangerous list at the Boston City Hospital, but shows slight improvement this morning. His injuries, thought at first to be fatal, may not cause his death.

A batch of warrants, 16 in all, have been issued for men said to have been participants in the assault which resulted in a fractured skull and internal injuries for Nelson. Several have been served. The Boston police are incensed because the assault occurred and say it is the climax of a number of petty assaults which have been committed at Neponset in a manner so quietly that they have been unable to secure evidence strong enough to warrant the prosecution of the offenders.

William E. Williams of South Boston a letter carrier attached to the Atlantic station in Quincy, against whom the Federal grand jury found a true bill for detaining and delaying a letter, was arraigned before Judge Morton in the United States District court on Monday, entered a plea of not guilty, and his case has been set down for trial. The letter in question was found in Williams pocket by a little sister, who thinking her brother had overlooked its delivery, turned it over to the postmaster at South Boston.

HANCOCK ST. WIDENING

New Line Being Defined and Sidewalk Located

Work has been commenced getting the sidewalks on the east side of Hancock street, between School and Granite streets, ready for the widening and rebuilding of the street, active work upon which will be commenced at an early date, as it is the intention of the Commissioner to have the job completed this fall. The most of the widening of the street will be on the east side, commencing at the Daily Ledger building, although there will be a little change in the street line on the west side. Merchants along this side of the street are anxiously waiting for the sidewalk to be relaid. Although the appropriation for this work was made last year, it has been held up on account of the widening and rebuilding of the street. As soon as the curbing on the west side is set to the new grade and line the sidewalk will be rebuilt.

WEEKS AT NORFOLK CLUB

Ex-Mayor John O. Hall, Hon. John F. Merrill, Representative Edward J. Sandberg and President John L. Hamilton of the Board of Trade were among the 150 or more who attended the dinner of the Norfolk Republican club, which was held Monday noon at the American House, Boston.

Senator Weeks, who came on from Washington, especially for the dinner, was the principal speaker, and of course his remarks had to deal largely with the Rivers and Harbors bill now before congress. He said that he should try and put the appropriation of $400,000 for the Port of Boston in the bill, and if he did not succeed he should go into it.

He urged that every friend of his should do all in his power to elect Samuel McCall for Governor. He then went into and explained some of the failings of President Wilson's administration.

Other speakers at the dinner were former Congressman Samuel Powers, William H. Carter of Needham, councillor candidate Guy A. Ham, Charles L. Burrell, Republican candidate for Treasurer and Chairman Thurston of the Republican state committee.

BRIEFS

Harry Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Johnson of Adams Shore, whose left arm was amputated after it was shot off through the accidental discharge of a gun, remains on the dangerous list at the Quincy City Hospital but is resting comfortably.

AUTOMOBILE TAKES FIRE

The alarm from Box 123 at 1.14 this noon was for a fire in an automobile opposite the main entrance to Merrymount Park on Hancock street. The automobile was one owned by L. Grossman & Son. When the car took fire a telephone call was sent for the auto chemical and while waiting for this apparatus someone pulled in the alarm.

This same automobile took fire Monday afternoon in City Square near the fountain. Officer Murray was near at hand in case assistance was needed, but Mr. Grossman's son who was in charge of the auto managed to extinguish the fire although his engine got pretty well heated. This noon however the fire had got a better start and the need of a chemical stream was evident so the apparatus was telephoned for.

Assna was brought to Quincy by Sergt. Bishop and was arraigned in court. Through his counsel he entered a plea of guilty and was fined $30. It is understood that the parties took out a marriage license last July, but have never been married but probably will be before the day is out.

The mission station, erected by St. John's parish for the convenience of the Catholics of Quincy Point, is rapidly nearing completion and the dedicatory exercises will be held some time in October. Many of the members of the Parents Teachers' association of the Washington school are discussing the proposed location of the new school house in their district and councilmen are beseiged by those who are opposed to the choice of the committee.

REPUBLICANS NOT WANTED

Would Have to be More Than Human to Get by Lt. Gov. Barry

Lieut. Gov. Edward Barry and State Treasurer Frederick W. Mansfield were among the speakers at the open meeting of the Democratic City Committee in Wilson hall, Tuesday evening. Edward J. Parker presided and enthusiasm ran high.

Lieut. Gov. Barry said last year compromises were necessary to enact some legislation but this year there will be no excuse for appointing Republicans to office because they assisted in the passage of such bills. He said he opposed such appointments and if he ever held the office of governor the Republican who got by him would be something more than human but he added I am not in the driver's seat and recognize the driver. He declared a complete better than a partial victory, and he would rather sacrifice himself than see the head of the ticket lost to the party.

He lauded Councillor Guy and closed by saying the people want peace and serenity and tranquility and that the Wilson quality and the Bryant astuteness is going to benefit the country.

Treasurer Mansfield said the downfall of the Republican party occured when they took the government too far away from the people and Charles Burrill, the Republican candidate for treasurer is to attempt to have the constitution amended so the treasurer,-secretary of state and attorneys general will be appointed by the governor. He said the Progressives were Democrats and don't know it. He defended his over-the-counter sale of state bonds. He told how he opened the list of holders of taxable securities to the tax commissioner so they are now assessed and advocated the retiring of sinking funds by serial bonds. He said the issue of individual bonds had changed the opinion of many people and thought such an issue would be over-subscribed within a few years if the policy was continued.

Richard Olney 2nd, of Dedham said he supported the peaceful, watchful waiting policy of Wilson and made a strong personal appeal for Democratic support.

Charles W. Proctor of Randolph, candidate for the senate attacked Senator Langelier and said that Langelier had promised to vote for the anti-injuction bill presented by the American Federation of Labor and that he voted no. Mr. Proctor said he helped put it on the statute books while his opponent forget the rights of the working men, depending on the well oiled machine of Milton and Weymouth, the latter directed by the chief council for the New Haven railroad.

Michael OLeary, chairman of the state committee spoke on organization. He said monoply exists at the expense of the little fellow and the Democratic party has started to correct its evils and in another year should bring about reforms that will do it.

Representative Michael T. Sullivan said, to accomplish anything in the district it will be necessary to elect a Democratic senator after he had briefly outlined the fight he made in favor of depression.

Councilman Daniel Corcoran, who is directing his fight against the re-election of Representative Sandberg said his opponent was recorded against the anti-injunction bill, the half holiday for Laborers, the initiative and referendum, the Board of Health bill and other measures and that the only petition introduced during his term was one to compensate a Wollaston boat builder for property damages.

In teh face of that he charged Mr. Sandberg as being an individualist representative.

Councillor Guy was unable to be present because he was delayed in reaching the city after a visit to state institutions.

REPUBLICANS ARE ENTHUSIASTIC

An unusually enthusiastic meeting of the Republican City Committee was held at headquarters Tuesday evening with President John R. Richards presiding. The meeting was the usual one held at this time of the year, and plans were made relative to the coming State election. Everybody was enthusiastic over the prospects of a Republican victory in November, and a committee was appointed to arrange for a grand rally. The date cannot be definitely fixed.

But little mention was made of local affairs, as the committee will remain neutral until after the municipal caucuses, when they will get out and work for the election of the gentleman who shall have received the nomination. Committees on ways and means and other matters were also appointed.

JAPANESE TEA PARTY

St. Margarets Guild of Christ church opened its social season with a Japanese party in the parish house Tuesday evening. All the young ladies present wore Japanese costumes and the rooms were decorated with autumnal foliage and golden rod.

The program of the evening included games and dancing, music being furnished by Mrs. Effie L. Rhines. Refreshments were served.

The committee in charge was Miss Bertha Wallace, president; Miss Emily Moyle, Miss Olive Smith and Miss Eliza Ross.

ABDUCTION IS CHARGED

Automobile Party Held Up at Weymouth

There was considerable excitement in Weymouth Landing Tuesday evening when an alleged attempt at adduction of a pretty 20-year old Italian girl, living at the South End, Boston, by her rejected suitor and his alleged friends, when Weymouth officers held up an automobile containing the parties. The automobile containing the parties was first noticed near the Quincy-Weymouth line and attention was attracted to it by the cries of the girl for help. As the car attempted to pass through the Square without stopping, Louis Thomas jumped on the running board and pulling the emergency brake hard down stalled the engine. Inspector Thomas Fitzgerald and Officer Baker, who were in the square at the time, were on hand immediately, and as one of the men attempted to draw a revolver from his hip pocket it was knocked from his hand.

According the story told the Weymouth police by the girl, through an interpreter, she had twice refused the proffered offers of marriage of Frank Sabbo. The girl gave her name as Rosaria Mavilia of 10 Gloucester place. While Sabbo claims to live at 3 Wellington street, Cambridge.

Tuesday afternoon the girl says that she was employed at the Hanover street establishment of her brother. On the way home with another girl, on reaching the corner of Gloucester street the two girls separated. As the girl was about to turn into the street where she lived an automobile was drawn up against the curbing, and she was accosted by Sabbo, who asked her again to marry him, and she refused.

Before she could utter an outcry, she was seized and thrown into the waiting car, in which were three men, and an instant later the car disappeared along Harrison avenue, the girl struggling to get away and shouting for help. Her cries however were stifled by hands placed over her mouth.

When the Boston police appeared at her home to make inquiries, no alarm was felt by her people, and nothing more was thought of it un-

Soon the papers will stop featuring baseball, after which the fans will attend to minor matters of interest like the war news.

The European fighters consider that famous cathedrals and ancient art works make splendid targets for their gunners to practice on.

The railroads are talking of making a charge for transporting baggage. It is hoped they don't make any extra charge for smashing trunks.

Teachers should not expect the children to be punctual in getting to school. They might acquire the unpopular habit of getting into the theater or the church on time.

When the young people adjourn from the lighted parlor to the dark lawn, it is of course because their teachers told them to look up the new comet.

For the logic class; major premise, football is war; minor premise, war is hell; conclusion, football is hell.

An exchange rises to explain that the make-up man made a mistake when they printed a September wedding under the head "Enlisted for the war."

The only mistake that Andy Carnegie made in erecting his peace palace was in not having it fortified.

Ove in Europe they are bombarding hospitals. It has no military advantage, but the artillery men feel there is nothing like doing a thorough job.

The President went from Washington to Princeton to vote in the primary, but the ordinary man's time is so valuable that he can't afford to step around the corner to perform this duty.

The Interstate Commerce Commission might generously allow the railroads to advance passenger rates provided it was sure the state commissions will veto the raise.

With their exaggerated war headlines, some of our newspaper exchanges look almost as well as an auction poster for a bankrupt cross roads sale.

It is believed that the public would generally exercise the sacred and inalienable right of franchise at the primaries provided they were well paid for it.

A college sophomore naturally feels pretty good, but he should always condescend to recognize a professor.

RETAIL TRADE.

A writer in an exchange remarks that recently, when the Chicago papers stopped publication for three days, business at the city stores was practically at a standstill. Such stores reach the public through the advertising in the newspapers, and if the advertising stops, the business stops.

People do not stick in one rut in buying nowadays. If a merchant announces a bargain that looks good, 19 out of 20 people will break previous habits and look up that bargain, even if they never entered the store before. There is no such thing as loyalty to any particular store any more. The trade goes to the place that seems to be giving the best return for the money on some particular article.

Information about bargains circulates infinitely faster through the newspaper than any other way. Where a customer gets one tip through friends, there are a score that come through the newspaper advertising.

HOT PURSUIT OF KAISER'S FLEEING MEN

German Right Wing Reported to Have Been Broken

WHOLE BATTLE LINE IS LIKELY TO BE AFFECTED

British Press Bureau Allows Story to Go Forth, While Berlin Is Ominously Silent—Heavily Armored Motor Cars Rushed to Front by Allies, Who Will Not Permit Pursuit of Enemy to Flag—Thousands Upon Thousands of Germans Flee Through Belgium—Desperate Charges of Invaders Break Down Their Effectiveness—Retreat Is Reported to Have Become General and Tide of Invasion Rolls Toward Belgium

London, Sept. 30.—The German right wing has crumpled under the battering assaults of the allies. The broken columns of General von Kluck's army are in retreat, making for the defenses that have been prepared along the Sambre and Meuse rivers.

Within twenty-four hours, it is confidently predicted in London, the bending of the German right wing will have affected the whole battle line and the end of the week should see France cleared of invaders.

The news that has thrilled London into wilder rejoicings even than those which followed the repulse of the invaders at the Marne is not admitted in any of the official statements. But most significant is that the fact that when the story was submitted to the strict British censors, previous to its publication and its distribution to newspapers in the United States, no objection was made to its being made public.

Censorship Relaxes

The press bureau has within the last few days become distressingly laconic in its outgivings. It has frowned upon reports of many correspondents and has compelled many columns to be suppressed.

But suddenly it has allowed to go forth the most amazing story that has come over the wires since the march upon Paris was halted. Evidently there is sufficient fact behind the welcome tidings to allow the news to go forth.

Berlin maintains an ominous silence, the prelude that has thus far forecast every German setback.

Numerous details of the giving way of von Kluck's army have been coming into London. The news was hardly unexpected by those who read carefully the official French statement issued Tuesday afternoon. The allies, at Roye and Ribecourt, were clearly well within the German lines. The advance posts of the extreme German right wing in the west were at Lassigny, somewhat to the west of Roye and Ribecourt. Clearly enough the British and French were cutting their way into that marvellous defensive position that has been so stubbornly maintained.

Germans Pried Out of Trenches

But few suspected that the advance had gone far enough to pry out of their trenches the German army that had knocked at the gates of Paris and had been heavily reinforced within the last week.

Details received in London are few, but seem to bear all evidence of truth. It is reported that every motor car in northern France has been requisitioned by the government. The pursuit is not going to be allowed to flag as it did after the battle of the Marne, when the German right was for several hours almost completely demoralized. Numerous motor cars, heavily armored and armed with deadly mitrailleuses, have been rushed to the front to harry the retreat.

The rush of German troops into Belgium and the beginning there of hostilities on a great scale for the first time since the invaders passed southward into France confirms the belief that the retreat out of France has begun.

Belgians Repulsed by Germans

Early Tuesday it was reported that a strong column of French and British troops was marching through northern France, rapidly approaching the Belgian boundary. At the same time the Belgians, who had made a sortie out of Antwerp, redoubled their efforts, but they were repulsed at Alost by a force of Germans estimated to number 20,000 men.

Everywhere in western Belgium, along the lines of communications, the Germans are destroying cities and towns that might serve as bases for the allies if they were captured. Fully 150,000 Germans have passed through Brussels, it is said, since Monday. Most of these have been distributed, it is believed, along the railroads to hold back the threatened attack of the allied army pressing up from northern France.

The very magnitude of the operations adds to the impossibility of forming a correct conclusion as to the events that are shaping the course of future history. But in London the best informed military critics, scouting the rumors that the German intention to capture Antwerp are worthy of belief, are convinced that the German right wing has again met disaster.

Von Kluck's Surrender Unlikely

Some reports have gone so far as to state that General von Kluck offered to surrender his army if his men would be allowed to go back to Germany and promise not to take up arms again during the present war. Not much credence is given this rumor, for with the arrival of General von Boehm with reinforcements from Belgium, it is generally supposed that von Kluck will be able to retreat with less danger than he experienced during his retirement from Paris.

The battling Tuesday on the German right wing was desperate. The invaders seldom took the offensive, but they fought furiously against the almost constant charges of the allies. The British and French generals were apparently agreed that the German assaults, which had been carried on with a superhuman energy since Friday, had at last broken down the effectiveness of the invading soldiers. All along the line, against the armies of von Buelow, von Kluck and von Boehm, the charges of the allies battered. The gains were many, but always for slight distances.

At last the onrushing tide of the British smashed once more into Peronne, the little city that has been so often taken and retaken during the terrific fighting of the last few weeks. This made it impossible for the strong German forces at Chaulnes to hold their ground. Further south the lines at Lassigny were driven back.

Retreat Becomes General

At last the retreat, which had been for hours evidenced only by short backward movements in widely separated places, became general. Once more the tide of the invasion rolled toward Belgium.

It is generally believed in London that the whole right wing, including the army of von Buelow as well as those of von Kluck and von Boehm, is marching northward.

In the centre, the strongest section of the German lines, the defense has not yet been bent back. But exhaustion has set in here as well as on the right. The wild and futile assaults of Monday, designed to draw off the pressure against the menaced right wing, were not repeated Tuesday.

Not even the German generals, careless as they have shown themselves of human lives, cared to risk another such suicidal charge as that sustained by the Prussian Guards. Over the devastated champagne country shells continued to fly, but little damage was done.

GERMAN CRUISER BUSY

Sinks Four British Steamers and Takes Collier In Indian Ocean

The British admiralty announces that the German cruiser Emden during the past few days has captured and sunk in the Indian ocean the British steamers Tumaric, King Lud, Riberia and Foyle, and captured the collier Bursk.

The crews of the above vessels were transferred to the steamer Gryfedale, which also was captured but later released in order to take the crews to Colombo.

The Emden has been operating in the Gulf of Bengal. She was reported recently at Madras, where she conducted a brief bombardment of that port, and later at Pondicherry.

EQUAL TO HALF OF EMPIRE

Vast Area of Lands Which Have Been Already Lost by Germany

Germany has lost territory more than half the size of the empire's area in Europe since the war began by the capture of her colonies.

The latest German colony against which military operations have proved successful is Kamerun, in West Africa. This territory is partly surrounded by British, French and Belgian possessions and has a population of only 1700 Germans in its 191 square miles. Its climate is deadly for whites.

The German colonies now occupied partly or wholly by the allies are: Kaiser Wilhelm's land, area 70,000 square miles; Togoland, 33,700 square miles; Samoan islands, 1000 square miles; Kamerun, 191, square miles, and Bismarck archipelago, 20,000 square miles; a total of 134,891 square miles.

The European area of the German empire is 208,780 square miles. Colonies 3½ times this size are now being invaded, or shortly will be.

IN FRONT OF ANTWERP

Guns of Germans Begin Shelling Defenses of Belgian City

The Germans have commenced their attack on the first line of defense of Antwerp, according to dispatches received by the Amsterdam papers. Moll, which is an important railway junction near the Dutch border, was occupied by the Germans, and the Germans, who again occupy Malines, began a bombardment of Lierre, directly in front of Antwerp. They also continued their bombardment of Forts Waehel and St. Catherine.

Lierre, according to a message to The Handelsblad, has been under shell fire since early Tuesday morning. The people at first hid in the cellars, but subsequently fled to Antwerp, being joined by fugitives from the surrounding villages. It is reported that many houses have been destroyed and some of the inhabitants killed and wounded. One shell fell on a hospital, killing nine persons.

CONVENT BADLY DAMAGED

Bomb-Dropping From German Airships Continues In Belgium

German Zeppelins continue their activity in northern Belgium. One dropped four bombs on the old city of Daynze and two on the equally historic cloth-making city of Thielt.

The bombs dropped on Deynze badly damaged the convent of St. Vincent de Paul, one of the oldest in Belgium.

Zeppelins have been reported at many points in Germany, and apparently they are being massed for offensive operations.

WHAT BERESFORD SAYS

Smashing and Crushing Blow Must Be Given the Kaiser

The first insight as to how far England is determined to go in the war against Germany is given in a speech of Lord Charles Beresford at a mass meeting in Leeds. He is quoted as saying:

"The war must be settled in Berlin and a smashing and a crushing blow must be given. We must, in the first place, think of Belgium. In the settlement it must be made impossible that German aspirations should be fulfilled.

"The great German fleet—every boat—must be sunk; the forts of Germany must be razed; Krupps must be blown to the winds; the Kiel canal must be handed over to Denmark, so that it would be useful for the peaceful pursuits of the world.

BOUND TO HELP BRITISH

Botha Appeals to Loyalty of People of South Africa

In the course of a speech addressed to 5000 people in the town of Pank, in the Transvaal, General Botha, premier of South Africa, emphasized the necessity of loyalty to the British empire.

Botha said he was animated through a sincere love of his people. There were only two courses open, first, loyalty and help, and second, disloyalty and treason. There was no middle course.

The German tortoise, Botha went on to say, had for once stuck its head too far out, and was in great danger of being trodden upon. He justified the exportation of South Africans to support the imperial government.

Washington, Sept. 30.—Mexican constitutionalists here have information, it is stated, upon which they base belief amounting to conviction that the Villa-Carranza split will be mended within forty-eight hours.

Retirement of Carranza as first chief and also as a potential candidate for president—a complete capitulation to Villa's demands—will be the solution, it is understood.

"There will be no war," said one member high in constitutionalist circles.

BRESLAU THE MAIN OBJECTIVE

Russian Scheme Plans Advance Into Germany

TO MASK CRACOW FORTRESS

Army Commanded by Grand Duke Nicholas Will Then Continue Advance Westward—Battle In Progress at Tarnow—Russian Victory Will Remove Last Obstacle to Invaders

Petrograd, Sept. 30.—It is now apparent that the movement through Galicia is the main offensive of the Russian army. It developed that Grand Duke Nicholas, the commander-in-chief, is with the forces there, which number more than 1,000,000 men.

The armies are proceeding along the parallel lines of railway and moving rapidly westward. With all of the six Carpathian passes occupied by Russian troops and with strong forces on the Hungarian plains just south of these points, all danger of a possible flanking movement has been avoided. Consequently there is now nothing to retard the invasion.

Cracow is not the objective of the army. Neither will there be any halt there to take the place by siege. Instead a strong army will be left there, similar to that now operating at Przemysl, and the main Russian forces will press on to the west with Breslau and the forts of which it is the key as the main objective.

It is understood the reinforcements brought from the main mobilization centres have been sent into Galicia to aid the movement there. The possession of all the railroads in Galicia by the Russians has been of material benefit. When Jaroslav was taken there fell into the hands of the Russians thirty engines and 1000 cars of every description. At various other points much other railroad equipment was secured.

It is apparent the Germans realize that the chief Russian movement is through Galicia. Already strong German forces have been reported in the western part of Galicia and they are frantically fortifying along the main line north and south of Cracow. The latter fortress also is held by Germans exclusively, the Austrian garrisons having been sent forward to join General von Auffenberg's army.

The northern Russian column is moving much more rapidly than the southern one. This is believed to indicate they expect the Austrian retreat, when it comes, to be toward the south, and the army moving in that direction will be able to cut off their retreat.

The northern column assaulted Tarnow and a pitched battle is now in progress there. The Austrians are putting up a strong resistance, but they are greatly outnumbered. With Tarnow in possession of the Russians, the last obstacle in the way of the siege of Cracow will have been removed.

The German army which advanced from Lyck is making a desperate effort to reduce Ossowetz, eighteen miles inside the Russian frontier. There is also severe fighting in the forest of Augustoff, but the Germans are declared to be unable to make any headway against General Rennenkampf's army, which is strongly intrenched and is remaining on the defensive.

Colonel Shumsky, military critic of the Bourse Gazette, comments on the success of the Russians in operating through the Carpathians as one of the most notable in military history.

"Despite the generally accepted idea," he says, "that Russian troops are unable to operate in the mountains, as shown in the Manchurian campaign, the Russians on this occasion proved that under able leadership they are able to conquer alike on the plains or in the mountains."

Referring to events on the river Niemen, Shumsky says: "It is essential to determine whether the Germans will be able to compel the Russians to refrain from the operations in the Carpathians in order to rush to the Niemen."

He believes the operations on the Niemen, even in the event of German success, of which he says there are very few indications, will not have decisive significance, while the Russian operations in Galicia and in the Carpathians will influence the whole course of the campaign.

ABDUCTION IS CHARGED

til the Boston police were notified that the party had been held up in Weymouth and they were being held.

When the car stopped, one of the men jumped out and made his escape, but Sabbo and two of the men in the car were placed under arrest.

The driver of the car, who said he was the owner, gave his name as Charles Rosetta, of 112 Prince street, Boston, and claimed to be ignorant of any abduction plot, declaring that his car had been rented by Sabbo, who had hired him to drive his party to Providence. The other man arrested gave his name as Fred Laterella, of 158 Salem street, Boston.

When taken to the police station, the girl told her story through an interpreter, but to an Italian fruit dealer who was called in, she said that she had been assaulted twice in the automobile, and that she had been threatened with death if she did not go with Sabbo and be married.

When the automobile was searched, a milk jar containing some candy was found. The candy had a peculiar smell, and the police are of the opinion that it had been drugged.

All of the parties were locked up and were arraigned in the district court at Quincy this morning.

The cases did not appear in the Quincy court this morning as anticipated, for the reason that the crime alleged was committed in Boston, and officers from that city visited Weymouth at 2 o'clock this morning and took the prisoners to Boston for arraignment.

FATE OF WOUNDED AND SLAIN IN WAR

Work of an Army Medical Staff In Battle.

HOW DEAD ARE REMOVED.

When Left Behind Noncombatants Bury Them—Modern Army Surgeon Bases His Equipment on Estimate That 10 Per Cent of the Soldiers Engaged Will Stop Bullets.

What becomes of the grievously wounded that are falling in the European war? And what becomes of the great heaps of the slain, piled five deep in long windrows? Are they all buried, or are many left to lie where they fell?

These questions are answered fully in "The War Manual" edition of the World's Work. And the following extracts are made in large part from it:

Every soldier of every army carries in a sealed tin box a first aid packet, consisting of a bandage, antiseptic gauze and adhesive plaster. A part of the training of the soldier is how to use these, and if the wound is slight and in an accessible place he may apply the dressing himself; if more severe, a comrade may apply it for him.

The wounded soldier, with or without first aid dressing, if he is able to walk, passes back to the rear to the field hospital, which is always more or less sheltered from the fire of the armies. If he is unable to walk he is carried back on a litter by the hospital corps. As soon as he can stand transportation he is passed on to the general hospital and thence in due time to the convalescent camp to recuperate.

The Zones of Losses.

The medical staff of an army is equipped upon the theory, based upon past experience, that 10 per cent will be killed or wounded in each battle. If the number of casualties is 18,000 the estimate is that fully 20 per cent, or 3,600, will be dead on the field; 8 per cent, or 1,440, will be so severely wounded that it will be inadvisable to move them; 40 per cent, or 7,200, will be able to walk, one-half of them to the station for the slightly wounded in the rear, the rest to the field hospital, and 32 per cent will require to be carried off the field.

In deciding upon his arrangements for a battle the chief surgeon bears in mind that the wounded will be distributed in "zones of losses." The usual proportion of wounded is 20 per cent up to 1,000 yards range; from 1,000 to 400 yards range, 60 per cent; in the final rush, 10 per cent; in pursuit, 10 per cent.

The field hospital is not pitched till the tactical situation develops and the point where the main attack is to be is made known. Then a site is chosen beyond the range of the enemy's fire, accessible to front and rear by road, yet off the route of march of advancing troops, convenient to wood and water if possible, near buildings which may be used for the overflow of wounded.

The chief surgeon has under him a corps of surgeons for amputating the limbs of the wounded and dressing wounds and a corps of litter bearers and ambulance men. Many acts of heroism that are not recorded in the annals of the battles are performed by the men of the hospital corps and of the Red Cross, who go out often in the face of terrific firing and gather up the wounded.

Where an army is intrenched or fighting in the cover of a wood or in any other protected place which it holds for a long period of continuous fighting the gravely wounded are gathered up as they fall by the litter bearers, assisted by the soldiers, and are passed back to the rear.

Burying the Dead.

When a fighting army is driven out of its position and the advancing enemy rushes over the field and on in pursuit the medical corps then has an opportunity to gather in the wounded left in the wake of the two armies, and often the medical corps of the two opposing armies work together upon the field, each carrying off its wounded. Often an armistice is taken so that the wounded may be picked up and the dead buried.

The last service rendered to the soldier by the medical staff is to see that those killed are promptly buried after the battle. There is no ceremony about it. It is all a matter of the cold, horrible business of war. One squad collects the dead in piles, another digs long, shallow trenches, and the bodies are packed in the trenches and covered with earth.

Often an army is driven from its position and must leave the dead behind. Then they are sometimes buried by the enemy which occupies the position. But more often, in the present war, the dead of both armies are left to be buried by the noncombatants.

Fifty Zeppelins Ready.

The London Times prints extracts from a letter of two American engineers who reached London from Roumania via Berlin. They visited the aviation stations in Germany and estimated that fifty Zeppelins and hundreds of aeroplanes were ready for action. There was immense activity in the construction of new air craft and the training of men.

same time to drink in the lesson of the comedy, which is to BOOST one's home town. If the Board of Trade can meet all expenses which aggregate about $1,000 they will be doubly pleased. It has been suggested that all stores of the city close Monday evening, and that everyone unite in boosting Quincy and the Board of Trade.

Large sales of tickets are reported at the box office, also by President Hamilton, Vice President Sedgwick Miss Huston, editor Prescott and others.

If ever a comedy was designed to capture New England it is the latest Henry W. Savage contribution to the world's gaiety, "Along Came Ruth." And the play is not one of the truly rural types of comedy which have funny, though exaggerated pictures of true born Yankees in the past. "Along Came Ruth" was written by Holman Day, the noted Maine author whose stories of New England have won him fame in the past.

That the merriment of Mr. Day's play is general in its appeal was proven b ythe hilarious career of the comedy at the Gaiety Theatre on Broadway last winter.

The same remarkable cast, which added to the play's popularity on Broadway and in Boston will be seen in the comedy when given in Quincy.

Many plays win successes by the charm and fascination that attaches to some unusual character in the story. "Along Came Ruth" is blessed with half a dozen original characters. And they are drawn with an artist's fidelity to life. There is Israel Putnam Hubbard who is proprietor of the furniture emporium of Oldport, Maine. Israel has a kind heart but a caustic tongue. He says sharp things in a sharp way, with a Yankee twist to them that brings a laugh and a wince at the same time.

Then there is Oscar Dunn, his slow but sure clerk, and Cap'n Nathan Dodge, who made his money before Oldport's decline as a seaport, but who declines to share in Oldport's misfortune. The widow Burnham who has a soft spot in her melting heart for Israel, and young Pliny Bangs, a brisk Lothario come out of the west, swell the list of comical but true-to-life characters which would be appreciated anywhere, but are sure to be doubly appreciated in New England. Above all there is Ruth, the unspoiled girl who comes to this little moss-grown town seeking her fortune and raises the fortunes of the whole community by her enterprise and optimism. It is seldom that such an inspiring idea comes to an author as "Along Came Ruth" and the success of the play was assured when this idea came to Holman Day.

CLUB BANQUET AT MILTON

Milton High Juniors Elect Girl President

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Rogers and family of Adams street are home from Waveland, Nantasket.

Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Hennigan of Bunton place, arrived home recently from Derby Line, Vt., where they have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. T. O. Chapman.

The Junior class of Milton High school is the first class for years to have a girl president. But the "Jolly Juniors" thought they must be different and broke the unwritten law, by electing Miss Dorothy Fuller to their highest office. Without a doubt Miss Fuller is able to fulfill the duties of her office as well as any boy, and the suffragettes in the school are glorying over her victory. Only one boy in the class holds an office, and it is doubtfull whether he will keep it. The other officers are: Vice president, Milton Reynolds; secretary, Caroline Cook; treasurer, Alma Jardine.

Mrs. Edmund Carleton of Granite avenue is now home from Scituate where she spent a few weeks with friends.

Great plans are being made by members of the Thursday Evening club for their annual banquet and business meeting to be held in Ellsworth Hall, Thursday evening. At 6 o'clock the banquet will take place and this will be followed by the election of officers and other business. At 8 o'clock an entertainment consisting of motion pictures will be held in the hall. This is for friends of the club members and a very large number of people is expected to attend.

The first gathering of ladies who are planning to do work to help the war sufferers in Europe was held Tuesday in Ellsworth hall. There was a very large attendance and some very helpful work was accomplished.

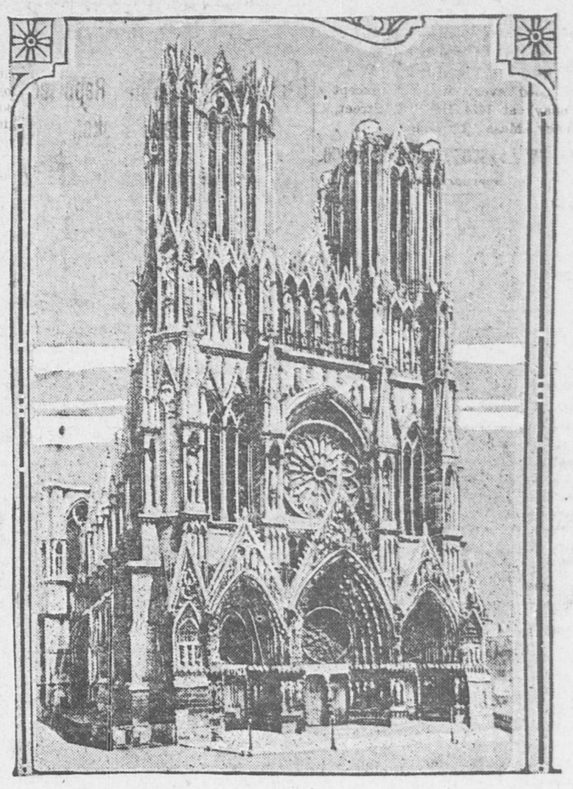
Famous Cathedral of Rheims May Be Restored After War.



Regarding the reported destruction of the famous cathedral of Rheims by the Germans the correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph sends this story of the situation at Rheims: "To the visitor Rheims, wreathed in smoke and echoing with the boom of cannonading, presents a forlorn and disconsolate sight. Around the cathedral hardly a house escaped damage. In front of the facade of the cathedral stands a statue of Joan of Arc. The figure is unscathed, but the horse and pedestal are chipped and seared by shells and the flames. At first sight the exterior of the cathedral does not appear to be much damaged, although the masonry is chipped, scarred and whitened by countless shrapnel bullets, while many carved figures and gargoyles have been broken off. In the doorway still stands the crippled beggar who has sought alms there for many years. He maintained his post throughout the bombardment, and, like a statue, he stands covered with dust, pebbles and glass. The man was unharmed. He was crippled in the war of 1870. An examination of the interior shows that the better part of fifty shells had found lodgment, but luckily, the range being very great, the solid stonework of the building had resisted the successive shocks. The priceless glass of the windows suffered the most. In the center of the vault the great candelabra which hung from the roof lie broken in the center of the floor amid a great mass of debris. The general impression is that the cathedral can be restored, although most of its priceless decorations are ruined."

LET US HOPE FOR RESULTS

City Clerk Crane, the Acting Mayor, and in fact all the Quincy Boosters who have seen "Along Came Ruth," are at the feet of Miss Ruth. When interviewed the morning after "Quincy Night" at the Plymouth Theatre, His Honor said:

"If I were asked to suggest another name for the play 'Along Came Ruth,' I should offer this: 'Three Chapters from the Gospel according to Saint Hustle.'

To me, it taught the doctrine of 'be up and doing' more clearly than any sermon I ever listened to.

"Of course, our city is not in the condition of Oldport before Ruth came, but even here there is great need of something or somebody to make us all work for the best interests of Quincy.

"What we need is more co-operation and less knocking. More pushing and less pulling.

"Let us hope that the present movement will bring that result about."

THE NEW-PORT OF MASSACHUSETTS

Anyone who will on a public stage give the City of Quincy such a friendly Boost as did Miss Ruth at the Plymouth Theatre on "Quincy Night," should receive a grand ovation when she comes to Quincy. "Along Came Ruth," will be at Kincaide's Theatre next Monday evening. Miss Ruth in her response to the Quincy floral gift said:

"My Quincy Friends:

"We welcome you to Old-port. I think Quincy should be called the New-port of Massachusetts.

"But then Quincy would not change its name, for everyone has heard of the two Quincy Presidents, the Quincy shipyard where battleships are built, and Quincy granite of which Bunker Hill Monument is built.

"Col. Prescott was the hero at Bunker Hill, but Quincy has its Col. Prescott and Col. Kincaide; and Joe Whiton; and Emery Crane who should be on the stage.

"Quincy has many attractions for me, and I may soon become one of your residents. My Quincy friends, I thank you.

"Success to the Quincy Ruth!"

MISS KOREY BOWLS 104

Two teams of bowlers of the gentler sex met at the Wardwell alleys Tuesday evening, and some singles that made the young men sit up and take notice were made with the ease of veterans.

Miss Korey who finished her exhibition with a single of 104, not only set a new women's record for this city, but just failed to equal the champion figure totaled by a Waltham girl in last winter's matches. Her performance was positively consistent, a marked improvement being shown each single until the century was passed. The new local champion throws a fairly speedy ball, directly for a 1-3 hit, and development and coaching should result in her causing an upset in the women's bowling circles.

The teams captained by Miss Brown defeated Miss Korey's team by 53 pins. The score:

MISS BROWN.

QUINCY HIGH SHOWS FORM

Newton However Wins by Score of 7--0

Newton High defeated Quincy High at Newton on Tuesday 7 to 0, and if it had not been for the fumbles of the Quincy men the victory would have been reversed and the local aggregation could have started the series of wins they appear to be capable of annexing.

Newton outweighed Quincy 10 pounds per man, but despite the fine game indicated by the score, the contest was poorly played. At times there were flashes of real football on the part of Quincy, one particular play being prominent and due to the clear thinking and decisive action of DiSenso, the "kid" end, who intercepted a forward pass and ran the ball down the field for 65 yards before he was downed within scoring distance of the goal.

Newton won the toss and elected to receive. Hamlin booted the ball and by straight playing Newton rushed Quincy's lighter team off its feet, and Wellman carried the ball over for a touchdown in the first five minutes of play. Harris kicked the goal.

The Quincy men then heeded the mobilization orders and each took his place in the apparently well oiled machine, but with the ball on the 20 yard line something happened, and they were held for downs, the only real chance they had of tieing the score.

Quincy held Newton for downs on four occasions, and worked the forward pass four times for good gains. Newton was unable to complete a forward failing in five attempts through the activity of the Quincy boys.

A place kick was unsuccessful and a drop kick was blocked, Newton getting the ball. Newton's backfield found the Quincy line very strong, and they frequently sifted through and stopped plays before the Newton backs started.

Capt. Larkin, the premier end, again proved his ability to carry the ball, and gained many yards for his team. Foy, Hamlin and Bogan, DiSenso and Simmons did excellent work for Quincy.

Hoar, right guard for Newton was put out of the game for lack of self control, having slugged Foy while the referee was looking.

About 75 Waltham players and students watched the game and cheered hard for Quincy.

The news that Quincy had at last shown some form and all that remained now was to correct the fumbling, was received at High school today with acclaim. Players and coaches were beseiged for details of the game, and deeper interest hasn't been exhibited by the student body in years.

Reggie Gay, leader of the cheerers, will have his hands filled with work directing the rehearsals of the rooters so they can take a prominent place on the side lines at the Quincy-Rindge game at Merrymount oval Friday afternoon.

FUMBLING—To make awkward attempts to do or find something; to play childishly.

The above definition is culled from an accepted authority for the benefit of the High school players.N. B.—Some are decidedly individual in their methods.

How about choosing a Ruth to teach some of the boys the value of proper tackling.

Horton Page, last year's quarterback at Quincy High school is being coached by Paul Withington for that position on the Harvard freshmen team.

Leon White is a candidate for a tackles place on the Dartmouth squad.

Crocker and Crosscup of the High school backfield will be in their positions Friday, having recovered from injuries.

BARONESS DE BAZUS.

Former Mrs. Frank Leslie Leaves $1,800,000 to the Woman's Suffrage Cause.

Suffrage circles were thrown into a flutter by the report that Baroness de Bazus, who was Mrs. Frank Leslie and who died on Sept. 18, left nine-tenths of her estate, estimated at $2,000,000, to the cause. Mrs. Carrie C. Catt, president of the International Woman Suffrage alliance, has been named to direct the expenditure.

BRAVES WIN THE PENNANT

They Clinch Championship Honors in the National League

By beating the Cubs while the Giants lost to the Pirates, the Braves won the National league pennant for 1914. This ends the fight, so far as first place and the league championship are concerned, and the Boston Nationals are, therefore, such to be on one side of the world's series.

The Braves have but nine more games to play and the Giants have only eight more to play. If the Braves lose all their remaining games and the Giants win all their remaining games, the Braves win the pennant by half a game.

SEARS LEFT $25,000,000

Mail Order King Amassed Fortune In Twenty-Four Years

Chicago, Sept. 30.—Richard W. Sears, founder of the Sears-Roebuck & Co., who died at his summer home near Waukesha, Wis., left a fortune estimated at $25,000,000.

Sears, according to business associates, was the originator of the mail order enterprise. He began his business making a purchase of a dozen watches. He was then 21 years old, and retired at the age of 45. He was 51 years old at his death.

EMPIRE STATE'S PRIMARY VOTE

Shows Sulzer to Have Been Beaten by Davenport

GLYNN CHOSEN BY DEMOCRATS

Whitman Has Substantial Plurality as Republican Candidate For Governor —Wadsworth and Gerard Lead In Senatorial Fight—Hennessy May Run Independently For Governor

New York, Sept. 30.—With the receipt of about two-thirds of the upstate vote and virtually all of the New York city returns, it appears that James W. Wadsworth, Jr., has won the Republican nomination for United States senator over William M. Calder, and Frank M. Davenport has defeated William Sulzer for the Progressive gubernatorial nomination.

Governor Glynn, District Attorney Whitman and Ambassador Gerard continue to add to their pluralities up-state for the Democratic gubernatorial, Republican gubernatorial and Democratic senatorial nominations, respectively.

With a majority of almost 100,000 already established over John A. Hennessy, it appears that the governor will finish probably 125,000 votes ahead of his opponent. Whitman's plurality probably will be between 50,000 and 75,000. It is believed that Gerard's plurality will exceed 75,000.

A persistent report is current that Hennessy will make an independent race for governor, despite his defeat by Glynn. Hennessy has not committed himself on this rumor, but his friends declared that it is not unlikely he will follow this course. By filing a petition containing the names of 6000 men who did not vote in Monday's primary before Oct. 18, Hennessy can get his name on the ballot.

Both Sulzer and Calder still are hopeful that they may nose out their opponents in the end.

INDORSES WILSON

New Hampshire Democratic Platform Covers Many Subjects

Concord, N. H., Sept. 30.—Nathaniel E. Martin presided over the Democratic state convention, held here. Speeches were made by the principal candidates nominated at the recent primary.

The platform endorsed the administration of Woodrow Wilson and pledged to him "our unwavering trust and devotion."

Fulfilment of platform pledges in nation and state was dwelt on at length in contrast with alleged Republican failures in that respect.

The platform declares for a single-headed state highway system; a factory inspection law; a weekly payment law; fifty-four-hour law; the initiative and referendum; liberal appropriations for fish and game, schools, and the department of agriculture; and for "genuine local option."

The platform said the railroads should be allowed necessary and reasonable revenue, "but no consideration should be given abnormal operating expenses and improvident losses and contracts."

DRY TIMES IN KENTUCKY

Only Fourteen of Hundred and Twenty Counties Vote For License

Louisville, Sept. 30.—Only fourteen of the 120 counties of Kentucky are in the "wet" column as the result of the local option election, in which nine more went "dry."

Counties voting to abolish the saloon were Carroll, Montgomery, Mason, Bell, Boone, Clark, Shelby, Bourbon and Scott. Three counties, Davies, McCracken and Christian, voted to retain bars.

Mineola, N. Y., Sept. 30.—Amos Veritzan and Rolof Peterson, two policemen of Rockville Centre, who, while on duty, broke into and robbed stores and residences in that town, were sentenced to nine and seven years respectively, in Sing Sing prison.

Both had entered pleas of guilty to the indictments against them. John Wicks, another of the accused policemen, was sentenced to a year in the penitentiary.

Hal Chase Is Not Popular With the Buffalo Public

Hal Chase, the stormy petrel of baseball, has been playing well with the Buffalo Federal league team, but he has failed to gain the good will of the fans, and the demand has been made that he be allowed to rest on the bench while another man circulates around first base. It looks like Chase's temperament is again interfering with his utility. Chase is a great first baseman—in fact, he has had few superiors in that difficult position. But he has always been prone to make spectacular plays and to be listless in his regular work. And he has never practiced team play. He belonged to the Hal Chase team instead of to the team which happened to be paying his salary. He has "jumped" organized baseball twice, going to the outlaw California league a few years before he quit Chicago to join the Federal organization. Chase did his best—and also his worst—work with the New York American league team of which he was manager at one time. His clash with George Stallings resulted in the dropping of Stallings from the management of the Yankees, where he had proved his value. He has since proved it as manager of the Boston Braves, while Chase has continued to scrap and sulk.

ON THE ALLEYS

An interesting situation developed in the Clan MacGregor league matches at the Coliseum alleys Tuesday night when the team of Hughs and McLean tied on their third single, and the latter won the string on the roll-off, taking all four points.

Raleigh of the winners got a single of 119, and was the only man of the evening to triple. He got 308. Several men got singles better than 100.

The Hughs-McLean match drew the attention of the large gallery of fans and rooters, and fans raised the roof while the latter attempted and failed to down their opponents. The score:

The Boy Next Door

Story of the Two Jims

By FRANK M. O'BRIEN

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Two little houses side by side in what the rest of the city called "Shantytown" held two boys who had known each other all their lives and who had until now lived those lives exactly the same.

From veriest brathood the red head of James Doherty and the black head of James Moore had bobbed along together.

They had dived from the same stringpiece on the docks, drunk from the same ink bottle at school, and each had honored the Great Telegraph company by entering its service on the same day.

But now their lives had come to a fork in the road and separated, for, though each lay with closed eyes in his respective little attic room in his respective little house, James the Red was only thinking, thinking hard, but James the Black was dying—dying hard.

In the abstraction caused by grief for his friend, however, James the Red had ceased to be useful to the messenger service of his employers.

There was nothing to do but loaf, and the Red could not stand off the fascination of sitting at his window watching the Black's window and listening for the scream that came at intervals from the sick boy.

When Jimmy went downstairs to supper his mother told him that Jimmy —the Black—was still alive.

At 8 o'clock James the Red found himself with enough courage to go to the Moore door. He wanted to see Jimmy, please.

"Nobody can see him, the doctor says," said Mrs. Moore.

As Jimmy turned to go Dr. Whiffer came out, very young and very important.

He ran quickly down the steps of the front stoop and started up the street.

James the Red went after him.

He wanted to know whether Jimmy would get well—whether something couldn't be done about the screaming.

But just as the questions were framed an obstacle came from a saloon doorway into the doctor's path, and the doctor, seeing no way to dodge, stood still.

"DRINK IT QUICK!" HE SAID.

"Good evening, Jameson," said Whiffer, knowing he was about to have alms wrung from him.

A loan, Jameson called it.

Had he not been the patron of the young doctor in the first days of his own decay as a practitioner, the days when Whiffer was struggling up and he was struggling down? Whiffer, not an ingrate, had a dollar to spare.

"Patient in the neighborhood?" asked Jameson, to show a dollar's worth of interest in his young friend.

"Boy with typhoid pneumonia," said Whiffer.

"I used to have lots of 'em," said Jameson. "They're usually tough jobs too."

"This is bad," replied Whiffer. "Tough youngster, but it's hard to beat the disease off when it has malnutrition on its side. A poor family like this can't afford to have a trained nurse to pump in the strychnine when the heart begins to go. If he holds out tonight he'll pull through, I think."

Jameson's eyes, pale and wet as they were, kindled reminiscently.

"I had to tackle a case in camp once when there wasn't any strychnine to use when the crisis came," he said, "and nothing else in the drug line was handy, either.

"I found a cure out of my own noodle," continued the rummy one. "When the man was fading and I had to do something, champagne was handy, and I poured about a quart of it into him. Well, I remember poking the fizz into the fellow at 4 o'clock in the morning and nobody about to dispute my judgment," he said as he shambled away.

James the Red stood still. What he had learned was discouraging.

He wandered the streets until 10 o'clock and then went home.

His mother had more news of the patient. Jimmy the Black was very weak, but his fever seemed to be going down, and he slept most of the time.

James the Red went to his room, made ready for bed, put out his light and went to sit at the window which looked upon the sickroom.

And so, watching and listening, he fell asleep. At last, dreaming he was weeping, he woke. One o'clock and silence!

Darkness, too, but for the lamp through the open window in the room of James the Black.

No movement was there, for the tired women, finding their boy asleep, had crept away to the rest they needed so much.

James the Red put on his shirt and his uniform, cap and all. From a corner he dragged a pair of old canvas shoes, rubber soled.

From a cigar box in a closet came a revolver which must have cost $1.20 when it was new and which had cost nothing on the happy day when young Mr. Doherty captured it in honorable combat.

It wouldn't shoot, and James the Red knew it, but he was going to see James the Black—peaceably if he could; if not, then by force of arms.

The surreptitious entrance appealed to him more than the loud and dramatic, hence the sneakers.

He left his own house without sound or challenge and from the yard surveyed the job to be done. It was simple.

Across the street was the house of Henkel, the painter, and Henkel had every style ladder but Jacob's. James the Red chose one twelve feet long.

He crept to the sidewalk and surveyed the street. No sound—therefore no cop!

He lugged the ladder to his own yard and, staggering, raised the end to the window where the light burned. The ladder, as if a conspirator, never creaked, and presently the Red poked his head into the dimly lighted room.

On the bed lay the wraith of his friend, hollow cheeked and white—a sight that made the Red's throat close.

He crept into the room, silent as a thief and feeling like one. Not until he had reached the head of the bed did he whisper:

"Jimmy!"

The sick boy's eyelids rose slowly as if the weight of death had been on them, and his eyes, dull of expression, moved toward the intruder.

"'Lo, Jim!" he gasped.

Then his eyes closed again as if the effort had been great.

"How d'ye feel?" Jim asked. The eyes slowly opened again.

"I'm all cool now," said Jimmy faintly. "I've been so hot, and now I feel sleepy—awfully sleepy."

The eyes closed again, but the boy in the bed spoke once more.

"Why do all the flowers have stars in them?" he asked dreamily.

James the Red had watched his own cousin die months before.

Out of the window he went and down the ladder into the street.

It was raining in earnest and the night was black.

James the Red stepped into it and was swallowed up.

An hour went by.

"Jimmy!"

The eyelids lifted weakly.

James the Red knelt on the floor, but not in prayer.

He had taken a blanket from the bed, and in its folds was something with which he struggled.

He twisted and wrenched and his face contorted in unison with his wriggling arms.

An explosion, muffled by the blanket, announced his triumph.

He held a glassful of foaming, jumping stuff to Jimmy's face.

"Drink it quick!" he said.

"I never take no booze," said James the Black. "I never will touch it."

"This ain't booze," said James the Red.

What was a lie to him now?

"Drink it!"

He put his arm around the Black's shoulders and, lifting his head, poured the stimulant between his lips.

The sick one made a face. He took the next dose in silence and, when the third was ready, took it with a little sigh.

"Jimmy," he whispered twenty minutes later, "feet gettin' warmer now. Give s'more medicine!"

But Jim, with the caution of a nurse, withheld the flagon. It was half empty, and he guessed that that would do.

The first of dawn showed through the window.

"I'm going, kid," said James the Red. But James the Black made no reply. He was snoring.

He was still snoring when Dr. Whiffer came at 5 o'clock and gave a verdict that made Mrs. Moore weep with joy.

In the complaint book of a police station was written, synchronously with the beginning of the Black's convalescence, an article from the pen of one Sergeant Mulqueen, famed for his terseness:

"An undersized young man in messenger boy's uniform rang the basement bell at the home of Henry Z. Carstairs, 29 Remington avenue, early this morning and, flourishing a pistol, held up the butler and forced him to give him a bottle of champagne. The butler says the fellow looked like a desperate criminal."

Newspapers of the day, in an effort to gild the rhetorical lily, added that Mr. Carstairs was a leading citizen who founded the Great Telegraph company and made a fortune thereby.

SASH BOWS IN FRONT.

So Fashion Decrees They Shall Be Tied This Season.

GREEN SILK GOWN.

For the fair maid of the debutante set an afternoon frock like the one pictured here is exceedingly dainty. In most cases it will be found becoming. The dress is of green pussy willow taffeta mottled with white. Style features of the gown are the kimono sleeves and the surplice front showing a vest of cream colored shadow lace. The sash of black satin tied in the front is fastened by a jet ornament. Plaited frills of the material adorn the lower part of the skirt.

WILLOW PATTERN PLATES.

Old Blue and White Design Popular For Decorative Purposes.

The old blue and white china that was so familiar to our grannies is high in favor nowadays, but as a treasured curiosity. Its soft deep blues or grays tone well with oak and add a delightful note of color to a girl's den. In modern reproductions it is far from being expensive.

The old fashioned china has a rime attached to it which runs thus:

Two little birds flying high,
Little vessels sailing by;
Chinese temple there it stands,
Seems to cover all the land.
Weeping willow bending o'er
Little bridges with three or four Orange trees with oranges on,
Palisading all along.

And the ancient Chinese romance told by the design is that of two long ago lovers who eloped from an angry father. He followed them over a bridge, and they took a boat. Still, he pursued, and rather than be separated the lovers turned themselves into two birds and flew away.

PEACH STAINS.

They May Usually Be Removed With Javelle Water.

Peaches should always be served with a dolly, as there is no fruit stain so difficult to remove. It will yield to renewed applications of javelle water, but the cloth is weakened unless great pains are used.

Javelle water, by the way, is a convenient article to keep in the house, but it should be under lock and key or high on a shelf out of reach of inquisitive children. It is simply a solution of choride of potash and if purchased under that name will cost less than when bought as javelle water.

Pour a little of the solution over a stain; then almost immediately immerse the garment in lukewarm water and rub well.

If the spot does not come out repeat the operation, letting it soak a moment longer in the solution.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Do not use strong soapsuds on paint, varnish, linoleum or oilcloth. Wash such a surface with tepid water and a little powdered borax. Going over it with a soft cloth wet with milk and water is beneficial.

If egg yolks are put in a jelly glass and covered with cold water they will remain fresh and soft for several days. Change the water gently each morning.

If ants should invade the house remember that they detest ground cloves and will not cross a white chalk line.

A wooden rack which can be scrubbed daily is a great protection to a porcelain sink.

An apple in the bread box keeps the contents moist, and a slice of bread in the cake box keeps cookies and cakes from becoming dry.

After sweeping matting go over it with a woolen cloth dipped in a solution of salt and water. This is far better and more lasting than using ammonia.

NYDIA'S LOVE SONG.

The wind and the beam loved the rose,
And the rose loved one.
For who recks the wind where it blows,
Or loves not the sun?

None knew where the humble wind stole.
Poor sport of the skies.
None dreamt that the wind had a soul
In its mournful sighs.

Oh, happy beam! How canst thou prove
That bright love of thine?
In thy light is the proof of thy love,
Thou hast but—to shine.

How its love can the wind reveal?
Unwelcome its sigh;
Mute—mute to its rose let it steal—
Its proof is—to die.
—Edward Bulwer-Lytton.

Hats On.

It is customary in Quito when a visitor takes off his hat upon entering a room to beg him to put it on again, and, in the absence of permission, leave is generally requested. This, it is said, arises from apprehension that cold will be taken by remaining uncovered.

ANOTHER BREAK JUST REPORTED

It has come to light that an attempt was made to enter the house of Mrs. Annie C. Chamberlin at 867 Hancock street the same afternoon that the three houses were entered on Standish avenue, that is on the afternoon of Sept. 23.

At the Chamberlin house entrance was attempted through the cellar, but the parties did not get any further. Two boys suspected of the breaks were seen coming from the yard.

It is also reported that one of these same boys rode on the milk wagon of the National Sailors Home a few days before and that while riding on the wagon the boy evidently got hold of $10 which the driver had in a book for after he had left, the money was missed.

It is reported that the boys suspected of the breaks are now in charge of the probation officer of the juvenile court at Dedham.

MANY VACANCIES IN CAUCUS VOTE

A canvass of the votes cast at the State primaries for ward committee in Ward Three shows that but two of the nine members to which the ward is entitled were elected. These two men are Joseph B. Grossman and Robert B. Craig. Stickers were used on the ballot for the other members, but the stickers not only had the cross printed on them which is illegal, but no address was given. No delegates to the State convention were elected for the same season.

In the case of the ward committee, a majority not having been elected, the vacancies on the committee for 1915 will under the law be filled by the committee of 1914.

The smart shower early this morning was as welcome as it was unexpected. The streets have been little more than a pile of dust for several weeks, owing to the prolonged dry spell, and a heavy rain that would have laid the dust would have ben more than welcome. The shower passed over soon after 7 oclock, although the sky soon clouded up again and it is possible that more rain may fall.

After war was declared nothing was heard from her until just before she sailed from England. Miss Lummis met with most courteous treatment and continued her studies without interruption. She thinks that many misunderstandings occurred because of Americans not being able to speak the German language. Miss Lummis has been teacher of German and French for a number of years at the Quincy Mansion school.

Work on the parish house of St. Chrysostom's church goes steadily forward. It is a pleasure to see the foundation grow. This work is being thoroughly well done. INJURED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Two autos came together at the corner of Randolph avenue and Centre street, Milton Tuesday night and five were injured. Mrs. John H. Dunigan was cut and bruised about the hands and face.

With him was Donald Field. Neither were hurt. The Dunigan car was tipped over and the occupants thrown to the street. Both machines were nearly wrecked.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

—Lack of tardy or absent marks has become one of the cardinal principles of school teaching and here is a record in that line that is the pride of numerous instructors in the Spokane, Wash., public schools. William J. and Aza E. Sutherlin graduated from the eighth grade of the Cooper school last June and are now in the North Central high school. They started to school together at the Irving building in Suokane and the boy has been neither absent nor tardy in eight years. His sister has not been tardy and missed but two days in that time, caused by the school physician sending her home on account of enlarged tonsils. William is 14 and his sister a year younger. They have kept step together in the same class all through the grades.

☞ Modesty, yet firmness in the carrying out of her ideas, are the elements that Ruth used that made Oldport, a thriving city in the play "Along Came Ruth." Quincy will profit from the comedy.

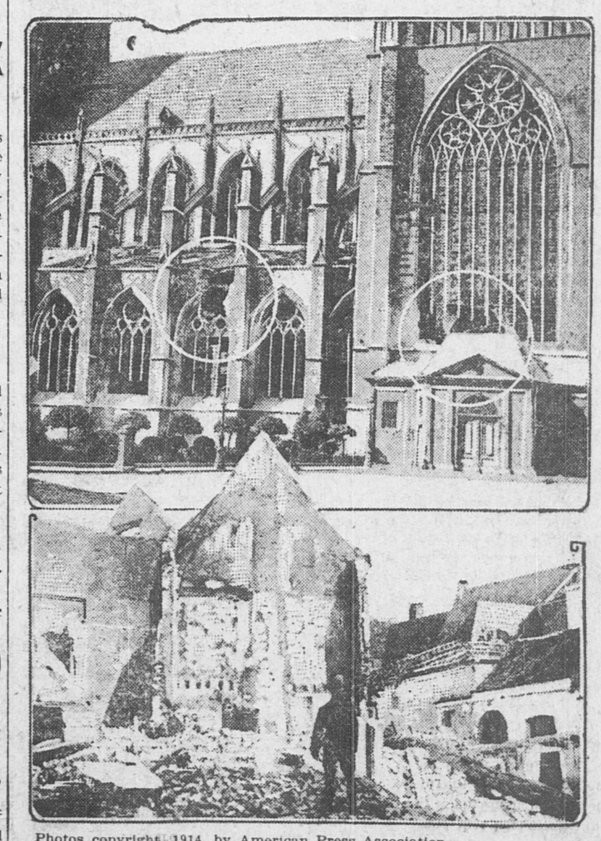
Ancient Town of Malines, Belgium, Shattered by Fierce German Attack.



Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

These pictures were taken at Malines, Belgium, and show some of the results of the German attack on the town. The Cathedral of St. Rombold was shot full of holes. The upper picture shows some of the damage, indicated within the white rings. On Aug. 27 the German artillery bombarded Malines for forty minutes. Many of the monuments were hit by shells and destroyed When the artillery had ceased firing the inhabitants of the town were advised to leave at once, and many of the refugees, including a number of priests in civilian dress, spent the night in the church at Duffel. Among the damaged buildings in addition to the cathedral are the Hotei de Ville, the Courts of Justice and the Church of St. Pierre. The Church of St. Pierre was totally destroyed. The town of Malines had a population of 55,000 inhabitants. Its history goes back a very long way. In 915 it came under the rule of the bishops of Liege, and it is still regarded as the ecclesiastical capital of Belgium. In 1332 it was purchased by the Count of Flanders. Malines is well known to all tourists for its ancient buildings, some of them of the utmost beauty and dignity. The Cathedral of St. Rombold is a cruciform Gothic church with a tower 324 feet in height. The projected height of the tower was 460 feet, but the designers had to reduce this to its present 324 feet.
